New Year's In Quebec

MONTREAL, Jan. 3.—Quebec, with a tobaggan slide higher than ever, and a new open air skating rink on Dufferen Terrace. Quebec has started her winter sports in earnest. It is doubtful whether any previous winter season saw so many American visitors as have registered at the Chaleau, or have announced their intention of coming in January, Boston, New York and Philadelphia are sending large contingents, one Philadelphia millionaire alone having reserved twelve rooms, while their are quite a few from Chicago and the Middle West. Officers from the 33rd took part in the New Year's Eve dance, so that the old grandfather clock which commanded the supper room, faced a lively scene yet the rememberance of the war kept a restraining influence over the festivities and made impossible, the thought of any boisterous revelry. One New Yorker expressed his sympathy by handing over $100 to the Patriotic Fund and said he would collect twenty more such subscriptions from his friends, on Wall street on his return. On the stroke of midnight announcing the New Year, Father Time emerged from the grandfather clock and was followed by a fairy attendance of a train of six pretty little children who threw roses at the delighted guests. Many prominent leaders in Quebec society attended the New Year's dinner.

Boy Drowned In St. Lawrence

BROCKVILLE, Dec. 31.—A very sad drowning accident occurred this afternoon about four o'clock, when James Ira, the six-year-old son of Mr. J. T. Beattie lost his life in the St. Lawrence River. Nothwithstanding the combined efforts of Dr. W. F. Jackson and Fire Chief Brady, who used the pulmotor, it was impossible to revive the boy.

RUSSIANS OFFENSIVE OF GREAT IMPORTANCE

Capture Heights Overlooking Czernowitz in New Drive to Counter Recent German Operations in Balkans

LARGE NUMBERS SPLENDIDLY EQUIPPED

Plan to Break Backbone of the Foe—To Effect Junction with Allies in Balkans—Roumania Favorable to Entente Allies

Russian Successes

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Russians have captured the heights northeast of Czernowitz, Bukowina, according to a despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd. Eight hundred and seventy prisoners fell into the hands of the Russians.

Important Drive

Russia's campaign in Bessarabia continues to be the most important visible war activity. From the Pripet to the Roumanian frontier, over a front of at least 300 miles, a huge Russian force with a great appearance of confidence is hurling sledge-hammer blows at the opposing force, which, according to all accounts, totals at least a million and a half men.

Well Prepared

Petrograd reports considerable successes in the early stages of the campaign, and despatches emphasize the excellent equipment, supplies and munitions which Russia laid up for this purpose during a period of comparative passivity.

London Pleased

Some London observers, speculating on the meaning of the Bessarabia move, hail it as one of the most ambitious strategic plans since the beginning of the hostilities, and predict that it will prove a colossal attempt to break the backbone of the Germanic allies' whole line across the Balkans.

Will Meet Allies in Balkans.

Thus one critic says:

"The plan is that Russia and the other allies, moving from different sides, shall meet in the Balkans and gain complete mastery of that peninsula If they succeed, Turkey will be subdued and the vitals of Austria-Hungary menaced."

So long as Russia keeps up her present activity just north of the Roumanian border, the attitude of Roumania will continue to grow in importance.

Roumania Favorable

LONDON, Jan. 3.—While the attitude of the Roumanian Government has been a matter of speculation, particularly since the invasion of Bulgaria by the Russians seems to have been held in abeyance for the moment, the attitude of the people as a whole is in no doubt. It is well known that the Conservative party is wholeheartedly with the Allies and that it represents the most progressive and enlightened section of public opinion.

No Doubt of Attitude

Mr. Take Jonescu, who is the leader of this party, has just issued to the Central News correspondent at Bucharest, a statement which leaves no doubt as to where the Conservatives stand with regard to participation in the war.

"I can assure you," he says, "that the Roumanian army will never march beside the Germans. If it was impossible when the Russians were retreating, still more is it impossible now when the Russians are strengthening their positions daily. Any statements to the contrary that you may hear are absolute falsehoods.

Regrets Inaction

"For my own part, I regret that Roumania did not enter the war at the same time as Bulgaria did, but I still hope, in common with the rest of my countrymen, and what I believe to be the immense majority of them, that Roumania will sooner or later participate in the war against the Germans."

This statement of the ex-premier of Roumania has been very well received in London and is considered to foreshadow important developments in Roumania whenever the position of the Russian armies has become more clearly established.

ANOTHER LINER NARROWLY ESCAPES

LONDON, Jan. 2.—How the Ellerman liner City of Marseilles escaped the fate of the Persia was told for the first time in despatches received here today from Bombay.

The City of Marseilles, which arrived at Bombay on December 8, reported that while in the Mediterranean she was pursued and fired upon by a submarine. She was not hit, and finally shook off her pursuer.

The attack occurred on the morning of November 23, when the City of Marseilles was off the Sardinian coast. A submarine some three and a half miles distant opened fire without warning. Fragments of the first shell scattered upon the deck of the liner.

The City of Marseilles worked up to her maximum speed, and when a second shot from the submarine barely missed her rudder she opened fire with her stern gun on the undersea boat.

The submarine continued firing, but failed to score a hit. Eight shots were fired by the City of Marseilles and soon after the last one the submarine was seen to list heavily to port. She disappeared shortly afterwards.

Japanese Fleet For Suez Canal

(Canadian Press Special)

TOKO, Jan. 3.—The crew of the Japanese freight steamer "Kenkokee Marse", which was sunk by a German submarine in the Mediterranean last Wednesday, has landed at Cannes, France. The announcement is made that a Japanese squadron will sail for the Suez Canal, presumably to protect Japanese shipping. Armored cruisers Kasuga, Zookiwa and Chilose have been selected

COL. J. L. BIGGAR RECEIVES PROMOTION

He Is Made Director-General of Transports And Supply

OTTAWA, Jan. 2.—(Special).—Col. J. Lyons Biggar has been promoted to the position of Director-General of Transports and Supply, in recognition of the unremitting energy and efficient work which he has shown since the outbreak of the war in looking after the multifarious duties of arranging for the transport and transport supplies of the Canadian troops. In Canada more than two hundred thousand troops have been moved by rail, while the ocean transport has involved the carrying of some 125,000 troops across the Atlantic and to Bermuda. In the whole work there has not been a single hitch of any importance, and only one life has been lost. That fatality was in the case of a soldier who fell off a train while en route to Valcartier. Col. Biggar is a brother of Mr. W. H. Biggar, Vice-President of the C.P.R., and of the late City Solicitor of Toronto, Mr. C. W. R. Biggar.

Ireland Not to Be Excepted

LONDON, Jan. 2.—According to an announcement made by the Press Association, Ireland is not to be excepted from the new compulsory recruiting bill.

HIS SENTIMENT

KINGSTON

The German prisoners at Fort Henry have just received 2,400 pounds of presents from the German and Austrian Prisoners' Relief Association, New York. The shipment contained sweaters, clothes of all kinds, mouth organs, cigars, tobacco and other things. These have all been distributed to the men interned in Fort Henry.

Lieut Stagg, who left Barriefield camp with a draft of the 59th battalion, has been sent to France from Shorncliffe, Eng.

Since the School of Cookery started to teach men how to cook for units there has been no complaints about the food supplied to the soldier. Complaints were common before the school taught men how to cook and serve properly the excellent ration served by the government. The next School of Military Cookery will open here on January 15th.

March 15th is the date set by Lt.-Col. Low and the officers of the 146th Battalion, when they expect to get the Frontenac Regiment complete. That will be 90 days from the 15 of December. Every effort will be put forth to have the battalion up to strength on the date set.

The 146th battalion has arranged a series of meetings which will take place as follows: Napanee, Jan. 4th; Arden, Jan. 5th; Tamworth, Jan. 10; Sharbot Lake, Jan. 11; Sydenham, Jan 12. All these meetings will be for recruiting purposes, following the big opening rally in the City Hall on Monday night, Jan. 3rd.

The prisoners at Fort Henry have been supplied with hockey sticks and pucks. These will be used on the new rink built recently. There will be many a fall on the ice before the Rhinelanders learn to play the Canadian game, but there would be many more falls if they got a few Canadians to teach them the game.

The Provisional School of Infantry gave an "At-Home" last night in the City Hall and the affair was one of the most brilliant successes of the military season in the city. There were fully 300 present in response to the invitations which had been sent out. The officers, with a few exceptions, were in khaki, whilst the ladies were dressed in the usual costume common to receptions, dances and the better class of social functions. Dancing commenced at nine o'clock. Arbuckle's orchestra furnishing the music. At twelve o'clock the dancers entered Ontario hall, where the tables were set for an excellent supper. This was in charge of Sergt. Tierney, caterer for the P.S.I., and it was served in the way in which Sergt. Tierney always serves a meal. The tables were beautifully decorated with a profusion of flowers and smilax, and the eatables were of the best. After supper the dancing was continued in the City Hall until day was almost breaking over Fort Henry. One of the unique features of the dance last night was the throwing of hundreds of red, white and blue ribbons over wires that had been stretched in all directions while the band played "Auld Land Syne," and the dancers glided in and out among the colored strands until they resembled so many gaudy flies in a network of finely spun gauze. The officers and committee who promoted the function of last night deserve much credit for the success of their undertaking.

ENEMY SUB. SINKS BIG BRITISH LINER

Over Three Hundred Lives Lost When Steamer Persia Sinks—Goes Down in Five Minutes After Being Torpedoed

ONE AMERICAN REPORTED TO BE A VICTIM

Only Four Boatloads Escape From Doomed Vessel—Worst Disaster Since Lusitania—A Terrible Toll For 1915

Official Announcement

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The British Admiralty announces that the Peninsular & Oriental Line steamship Persia, of 7,974 tons, which left London for Bombay on December [illegible] was torpedoed and sunk without warning by an enemy submarine on Thursday afternoon at one o'colck, off the Island of Crete. The vessel carried about 300 in her crew and 2[illegible] passengers, including eighty-six women, thirty children and three Americans. Mr. Robert McNeely, United States Consul at Aden; Mr. Dowd McNeely, his brother and Secretary, and Charles H. Grant of Boston, a salesman. Mr. McNeely and his brother are from Monroe, N.C., and the Aden post to which Mr. McNeely was bound was his first Consular position.

Four Boats Safe

As only four small boats escaped it is feared this culmination of the [illegible] of the incidents in 1915 by Teutonic submarines is only eclipsed in horror by the sinking of the Lusitania on May 7 when the sea murderers sent 1,198 persons including a hundred Americans, to a watery grave. The Persia's death list will reach a little over 300.

Nearly 160 Survivors Landed

Unofficial despatches from Carlo state that the British steamship Persia, sunk in the Mediterranean on Thursday, was torpepoed without warning and sank in five minutes. Between 150 and 160 survivors have been landed at Alexandria, Egypt, and it has been estimated that the total loss of life will be slightly over 300.

The survivors comprise the Chief Officer, Second Officer, seven engineers, twenty-seven seamen, sixty-three Lascars, and fifty-nine passengers.

Americans Drowned

Robert N. McNeely, American Consul at Aden, Arabia, is believed to have been drowned.

Reuter's Cairo correspondent makes the unreserved statement that Mr. McNeely lost his wife. Charles Grant of Boston was saved.

To Make Enquiry

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Secretary of State Lansing to-day cabled Arthur Garrels, American Consul at Alexandria, Egypt, to take depositions of all survivors of the British liner Persia, sunk in the Mediterranian with the loss of several American lives, to determine, if possible, whether it was destroyed by a torpedo or a mine.

To Await Facts

Two of the highest officials of the State Department said that there are "so many elements of doubt" in the case that it would be imprudent to make any statement. They are contenting themselves at present with determining the facts.

If the further investigation proves that the Persia was torpedoed without warning it was definitely indicated that the United States Government will suspend all further negotiations with Germany and Austria until satisfacton is given in the Persia case.

A Terrible Toll.

The list of ocean horrors for 1915 includes these vessels sunk by German or Austrian submarines:

Vessel, Nationality and Date.
The Falaba, British, March 28—Dead, 101.
The Lusitania, British, May 7—Dead 1,198.
The Arabic, British, August 19—Dead 39.
The Hesperian, British, September 6—Dead 32.
The Ancona, Italian, November 7—Dead 208.
The Yasaka Maru, Japanese, December 21.
The Ville de la Clotat, French, December 24—Dead 86.
Total dead, 1,659.

Wilson to Return Home

HOT SPRINGS, VIRGINA, Jan. 3.—President Wilson will cut short his honeymoon and return to Washington tonight because of new developments caused by the destruction of the steamship Persia.

FIGHTING PARSONS' BATTALION SUGGESTED

Sir Sam Thinks Thousand Would-Be Chaplains Might be Organized

OTTAWA, Jan. 2.—Major-General Sir Sam Hughes believes that the Church militant in Canada ought to furnish a fighting parsons' battalion. The applications for positions as chaplains in the overseas forces now total upwards of a thousand, says General Sir Sam, and he has put forward the suggestion that the hundreds of clergymen anxious to see service under the colors might be organized into a real fighting unit and carry "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon" into the firing line. If the clergymen who want to enlist accept the suggestion a fighting pastors' battalion will be organized.

Kingston Holds Civic Service

KINGSTON, Jan. 2.—A civic service of intercession was held in the City Hall this afternoon. Major Sutherland and the members of the City Council were in attendance. Rev. Dr. Macgillivray, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, presided, and an address was given by the Bishop of Kingston.

ANTI LOCAL OPTION MEETING

A mass meeting was held in Griffin's Opera House last night opposing Local Option in this city. A large crowd was present to hear the songs, music and speeches. Mr. J. F. Wills, K.C., was chairman of the meeting, and gave a short address. Hon. Harry Corby also spoke briefly. The principal speaker of the evening, Mr. James A. Livingston, of Grimsby, was unable to be present until a little after ten o'clock, owing to having filled another engagement the same day and the slippery roads made it difficult for an automobile to run at even fair speed.

Mr. Fred Burke sang "Take Me Back to Canada," and as an encore "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." "An Irish Lullaby," sang by Mr. Harold Barrett, proved a popular number and he responded to an encore.

The XVth Regimental Band was engaged for the evening and furnished excellent music.

MILITARY PROMOTION

The official Gazette of the 1st of January, 1916, contains the following promotion:—

49th Regiment (Hastings Rifles).—Major H. H. Alger is granted the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel under the provisions of K.R.&O., 1910, (C.M.) para. 216, 24 July, 1915.

15th Regiment (Argyll Light Infantry).—To be Major: Captain A. E. MacColl, 16th June, 1915.

THE ELECTION

Never in the City of Belleville was there more interest manifested in a municipal election than that of today. This was largely owing to the fact that Local Option was being voted upon. That the vote will be the largest ever polled in the city there is no doubt. The organization on both sides was excellent and in consequence voters were taken to the various polls in the city in large numbers.

Parker and was born at Camden East, on March 23, 1866. He was employed at the Mr. D. M. Water's Drug Store for many years and later went to Chicago and entered into business with his brother, F. J. Parker. He then went to Bayamon, Porto Rico and was engaged there up to the time of his death in the fruit farming business and owned one of the best farms in that locality.

Besides leaving his wife and two children the late Mr. Parker is survived by four brothers: Mr. T. Parker, of Tornoto; Sir Gilbert Parker, Bart, M. P., of London, England, Mr. Arthur Parker, of SanFrancisco, and one sister, Miss Josephine Parker, of Belleville. To the bereaved ones will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of many friends in this city.

Cruel War Says Ballin

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, Dec. 31.—Albert Ballin, director-general of the Hamburg-American Line, and now, at the special request of the Kaiser, in charge of the German railway system, contributed to the Berlin and Hamburg papers an article, in which he says:

"Christmas, 1915, found the peoples of Europe still embroiled in the most cruel and idiotic war the world has ever seen. They are immersed in a hopless struggle, in the sorrowful work of converting their beautiful old hemisphere into a mass of ruins, for the benefit of the world on the other side of the ocean and to the joy of the Yellow Race—the men who one day will be call upon to construct peace, but conceive it their noblest duty not only to banish war from our generation, but also to wipe out the European armaments' fever for decades to come.

"They will also have to seek guarantees that an economic war shall not follow this bloody war. The men who negotiate peace for Germany will see to it that we do not become the stepchildren of our Dear Lord and Master."

Herr Ballin's statement that Germany must seek guarantees that an economic war will not follow peace may have been called forth by a statement recently made by Walter Runciman, president of the British Board of Trade, urging the total ruin of German trade. Mr. Runciman declared in the House of Commons, on December 24, that Germany is beaten from a commercial standpoint, adding: "We must see to it that she does not recover."

He said the Board of Trade was taking steps to wrest the control of European oil fields from Germany and to wipe out German trade in England. Mr. Runciman asserted that the economic and commercial war between England and Germany must be fought to the finish even after armed hostilities have ceased.

Herr Ballin is one of the closest friends and most trusted advisors of the Kaiser and is recognized as the head of the great overseas industries of Germany.

Long Range Fire Opened on Nancy

PARIS, Jan. 3—Special—The French war office reports that a German long-range gun opened fire on Nancy Saturday. It threw about 10 projectiles on the town and its environs, killing two inhabitants and slightly wounding several others. The French batteries immediately shelled the gun.

French artillery have been particularly active in the Vosges, especially in the vicinity of Muhlbach. The usual artillery engagements are reported from other parts of the front.

SOME APRONS.

Three Hints For Christmas Presents Made In Advance.

Just now, before winter festivities get into full swing, is an excellent time for tucking away a few Christmas gifts in anticipation of the busy season ahead. Aprons, fancy ones and practical ones, make such acceptable gifts that one can always use at least three when apportioning the gifts at Christmas time. One woman always gives a special friend an apron at gift time, and the friend has come to regard this as an institution, ever awaiting with intense interest to see the latest variety of apron. There is a delightful little sewing apron in progress now for that same friend. It is made from two thicknesses of fine batiste. The outer piece is embroidered first. There are two buttonholed slits near the center front of the apron, leaving a panel effect which is elongated into a rounded bib, also buttonholed.

There is a wreathed medallion for an initial, with several little floral sprays to be worked in light pastel colors. After this much of the embroidery is done the outer piece is basted to a plain piece of the material, and the two are buttonholed together around the entire outside edge with the exception of the top. When a facing has been placed across the back of the apron through which can be run a ribbon and the bib is tacked in places on the plain foundation, there will be a deep pocketed sewing apron that is as practical as could be desired.

A separate lace edged pocket is a feature in a new sewing apron which is made of voile, is quite rounded and faced very plainly and demurely for at least four inches. The pocket is attached by lace edged ribbons to the band of the apron by snap fasteners or button and buttonhole.

A stole apron for a dear little kiddie's first day at school is too pretty not to mention. It is exactly the same back and front and slips over the head, tying on each side with dainty ribbons. A few tucks at the top give a pretty flare to the apron, which is rounded, lace edged and embroidered.

Children's School Luncheons

During recent years the problem of the proper feeding of school children has come to be recognized by educators as a very grave one. The child of school age must grow and must also work.

It is costly to educate a child, and the cost is largely wasted if the child is so improperly nourished as to be unfit for mental effort. Certainly a hungry child is in no condition to turn his undivided attention toward the work of the schoolroom.

Another important factor is play. There is a direct connection between the muscular activity involved in play and the food elements necessary for the building of a strong body.

As it has been proved in many instances, particularly in the large cities, that many children are actually hungry the greater portion of the time, it is obvious that such children are not receiving the full benefit from the money being spent for their education.

The question of feeding the child in the school is therefore receiving more and more consideration as time goes on, and in several instances where various methods have been tried the results have been very marked.

In one girls' school in New York city each child is given a cup of milk or cocoa during the morning, and at noon soup is sold by the school at 1 cent. Here also, as the year wanes, greater progress is noted.

This instance is not cited as an exceptional case, but as an example to show that when children are fed at school the results are apparent, even though the children may not actually be underfed in their homes.

In the schools for backward children the results of feeding in the school have been more apparent.

It is said that in France, where a system of serving meals to school children was most carefully worked out, the effect is to simplify the relief work, as no parent can bring a hungry child in order to gain sympathy.

As the question of food for school children is so important educationally, and at the same time is not entirely an educational problem, it offers an opportunity for co-operation between the educators, social organizations and parents.

The domestic science classes afford another good opportunity for the serving of nourishing food to the children throughout the school. The class prepares one hot dish daily, which is served with the cold luncheons brought from home. Each girl pays 10 cents a week, which pays for the food.

In the rural school a very simple equipment will answer all the purposes of cooking and serving. If the school is able to have a fireless cooker a soup or stew can be prepared at some one's home, taken to the school and kept hot until lunchtime. As in the rural districts many children live a long way from the school, it is almost a necessity that a hot dish be prepared for them.

In one rural school a plan was put into operation whereby a hot dish was served at a cost of 2 cents. Where the parent was not able to pay this amount the food was served free, or the parent was allowed to contribute vegetables or other farm products. Each week one of the larger girls was appointed as chef, with three smaller girls as assistants. The preparing of the lunch was completed before 9 o'clock in the morning and was put on the oil stove in the entry at the proper time. Each child brought a cup, plate, knife, fork, spoon and two napkins from home, one napkin being used as a tablecloth.

Not only did this plan work out well from a standpoint of proper nutrition for the children, but the lunch hour became a lesson in table manners. In this way many children who receive little training at home are enabled to see how other people behave at meals, and the tactful teacher can do a great deal of good in imparting lessons in table deportment.

There have been enough experiments made to prove the value of nutritious food served at the school, and it is doubtless but a question of a short time now before educators generally will come to see the responsibilities and opportunities lying dormant in this field. As the teacher is likely to be more or less overworked, too much should not be expected of her in this line, but if the parents will become interested in this subject much good can be accomplished. Clubwomen all over the country are beginning to realize that here is a work close at hand and in conjunction with the school officials can do a great deal toward insuring the proper amount of nutritious food for each child of school age, and thus help to bring up a generation of healthy bodies as well as trained minds, for without the one the attaining of the other is doubly hard.

His Cure.

A man who married a widow has invented a device to cure her of eternally praising her former husband. Whenever she begins to descant on his noble qualities, this ingenious No. 2 merely says, "Poor, dear man—how I do wish he had not died!"

Less Liquor Used Now.

For the first time in its history, the big distillery of Hiram Walker & Sons, Ltd., Walkerville, is closed for a longer period than is customary, and will not resume operations until next October at the earliest, according to the announcement made a few days ago by Franklin H. Walker, President of the company.

"We have always closed down from July to October," said Mr. Walker, "but this year we did not reopen in October as usual. We have a big surplus supply of liquor on hand, about 7,000,000 gallons, and there is not as much demand as formerly for the product, because of the war and other reasons. In view of this, our distillery will remain closed until next October at least. But we are taking care of our old employees, having provided other work for them."

The annual report of the Dominion Inland Revenue Department, just issued, bears out Mr. Walker's explanation that there is not now the demand of former years for liquor. The report shows per capita consumption of spirits in Canada has fallen to a lower level than in any period during the past five years. It indicates that Canadians per head consumed .872 gallons in 1915, as compared with 1.061 the previous year. Of beer the consumption was 6,071 gallons per capita, as compared with 7.2 gallons in 1914; of wines .095, against .124 in 1914.

Weatherwise Birds.

The seagull makes a splendid living barometer. If a covey of seagulls fly seaward early in the morning sailors and fishermen know that the day will be fine and the wind fair, but if the birds keep inland, though there be no haze hanging out toward the sea to denote unpleasant weather, interested folk know that the elements will be unfavorable.

WEDDING BELLS

GORMAN—LATTIMER

A pretty wedding took place on Saturday, New Year's Day, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Lattimer, Belleville, Ont., when their only sister, Mabel, was married to Mr. J. L. R. Gorman of Belleville. The home was prettily decorated with mums and ferns and the ceremony was performed by Rev. J. H. Locke of Toronto. The bride was given away by her brother and was unattended. Little Helen Lattimer, the bride's niece, was a pretty little flower girl, in a French dress and carried a basket of roses and lily of the valley. The bridal marches were played by Mrs. W. H. Lattimer. The wedding luncheon followed the ceremony and Mr. and Mrs. Gorman left for a trip west, the latter travelling in navy blue chiffon broadcloth with seal coat, ermine furs and hat to match.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

HOCKEY

The Kingston C. I. team and the Belleville Juniors clashed together on Friday evening, Dec. 31, the former team winning by the close score of 6—5. The line-up:

Belleville—Phillips, goal; Pemlock, l.d.; Holway, r.d.; G. Arnott, rover; L. Arnott, centre; Green, r.w.; Whalen, l.w.

K.C.I.—Walsh, goal; Carroll, l.d.; Ferguson, r.d.; Paul, rover; Stewart, centre; Toland, r.w.; Gratton, l.w.

Umpire—Lieut. B. Whitty.

1st. Period

Belleville secured the puck and carried the play into K.C.I.'s territory and after 15 minutes of play G. Arnot scored the first and last goal of the period for Belleville.

Belleville, 1—K. C. I., 0.

2nd Period

The K.C.I. came out with three new men on their team this period, Belleville playing their same men. This period the K.C.I.'s with the fresh men scored 2 goals during the first 10 minutes of play. Belleville then scored a goal, at this time the referee put the K.C.I.'s net minder off for 2 minutes for dropping to his knees, also the K.C.I.'s centre for disputing. Belleville took advantage of this shortage of men and scored 2 goals. At the last few minutes of play the K.C.I. forward line playing a good combination, made a rush and scored the last goal for that period.

Belleville, 4—K.C.I., 3.

3rd Period.

This period K.C.I. again changed their men and Belleville still played the same team.

A number of end to end rushes were made by the K.C.I. team, which resulted in their securing 2 goals. Here Ferguson, the light defence of the K. C. I.'s, was laid out and carried off the ice, though nothing seemed to strike him, and they finished the game with six men each, Belleville putting off G. Arnott.

Resuming the game Belleville evened the score. From now till the end of the game was the most exciting part, each team trying to score. The frequent rushes of the K.C.I.'s defence were stopped by Holway and Pemlock of the Belleville team. The K.C.I.'s forward line, securing the puck, played a combination game and scored the last goal, the result being a victory for the K.C.I.

Total score: K.C.I., 6—Belleville, 5.

Notes Of The Game

The Kingston goal keeper, in the second period, was easily the star of the team.

Holway is a good check and stops many a dangerous play but he hardly gets away quick enough when he gets the puck.

Ten men to seven doesn't give the seven men much of a chance.

Ernie Lang of this city has been appointed an official referee of the O. H. A. for the winter and will referee th intermediate hockey match at Cobourg to-night between Cobourg and Peterborough.

The Lindsay Belleville Junior game which was to have taken place at Lindsay tonight, has been postponed until Wednesday night, as there is no ice out there.

The silk top drawn up with a handsome silk cord will keep dust out of the interior

Good Cookies.

Soft Molasses Cookies—One cup of molasses, one and three-fourths teaspoonfuls of soda, one cup of sour milk, one-half cup of melted shortening, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, one teaspoonful of salt.

Put the soda with the molasses and beat thoroughly; add milk, shortening, ginger, salt, and flour. Only enough flour must be used to allow the mixture to drop easily from the spoon; so judgment must be exercised as to the quantity needed. Let the batter stand several hours in a cold place to chill thoroughly. Take one-half of mixture at a time on a lightly-floured board, and roll lightly to one-fourth of an inch thickness, shape with a round cutter first dipped in flour. Bake in a slightly floured or buttered pan.

Nut Goodies—Yolks of two eggs, one cup of brown sugar, one cup of chopped nut meat, whites of two eggs, six tablespoonfuls of flour, pinch of salt.

Beat yolks of eggs until thick and lemon colored; put in sugar gradually, then the nuts, the whites of eggs beaten stiff, and the flour and salt after sifting them together. Drop the batter from tip of spoon on a buttered pan, let the batter spread, and bake in a moderate oven.

Chocolate Cakes—Three eggs, one-fourth cupful of butter, one-half cupful of sugar, three squares of chocolate, one cup of stale bread crumbs, three tablespoonfuls of flour.

Beat eggs until light, then cream butter, add sugar and combine these with the eggs; then put in the chocolate (melted), bread crumbs and flour. Spread mixture in a shallow buttered pan and bake in a slow oven. Shape with a tiny biscuit cutter while warm, and when cold put two pieces together with a thin layer of icing. Cover tops with icing.

Sandlets—One-half cupful of butter, one cupful of sugar, one egg, one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, white of one egg, blanched almonds, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of cinnamon.

Cream the butter, add sugar gradually and egg well beaten; then put in flour with salt and baking powder sifted with it. Chill, and toss one-half of dough on a floured board and roll one-eighth inch thick. Shape with a square cutter, and brush over each cake with white of egg and sprinkle with cinnamon. Split the almonds and arrange three halves on top of each cake. Bake in a buttered pan and slow oven.

Food Combinations.

For dinner salads use only the simple green salads with French dressing.

Serve tomatoes in some form with veal.

Serve caper sauce only with mutton.

With roast lamb serve mashed potatoes, green peas, or string beans and mint sauce.

With roast chicken serve mashed potatoes, onions and a sour jelly.

Any vegetable harmonizes with beef.

With roast beef serve potatoes baked in the pan and a sweet watermelon or peach pickle.

With roast pork serve baked potatoes, a green vegetable and a sour apple sauce.

With broiled steak serve creamed potatoes and a crisp fried vegetable like egg plant.

With fricassed meats serve baked potatoes.

With roast meats serve potatoes mashed or roasted in the pan with the meat.

Serve potatoes plain boiled when new.

Intricacy of Shell Making.

SIGNALS FROM AIR CRAFT.

Soot Clouds, Mirror Flashes and Torch Bombs Are Used.

To an army commander the value of a military aeroplane is its power to locate hostile artillery and direct gunfire rather than its bomb dropping possibilities. Thus it is very necessary that a pilot several thousand feet in the air should be able to communicate with the headquarters staff on earth so that he may convey the necessary information for the guidance of gunners hurling shells at targets miles ahead which they cannot see.

A very ingenious method of signaling from an aeroplane is by means of soot clouds. An apparatus filled with lampblack rests near the hand of the aviator, and when he presses a lever some of this soot passes down a pipe and is discharged in a black cloud. The pipe is so delicately arranged that the clouds may be small or large. The operator can spell out the Morse telegraphic code in little clouds, and they can be read from the earth when the aviator is 4,000 feet high.

Another clever means of signaling from air craft is that carried out by means of lamps and mirrors. A lamp which has a flash of 10,000 candle power sends piercing rays of light through a tube fitted with powerful magnifying glasses. When a message is sent the operator directs his flasher in the required direction, presses a button, and a brilliant light flashes out, long or short, according to the pressure. The officers on earth receive the message and may send a reply in the same way, being provided with similar mirrors and lamps. The rays of light sent out are almost as bright as sunlight, so that they can be seen with the naked eye for a distance of four miles in the daytime and at night for a distance of eight miles.

When military aviators wish to drop a written communication to the earth without descending they utilize an ingenious bomb. This contains the document, and the projectile is weighted so that it falls sharp end first. As the end strikes the ground a trigger is released, which sets fire to a torch on top, and thus the location of the bomb is indicated day or night.

GRADED THE HASH.

High Cost of Living In the Early Days In California.

The high cost of living? Bless you, you don't know the first thing about high prices in these days. Compared with what Mark Twain, Horace Greeley and others used to pay for a square meal in California's early days, your eight course dinner at Astrobilt or Cherry's is really a cheap affair.

But all who frequented the famous old El Dorado hotel at Hangtown (now Placerville, Cal.) paid these prices, and gladly. Those were the palmy days of pioneer life, when the hash was graded in two classes—"low grade" and "18 carat." Here is the way the menu ran:

Soups.
Bean	$1.00
Oxtail (short)	1.50
Roast.
Beef, Mexican (prime cut)	1.50
Beef, Upalong	1.00
Beef, with one fair sized potato	1.25
Beef, tame, from the states	1.50

Midnight Conference.

Elsie's Mother (anxiously as Elsie comes upstairs at 12:10 a. m.)—Has Mr. Longmore said anything, Elsie? Elsie—Not yet, mamma. Elsie's Mother (a little impatiently)—What can be the matter with the man? Do you think he is afraid to propose? Elsie—Oh, no, mamma; he isn't afraid, but our house is so small that I think he feels a little delicate about asking to somewhere to live.

Evidences of Wisdom.

"What do you see in that woman?" growled her husband. "Why must you tag after her all the time?"

"I think I might learn much from her," retorted his wife.

"And why?"

"Well, for instance, she says that she once jilted you."

Province Aids Recruiting.

The Ontario Government has distributed $24,500 to the various military units of the Province at work recruiting for overseas service. According to Hon. W. H. Hearst about fifty units have participated, the division having been made after careful investigation and study of the situation by military men.

The total announced includes the $5,000 which Hon. Mr. Hearst on the recent recruiting tag day promised to contribute to the Citizens' Recruiting League Fund, the understanding being that this money will go to the Toronto military units.

The distribution just completed carried into effect the promise made on behalf of the Government by Hon. W. J. Hanna, several months ago at Massey Hall, when the Government also made known its intention of spending half a million dollars on machine guns. Unlike other funds provided for machine guns by municipal organizations the Ontario contribution is now being converted into guns, which will shortly be available.

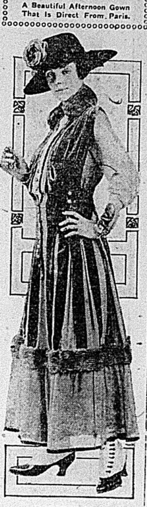
AN IMPORTED FROCK.

A Beautiful Afternoon Gown That Is Direct From Paris.



REAL ELEGANCE.

Velvet striped georgette crape in a midnight blue shade is used to fashion this frock. Please note how cleverly the velvet stripe has been arranged to form the bodice and part of the skirt, even the flare, which is cut off by a band of Russian squirrel and ends in a deep flounce of plain crape. This material furnishes the sleeves, which are cuffed with a patch of velvet stripe. The collar is of squirrel, while the vest is white georgette crape fastened with ball crochet buttons. With this gorgeous gown goes a midnight blue velvet hat of tall crown and wide brim that gives just the hint of a poke in front, while a huge pink rose accentuates the heavy ribbon band.

FALL HOUSECLEANING.

Suggestions That Will Make This Nightmare a Little Easier.

To clean wicker chairs wash with salt and water, then rub as dry as possible and place in the open air to finish drying.

To clean enamelled bathtubs rub with salt moistened with lemon juice. Then wash with hot water and soapsuds.

To clean marble basins make a paste of whiting and soft soap and apply it with a soft cloth. Rinse with cold water and rub dry.

To polish steel fenders, etc., after cleaning with emery paper sprinkle powdered bath brick on the surface and polish with a chamois leather.

To clean white paint wring a cloth out in hot water, then dip it in bran and gently rub the paint. Sponge off with cold water and polish with a white rag dipped in whiting.

To destroy moths in carpets or curtains spread a damp cloth over the part and iron till dry with a hot iron. The steam will destroy any eggs, and the moths will not attack the place again.

To clean brass cut a lemon in half, dip it in kitchen salt and rub over the brass till the stains disappear. Then rinse in warm water and polish with a duster dipped in powdered whiting.

Cloudy decanters can be cleaned with vinegar and salt. Put a handful of salt and half a cupful of vinegar in the decanter and shake well, then empty and rinse with warm water.

To clean oriental rugs first beat the rug thoroughly, then brush to remove all dirt. Rub over with a stiff brush dipped in warm soapsuds to which a little ammonia has been added and rub dry with a soft rag.

To clean linoleum rub well with soap, then wipe off with a flannel wrung out in hot water. Allow to get quite dry, then polish with any floor polish. After this treatment the linoleum will keep clean and bright for quite a long time.

Keep a lump of kitchen salt in the sink. It will dissolve slowly and keep the pipe clean and the sink fresh and wholesome.

Sprinkle carpets before sweeping with salt instead of tea leaves. It keeps the dust down more effectively, and the carpets look fresher and wear better, as salt prevents moths attacking them.

Oil stains can be removed from linen and cotton goods by rubbing the material on both sides with talcum powder. The powder should be left on for a few hours and then brushed off.

A Pretty Economy.

Instead of buying expensive jardinieres for your plants, paint the ordinary flowerpots and saucers with an oil paint to harmonize with the color scheme of the room. Pots painted a soft leaf green or chinese blues are very quaint and decorative.

ELECTIONS.

At five o'clock this afternoon the municipal fight will be over, and within a short time after the result of the contests will be known. A heavy vote has been polled to-day, and a fair voice of the electors will have been sounded. The result will no doubt be satisfactory to the majority of the citizens.

The Aldermen are already known, and it may not be premature to offer congratulations to Aldermen Woodley, Platt, Smith, St. Charles, Duckworth, Earle, Deacon, Parks, and Whalen; on the honor that has been conferred upon them by the city.

Someone is going to be disappointed in the Mayoralty contest, but whoever is elected, it is the duty of the citizens to aid him in every way they can in the discharge of his duties.

The local option contest is at an end, and if, as many supporters of the measure believe, it will carry, then the law-abiding people of the city should do their best to see that the law is strictly enforced, should it come into effect. If the measure is defeated, the Provincial License Commission will give their decision, when it will be the duty of all to uphold them in the enforcement of their orders, whatever they may be.

Well conducted hotels under the license law do not result in a flagrant abuse of intoxicating liquors, as does a poorly enforced local option by-law, and are not half so dangerous to the young of the city.

Whatever the result may be, let everyone do their best to uphold the decision of the people.

RIDEAU CLUB'S HONOR ROLL

The Rideau Club of Ottawa, in its Annual Report of 1915, calls attention to its "Roll of Honor," and points to the loss of members who were killed in the present war, and to the number of its members now on active service. Of these five officers were killed in action, namely:

Lt. Col. Farquhar, D.S.O.
Major T. H. Rivers-Bulkeley.
Captain Gerald Lees.
Captain Guy M. Drummond.
Captain D. O. C. Newton, M.V.O.

Few Clubs, we venture the opinion, can boast of a better showing of loyalty and devotion to country.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

It has been argued by some not too well informed Liberals that if Manitoba enfranchises women it will compel the Dominion Government to declare its policy upon the question. It is quite evident that those who thus argue do not know, or have forgotten, that the Liberals when in power repealed the Dominion Franchise Act, and passed an Act adopting the different Provincial Voters' Lists for Dominion elections; hence, if women have the franchise in Manitoba for Provincial purposes, the same right will remain with them to vote at elections for representatives in the Dominion Parliament, unless the Governor in Council were to disallow the Manitoba Franchise Act, which is not at all probable. Having worked under Provincial Franchise Acts since they became law, it is absurd to suppose that the Dominion Government would in any way interfere with any amendment made to the present Manitoba Franchise Act, having for its object the giving of the right to women to vote at Provincial and Dominion elections in that Province.

Have you voted yet?

It will probably keep most people busy remembering to write 1916.

Off to a new start—go steady.

Hard walking for an election day.

A Liberal paper, the Moose Jaw News, calls Bourassa a traitor, and demands to know what Premier Borden is going to do about his utterances. There was a time, not very long ago, when Bourassa Nationalism was declared, on highest authority, to be Laurier Liberalism—and Bourassa has not changed, though the times have, and so has Laurier.

Now to turn over those new leaves.

Now to submarine a few bad habits.

Why not keep a few of those new resolutions?

Advice is received that Dr. Livingstone, the African traveller, is alive and well.

Despatches received today state that the Fenians attacked a house in Cork occupied by Mr. Charles Matthew. Happily the family, having heard of the attack, were successful in repelling the attack. They met the marauders with a galling fire and caused the Fenians to retreat.

The Poets' Corner

In Church.

Behind the other worshippers I sat,
A stranger to them all,
I marked the lovely arches at the roof,
The carvings on the wall.
The softened lights through many a costly pane
Like blessings seemed to fall.

Arrayed in rich and beautiful attire.
Came many a woman fair,
Who sought her quiet place among the rest.
Then bowed her head in prayer.
The organ's tender prelude floated forth
Upon the sacred air.

Anon the chanting choir with voices sweet
Broke forth in moving strain:
'Twas "Blessed are the merciful", they sang,
"They mercy shall obtain."
Then all the people, reverent and still,
Bowed down their heads again.

But when the preacher, eloquent and wise,
Chained every ear and eye,
I, suddenly descried him, hovering shapes
That fluttered up on high.
And heard, or thought I heard, a wail
Or echo of a cry.

Forms perched in spectral rows on polished beams,
Or flitted to and fro:
No joyous twitter gushing from their throats—
Only a note of woe.
I saw they were the wraiths of martyred birds
With counterparts below.

One dipping low, poised once, and then
Above a fair girl's head,
I saw among the ribbons of her hat
A warbler stark and dead.
And she who sat beside her raised aloft
A pair of wings, outspread.

Aigrette upon aigrette from bonnets rare
Stood up in white array—
The stately heron's lovely, fatal gift,
With, oh, what price to pay—
To leave their nestlings crying for their food,
And dying day by day!

Full oft the phantom humming birds above
Would fondly hover o'er
The poor distorted remnants of themselves
These gentle women wore:
These women with adornments loaded down,
Yet ever wanting more!

O slaughtered innocents, I heard your cry:
My heart with pity stirred,
'Twas not a minister who preached that day,
Oh, no! it was a bird.
The sermon had no hint of earthly speech,
And yet I plainly heard.
The tiny spectres folded up their wings
And faded through the wall,
Just as the first soprano raised her voice
Like some sweet angel's call—
To sing the closing anthem; something old—
About the sparrow's fall.

Announcing the Advent of a New Synthetic Substance

Picture to yourself that dramatic moment when the scientist knows that he has brought into being a new synthetic substance.

Conceive, if you can, the intensity of satisfaction that comes with the sense of having created.

Imagine such a scene enacted in the laboratories of the Goodyear factories.

If you can visualize the event, and the enthusiasm that followed it, you will know something of what it means to us to announce to the world the advent of Neōlin.

GOODYEAR MADE IN CANADA

Better than Leather

Literally a New Substance

Of Incalculable Value

Neōlin is literally a new substance of incalculable economic value.

Yesterday it did not exist, today it is—a new, a practical and a proven product, destined to play a part in the daily lives of hundreds of thousands of homes.

Neōlin is not leather.
It is not rubber.
It is not a substitute for leather.
It is not a substitute for rubber.
It is—Neōlin.

The substance is new, the name is new.

Only the uses to which it will be put are old—almost as old as humanity, and as vast and universal.

Neōlin is better than leather.
It is better because it is waterpoof.

Neōlin Means Better Shoes

It is better because it is more flexible.
It is light. It is strong. It is durable.
It is reliable because it is always the same.

Neōlin will displace leather in some of the largest and widest fields which leather now fills.

It should, for instance, replace leather soles on every single pair of shoes sold.

More than two hundred of the greatest shoe manufacturers of this continent saw the immense market for Neōlin immediately.

These men are all masters of shoe design and construction—they know what the human foot requires.

They did not need to be told about Neōlin—they saw at once its tremendous economic importance.

An Improvement on Leather

They are telling the Neōlin story now through their salesmen; they will use Neōlin in their own products.

Neōlin has taken the virtues of leather and carried them still further.

Where leather was deficient Neōlin has created new virtues.

It is not like anything that you have ever tried, or known, or heard of.

Here, then, is a new element of ease and economy.

Familiarize yourself with the name—because it is destined to be a household word—Neōlin. Better than Leather.

What Hope, Indeed?

If a party of true and tried and subsidized pacifists can't go on a few days' voyage of peace without fighting, what hope is there for permanent peace among ordinary quarrelsome human beings?—Montreal Star.

Extension of Parliament

Following the example set in the old country the Liberals of Canada are likely to agree—if they can agree on anything—on an extension of the life of Parliament for eight months. There seems to be a pervading feeling that the war will not last another year.—Guelph Herald.

Navy Disgraced.

In the British detention camps German army officer prisoners refuse to associate with German navy officers, a few of whom are interned with them. The reason, of course, is that the Kaiser's navy is practically inactive, while the army is fighting. Grand Admiral von Tirpitz and his followers evidently stand to get less credit out of the present war, in the eyes of their own people, than any other class of the community. To stand on guard without engaging the enemy does not win applause, even if it renders service. But the "service" it has rendered so far in the shape of U-boats has been contrary to all the laws of humanity even in warfare.—Stratford Beacon.

FRENCH SOCIALIST TO FIGHT TO FINISH

PARIS, Dec. 30.—The National Congress of the Socialist party, which has ended its sessions here, voted a resolution affirming that the Socialists would continue to support a vigorous carrying-on of the war until French territory is freed, Belgium and Serbia are raised from ruins, Alsace and Lorraine are restored to France, and a durable peace is assured.

"But the duty of the Allies as the champions of the right and the guardians of the world's future does not end here," says the resolution.

"An organization of international law seems to the Socialist party the most effective guarantee of a lasting peace. By establishing among themselves and publishing to the world arbitration clauses to deal with every species of litigation that might arise, the Allies would set an example for which the neutral nations would be grateful to them, and would open the way to the only complete guarantees of a lasting peace.

"The Socialist party is aware that as long as the iniquity of capitalism exists, with its system of economic competition, which has developed to the extreme colonialism and imperialism, the dangers of war will exist with it. But the world is faced with these alternatives:

Either it will retain the practise of ultimatums, and war, with an increasing weight of armament will plunge Europe into some new catastrophe, in which human civilization will perish with her, or else nations will inaugurate international arbitration, limitation of armaments, democratic control of treaties, abolition of occult diplomacy, and the establishment of economic and military penalties to be applied to nations violating international law.

"And in this case only can Europe and the world look forward to a normal development of peace between nations and progress of men—through socialism."

The resolution goes on to say that the French Socialist party could not resume relations with the German section of the International Socialists until the Social Democrats or the dissentient minority of them repudiate imperialism, affirm the right of people to be the masters of their own destinies, and protest against violations of international law and of neutrality.

The resolution concludes by instructing the Socialist deputies to facilitate in every way the work of national defence and declaring that the party adheres to the words of Premier Asquith in the British House of Commons affirming that there should be no separate peace.

Van sauntered toward them. "Suppose you ask Truth how she could endure the thought of leaving me? The Boston wife makes her own decisions, as you know."

"Hear! hear!" cried the Judge from his corner.

"But she is not a Boston wife,—that's just the point!" cried Norton. "No offence meant, Mrs. Adams!"

"Oh, I'm half Southern," said the lady, cheerfully. "I'll turn the other cheek."

"Quincy, you are bound to get yourself into trouble to-night," interposed Truth. "Come over to this corner; I must give you some sisterly advice before I start."

They walked side by side to a corner in which was a divan half surrounded by growing plants. Every eye in the room followed. Truth was tall, but Norton nearly a head taller. Both were beautiful, and fair, and young. Norton's curls were the exact color of Truth's fluffy hair, and his fine mouth might have been cut by the same master-sculptor. "What a perfect couple" thought Mrs. Adams, and then came to herself with a guilty start. She turned her eyes toward Craighead. He was staring at the two with a look that pierced the kind soul who watched him. A flash of inspiration flashed into her brain. "He loves her more than he knows. This visit South is not a visit, but a possible separation, perhaps even a divorce. Oh, something must be done to prevent this disaster. It will do Orchid Wiley too much good!"

Truth and Norton had seated themselves and were gazing into each other's eyes in frank and evident delight. Norton was now about the only person with whom Truth dropped into the old familiar Southern speech. To hep it was relief, to him unmistakable pleasure. He had caught up many of her quaint phrases, and had even acquired a fair imitation of darky dialect.

"Did you know that you hadn't given me the flowers yet?" said Truth. "Or, maybe, you didn't bring them for me!"

Norton lifted the bunch slowly and stared into it as he answered: "Yes, I brought them for you. They have reminded me of you from the first."

"Oh, no!" she protested. "They are to sweet and pure for me. Besides, they are not a Gulf-coast flower,—they don't grow any lower down than Tennessee and Virginia. But I love them best of all the flowers you have up here. Somehow, they always make me think of—tears."

"What has made you decide to go South?" asked Norton, in a very low voice.

Truth glanced once into his face, then lowered her eyes. "Oh, Quin, don't ask me!" You will find it all out some time. I was goin' to come to you with everything, but you were in New York. It's too late now! Let's play now that it was just homesickness and the chance of goin' with grandma that made me decide."

Norton did not attempt a reply.

"And it was homesickness," she went on eagerly. "I just tremble at the thought of getting into the piney woods, alone, once more! I wish you could be there!"

"I wish I could. You know, I love the old place almost as much as you do. You have made it live for me. I know it all! Uncle Norah, and Moses the Mule, and Aunt Big Mary, and the setters—"

"And the red rosoter, and Sir Francis Drake, and my mockin'-bird——" Tears welled up in her eyes and fell upon the flower tears in her hand. She wiped her cheeks quite frankly, smiling at Norton the while.

"Do you know, Quin," she began after a pause, "that you are really the nicest boy I ever met? You don't dream how much I like you! Will you promise me something?"

"Anything."

"I want you to promise not to call me Mrs. Craighead,—not even to think of me as Mrs. Craighead ever at any time. After I am gone, if you ever think of me at all, let it be this way,—'Truth said that', or 'Truth loved the flowers I brought her,' or 'Truth was a very loving friend to me'."

She looked up in gentle good faith, but as she met his eyes, blue-black with suppressed feeling and luminous with unshed tears, a little pang of apprehension seized her. The boy gave a miserable gulp.

"I shall love to call you 'Truth.' Indeed, I always think of you so in my heart. But why do you speak so strangely—as if you might never come back?"

"I may not. That's a fact!" she said. "Nobody knows what will happen to them. All of us, at times, feel certain that we are goin' to die young."

"I don't, for one," said Norton, stoutly. "I intend to hang out my sign until it actually fails into bits, like the one horse shay. Why do you have such morbid thoughts? It's not a bit like you!"

"How do you know what's like me and what isn't? One year ago I was a perfect stranger."

"Oh, one year ago! One century! But now—Oh, Truth! if there is any way in which I can help you,—if there is anything that I can do—!"

Norton's secret was in his face. Conversation in other parts of the room had stopped. All were trying not to look toward that particular corner, to appear as if they did not hear Norton's impassioned words. Mrs. Adams rose to her feet.

"What unkind friends we are!" she cried with unnecessary vehemence. "These good people are to set off to-morrow night on a long, tiresome journey, and we are staying all these hours. Good-night, Mrs. Dexter Goodbye, Truth, dear! We will be at the station to-morrow; that is, unless you would rather go off more quietly. How is it? Be frank, child! You know that we want to do everything to show our grief at losing you and grandma even for a time, but we don't want to be in the way!"

Truth hesitated. She longed to ask them not to come, but was too delicate. Van came to her assistance—

"Since you are so thoughtful, dear Mrs. Adams, I'll admit that it would be better for you not to come. Station farewells are ghastly exhibitions at best, and both Mrs. Dexter and Truth are unnerved."

"Very sensible conclusion," remarked the Judge

When these good friends were gone, old Craighead shuffled toward the door, with Truth following close. In the little antechamber or hallway she caught his hand, held it tightly in both her own, and said, "Father, you have been lots better to me than even you know. And" (here she gave a small, hysterical chuckle) "you didn't want to like me a bit,—now, honest—did you?"

The old man's face wrinkled into dry smiles. "Ye ain't far off the track there. I guess! How do ye know I like you now?"

"How do you know I like you?" she retorted. "But you do!"

"Waal," he said provokingly, "some good had ter come out er Judee, an' I guess you're a sport on a rotten branch. Your grandma ain't lovin' me any too much!"

"That's because you tease her so about the South. But I don't mind. I know you don't mean a word of it!" She threw her arms about him for a hug, so emphatic that, when released, the old man staggered back, and began rubbing the back of his neck.

"I guesss you don't need any Hoff's Malt Bitters to bring out your muscles, Trewth! Waal, good-bye! Arryvoy! as your dude Bostonian says. Yes, I'll miss ye, an' me lookin' fer ye to come back. I never thought to say so much. There! there! Don't bother 'bout givin' me another hug,—my bottel er linimint's low!"

Norton was the last to leave. When the final hand-shake came his was so lugubrious that Truth cried, through her own tears, "Why, Quin! You look like you were goin' to your own funeral. Never mind! Cheer up! We'll see you at Dexterville yet."

Van did not even glance toward his junior partner, but as that youth struggled into his overcoat began to follow suit.

"Going out at this time of night?" asked Norton in amazement. "Yes, these stuffy rooms give me the headache." He did not say good-bye to Truth.

Next day dawned gray, cold and windy. The train was to leave at five P. M., but Van started early, in order to allow time for possible difficulties.

All the afternoon Truth had been excited and gay; "fey" the Scotch would have called it. She was certain, now, that her capacity for suffering was at an end; it was strangely easy not to remember, not to think ahead. She kept Mrs. Dexter laughing till her eyeglasses fell off a dozen times, and even Van smiled grimly more than once.

The porter, washerwoman, elevator boy, and various hotel clerks all were bidden farewell, and cheered by a generous tip. To her own special bellboy, the negro in buttons, she said, "Larry, you may be a dark-skinned white gen'l'man up here, but you'll have lots more fun down home. You'd better come!"

The nervous excitement of the last few days was now stretched to the point of reaction. It was true that she could neither think nor reason. Present interests hedged her in a narrow ring, and nothing else seemed of great importance except that she should not forget a single hotel servant.

At the station, her small reserve of self-control came near deserting her. The noise of passengers, the smell of gas and humanity, and, above all, the hearse-like aspect of the sleeping car, oppressed her with a sense of unreality and horror.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent my be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

JEANNE D'ARC

A Wonderful Story of the Early Days of the War Taken From "The Resurrection," a Magazine Published in Paris, France

"JEANNE D'ARC."

In those terrible days of early September 1914, when the Germans were advancing with fearful rapidity upon Paris, in the arrogant belief that they were going to march straight into the panic-stricken capital; when the best French troops fell back wondering yard after yard, mile after mile; when picked British regiments threw away overcats and ammunitions and all they had, and for the first time in their histories retreated and retreated, but fighting all the way; when the Carmeron Highlanders and Black Watch were mown down by the chattering and shrieking German artillery that came ever on and on, like a bloody Nemesis and the end of all things; in these fearful days, Paris was saved—Paris was saved for the second time in her glorious history by Joan of Arc, the divine Maid of Orleans, who centuries before had listened to the Voices of the tutelary Saints.

And this was how it came about.

The suspense that day and nigh was terrible.

Though it matters little to soldiers where they fight, once they are battling for the Motherland, the thought that before morning the fairest city in the universe, the greatest jewel in all their great land, might be a smoking ruin, made their spirits sink low, and life itself seem of no account. But with the breeze that sprang up around Paris as the sun sank, there came a spirit that awoke echoes of old chivalry and renown.

The army had retreated as far as was possible, and Paris lay almost open to the conquering hordes. Gallieni had taken his supreme measures; Maumoury had whipped up the new army given to him which was bent upon the last desperate stand before the entrenched camp should be attacked. The Germans lay in a long line from Senlis and Chantilly to Gentilly and Meaux. They had taken summary vengeance upon the inhabitants and were feasting before the last struggle, for they believed that in Paris were awaiting them rest and ease and pleasure.

And the Generalissimo gave the password for the night that should prevent any but those in the secreats of the grand staff to pass from line to line; and the password was "Jeanne-d'Arc."

Like a miraculous fire the word passed from General to subordinate, from commanding officer to sentry who gripped the gun between his fierce hands: "Jeanne-d'Arc."

It was like a fresh stream of strength passing from mouth to mouth, as officers on stern duty whispered as they crossed the lines: "Jeanne-d'Arc." Men's faces turned instinctively upwards, and a new light shone on them as they caught the magic words that sounded like a prayer: "Jeanne-d'Arc!" It was another redemption of France; it was a renewal of her vows and her sacrifice, a reconsecration and a revival of her ancient liberties and her glorious pledges. "Jeanne-d'Arc," men murmured, and though the millions who watched that night knew it not, a spirit of beauty passed again over France. "Jeanne-d'Arc" hovered like a breath over the burned homes of Senlis; and the sudden brutes who had been carousing turned uneasily in their sleep. "Jeanne-d'Arc"; and those who watched around Paris seemed to see a white light above the towers of Notre-Dame. "Jeanne-d'Arc" rang like a clarion in the ears of a thousand men, and the spirit of Maid of Orleans walked through the ranks of millions like a new force. She was History speaking, she was France awakened and mighty; she stood for the mothers and the wives of men; she rushed and touched all like the waters of the Seine and the Loire and the Rhone; she unfurled invisible banners that were sacred and undeniable and led men on to mighty deeds as of old. "Chevaliers of France," she seemed to say, "I am with you again—the Maid of Domremy."

Was it a password? No, it was a miracle.

For all the France of all the centuries arose and stood before Paris in serried ranks, in embattled multitudes, and denied the city to the babarian hordes.

For that night the troops of Maunoury sprang from the forts and trenches and rode out against the oncoming armies of the murderous Teuton. And the hordes of Von Kluck saw the bright light, saw the multitudes, felt the spirit of France. And they wavered, and turned, paused and ceased to march forward, and passed back to the south and west. And Paris was saved, and the great retreat had begun as the Germans sped to the Marne And after them leaped the French, as their canon boomed out, crying with avenging echoes, "Jeanne-d'"Arc!"

And with them like clattering demons charged—who? The English of Agincourt and of Crecy—the English who had fought in France in olden days not beside, but against them, but always in fairness and nobility of soul. And the Maid's banner led them, too, on. It was a new consecration and the centuries fled away, and Jeanne-d'Arc's lustrous eyes gleamed upon the English with love and benediction, and the foes of old charged on in brotherhood. And Paris and Rouen, Orleans and Calais cried to the vaulted heavens "Vive l'Angleterre!"

"Jeanne-d'Arc!" whispered officers and messengers, and a great sigh of gratitude swept from the throats of sentinels and companies and passed to multitudes and cities, from Biscay to Savoie, from Calais to the Alps, a "Jeanne-d'Arc" sounded the password all that night as the Germans fell back in dismay, and Paris was saved.

Yes, Paris was saved, and Joan of Arc had accomplished the miracle. For the second time the Maid had saved the city. And the cohorts of France and Britain pursued the fleeing Germans across the Marne, and never looked back; save when those that fell turned towards Paris, crying with their dying breath "Vive la'France!"

It is 1915, and, of course, these things are impossible—oh, are ridiculous—but there are many who will tell you that on that night and the next day in the fierest of the fight they saw riding at the head of the pursuing Allied troops a girl with flowing fair hair, dressed in shining armour, waving a banner and a sword, who turned and smiled as they yelled with all the force of their weary throats, "Vive la France", "Vive Jeanne-d'-Arc"

It was really only a password.

GET IT FIRST—NOT LAST

When a cold grips your system it is convincing proof that your condition is weakened—remember that. It is risky indeed to simply trust your strength to throw it off, because neglected colds have brought more serious sickness than any other one thing, while weakening cathartics and stimulating syrups are often depressing and dangerous.

The one best treatment for any cold—the one so often relied on when others fail, is the powerful blood-nourishment in Scott's Emulsion, which feeds the very sources of bodily strength to suppress the present cold and generate strength to thwart further sickness.

Get Scott's first, not last—and insist on the genuine—always free from injurious drugs. No advanced prices.

ROMANCE OF THE TRENCHES.

Youth Who Lost His Memory is Restored to Parents.

One of the strangest romances of the great war has just come to light in Leeds.

Ten years ago a Leeds youth, George Ernest Oldroyd, disappeared from his home, and when his parents next had news of him he was acting as a cook to a party of Canadian railway engineers on the prairies of Canada. After a month or two his parents ceased to have letters from him, and after the lapse of several years, and despite many vain endeavors to trace him, they reluctantly came to the conclusion that he was dead, and have mourned him as such for at least seven years.

Now as the result of a chance meeting in the trenches in France it seems likely that Mr. and Mrs. Oldroyd are to have their son restored to them. A Leeds soldier at the front recently met there a member of the Canadian contingent, whom he instantly recognized as George Oldroyd, of Leeds, and hailed him as an old friend. The Canadian replied that he was making a mistake as his name was Thorpe, and he had never to his knowledge been to Leeds.

Conversation between the two elicited the story from "Thorpe." Nine years ago he had been in a big train smash in Canada, from which he had emerged with his memory so completely gone that he could remember nothing of his previous life, not even his name. He told the Leeds comrade that following the accident a letter bearing the name of Thorpe was found in his possession, and he had been known by that name ever since.

The Leeds man assured him that he had not the slightest doubt as to his identity, as he had known the whole Oldroyd family, he gave "Thorpe" their address and advised him to write. Mr. and Mrs. Oldroyd, who still live in Leeds, have now received the following pathetic letter:

Dear Mrs. Oldroyd.—I take the liberty of writing these few lines. At the same time I beg of you to excuse me if you find that I have made a mistake. I am at the front with the Canadian Contingent, and I joined in Vancouver nine months ago, and it is only yesterday that I met a man from Roundhay-road, Leeds, and he spoke to me by the name of "George," and he said he knew me very well when I was in England.

I told him he had made a mistake. You see I was in Toronto nine years ago, and was in a train wreck, where I received concussion of the brain. I was taken to hospital in Winnipeg, and when I came out I had lost my memory of all that had taken place before my accident.

I have tried to locate my parents scores of times since then, but without any success. I suppose that this letter will be destined to meet the same fate as my other inquiries: but I am writing because this young man seems so confident he knows me, as he says he has been to my house. He says my home is Rose Cottage, Stratford street, Dewsbury road, Leeds.

Well, I am going to take a chance, and write to you, hoping to find my people but, dear lady, if I am wrong please forgive me, and remember that I was only trying to find my mother and father.

I will send you a photograph of myself if you had a son who went to Canada. I am a cook by trade, and I am in charge of the officers' kitchen at the front.

This young man has only just come from Leeds a few weeks ago. I think I must close now, as I don't want to take up too much of your time. If I have made a mistake—but I hope I have not—I beg to remain yours very truly,

TROOPER J. THORPE.

Mr. and Mrs. Oldroyd are quite convinced that "Thorpe" is none other than their long lost son. The handwriting of the above letter is identical with that of their son George's last letter home, and an additional proof is that when he emigrated to Canada he went accompanied by a friend named Thorpe.

OUR FIRE BILL.

It Amounts to Five Dollars a Family Throughout Canada.

The forest fires in Ontario during 1915 cost every family a five-dollar bill. This statement is mathematically exact for the reason that Ontario lost over three million dollars worth of her forest wealth between April and November this year.

Practically all of this destruction was due to the fires which could have been prevented. Nearly eighty five per cent. of what Ontario burned up was due to [illegible] part of settlers, prospectors, and others brought into contact with the standing timber. Between Pembroke and North Bay this average of destruction was proved by actual record of the fire rangers.

Annual forest losses in Quebec and British Columbia are due to practically the same cause, although these provinces, unlike Ontario, have overcome much of the evil by excellent legislation in the form of permit laws. Before a Quebec or British Columbia settler is allowed to burn his brush or his clearing slash, he must first obtain a permit from the forest ranger or other official. Instead of this requirement working hardship it acts in a manner exactly the contrary. One careless settler in a district is not allowed to burn the woodlots and standing timber of nearby limits without penalty befitting the act. The innocent and well-meaning neighbor is not involved in the blame with the guilty man, and responsibility is placed where it belongs. Every settler is obliged to notify a ranger of his burning plans and accept his advice as to the correct way of using fire in timbered areas. For instance, the settler is encouraged to stack his brush in the open and not on the edge of growing timber; he is advised to choose a day when the wind is down and watch carefully for straw sparks. These are simple instructions which anyone might be expected to take. Unfortunately through ignorance of the danger involved by carelessness, many settlers require legal restrictions. This assures equal treatment for all.

Evidence in the hands of the Canadian Forestry Association proves conclusively that the settlers themselves in British Columbia have become enthusiastic supporters of the Permit Law, recognizing it as quite as sensible as any other law designed to prevent incendiarism in towns or cities. Indications are that a duplicate of the British Columbia Permit Law for settlers' fires would find a welcome reception in Ontario, and that the settlers would soon realize how such a measure can be worked wihout any bothersome "Red tape."

A JEWISH FESTIVAL.

Feast of Hanukkah Celebrated Throughout Canada.

On the night of December 2nd in the home of every orthodox Jew in Canada, a candle was lighted just at sundown, on a big candlestick with eight branches instead of seven, and with singing, the eight-day festival of Hanukkah commenced. Hanukkah is called one of the minor Jewish festivals, but it originated back in the second century, and its legend is one of the most beautiful in the Jewish religion.

On Friday night two candles are lighted, and on Saturday night three, and so on, until on the eighth day there are eight candles burning. This commemorates not only the cleansing of the temple which had been defiled by the Syrians, but the miracle which accompanied it.

The festival of Hanukkah celebrates the revolt of the captive Maccabees against the Syrians. Antiochus in his conquest of the east, forced upon the Hebrews the religion of Syria which was much debased in practice. Under Judas Maccabeus the Jews on the battlefield justified their faith, achieved their emancipation, and proceeded at once to the rededication of their temple.

It was then, according to legend, that the miracle occurred. Only pure oil must be used for the temple's lights, and there was only oil enough for one night. This was used, and the following day the cruse had miraculously refilled, so that for eight days there was pure oil for every lamp, and the temple was resplendent with light. For this reason Hanukkah is known as the Feast of Lights, and is celebrated with great rejoicing.

In Canada a holiday is proclaimed after sundown, but it ends at sunrise the next day, so that it does not in any way interfere with work. The closing day of the feast, December 9, is also a similar holiday. This merely means that the children do not attend the night schools or the neighborhood clubs of which very many are members.

"In Palestine or Russia," said Rev. S. B. Rohold, "this Festival of Lights would be a tremendous affair. There they have not been greatly influenced by Christianity. Here I don't suppose that more than one in a hundred families will have the lights lit. In some of the homes games are arranged for the children, and in some of the schools the children are given presents. During the hours that the candles are burning no work must be done, but apart from that the regular routine of work is not interfered with."

To Run Boats to Alaska.

Some announcement regarding the plans of the G. T. P. in connection with its proposed steamer service to Alaska is expected in the near future. Captain C. H. Nicholson, manager of G. T. P. Coast steamships has just returned to Vancouver from Skagway via Prince Rupert, according to advices received in Victoria, and it is understood that his visit to the northern port was identified with the company's proposal to establish a service of steamers between Victoria, Vancouver, and Skagway, via Prince Rupert, as announced by Philip Nicholson some weeks ago following a conference of company officials at Prince Rupert.

FALSE ALARM

At 6.50 on Sunday morning the fire brigade was called out, it being reported that a fire was in progress at McGinnis store, corner of Station and Canifton Roads. It proved to be a false alarm.

QUIET NEW YEAR'S

Since Friday, everything in Police circles has been exceptionally quiet, no arrests having been made and only two calls, of an unimportant nature, having been responded to.

PARADED THE STREETS

On New Year's morning a large number of the scholars of some of the Sunday schools of the city in addition to some ladies and citizens paraded on Front and other streets, the object being to demonstrate in favor of local option. A number of banners, suitably inscribed, were carried by some of the scholars. The scene attracted considerable attention.

KEEPING A SECRET

Katherine and Margaret found themselves seated next to each other at a dinner party and immediately became confidential.

"Molly told me that you told her that secret I told you not to tell her," whispered Margaret.

"Oh, isn't she a mean thing!" gasped Katherine. "Why, I told her not to tell you!"

"Well," returned Margaret, "I told her I wouldn't tell you she told me—so don't tell her I did."

THEFT OF GRAIN

On Friday afternoon before Police Magistrate Bedford, of Deseronto, Jas. Elliott, a laborer who has been employed in Tyendinaga Township, was tried in this city on a charge of stealing grain. The complainant was Mr. David Barber, of Tyendinaga, and the evidence in the case was such that the accused was convicted. It appears that a quantity of cracked grain was taken and the theft was traced to Elliott. The magistrate sentenced him to two months in the County jail. Mr. Carnew, County Attorney for crown, the prisoner being undefended.

LOCAL OPTION MEETING

Under the auspices of the Citizens' Welfare League, a local option meeting was held in the Opera House on Sunday afternoon, which was well attended. Previous to the speaking a song service, conducted by Mr. A. M. Chapman, was held an an appropriate recitation was ably given by Miss Jessie Tuite. Dr. Yeomans was chairman, in endeavoring to repute some statements made in reference to him in a letter which was published. The speaker of the day was Mr. F. S. Spence, of Toronto, who spoke at considerable length upon local option and its results in places where it had been in force.

SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY

A rally of the Belleville Sunday schools was held at Holloway Street Methodist Church on New Year's, which was largely attended. The pastor, Rev. J. N. Clarry, was chairman of the gathering. Invocation was given by Rev. H. S. Osborne, B. D., pastor of Bridge Street Church, and prayers by Rev. S. C. Moore, B.A., pastor of the Tabernacle Church. Appropriate addresses were given by Rev. A. S. Kerr, pastor of St. Andrew"s Church, and Rev. A. M. Hubly, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, also took part in the proceedings. Suitable music was furnished by the choir of the church. An especial feature was the salutation of the flag, led by Cap. Puston of the Salvation Army and the Boy Scouts.

LAID AT REST

The funeral of the late Mr. James Malyea took place on Sunday afternoon from his late residence, Cedar street, and was largely attended. Members of the Veterans' Association of which deceased was a member, turned out in considerable numbers as did citizens generally. Services at St. Michael's Church and at the interment at St. James cemetery were conducted by Rev. Father Killeen. Many floral tributes and mass cards were contributed by friends which evidenced the esteem in which deceased was held. The bearers were: Messrs. W. Clarke, S. Barclay, Thos. Soales, Wm. Carter, Wm. Pascoe and Alex. Tisdale.

RECRUITING CONCERT

At the Princess Theatre, Front St., on Sunday, two sacred concerts were given under the auspices of the 155th Battalion, C.E.F., and both were well attended. In the afternoon and evening some moving pictures were shown and some suitable vocal selections were also given. At the evening performance, Mrs. Adeloide Secord, who is connected with the Empire Players' Company, which played here all last week was present, and gave an appropriate recruiting address. She stated that she had a son in the fighting lines some where in Belgium and that it was incumbent upon mothers to offer and allow their sons to enlist and fight for the Allies. It was a sacrifice to do so, but the sacrifice must be made. At the conclusion of her remarks, Mrs. Secord recited in feeling manner. "The charge of the Light Brigade." Col. Adams, commanding officer of the 155th Battalion, spoke briefly in favor of recruiting and also on behalf of the Battalion, thanked Mr. Green, the manager of the house, for his kindness and generosity in giving free the house for the concerts.

HE DIDN'T KNOW

An insurance agent was filling out an application form.

"Have you ever had appendicitis?" he asked.

"Well," answered the applicant, "I was operated on, but I have never felt quite sure whether it was appendicitis or professional curiosity."

LETTER OF APPRECIATION

The following letter has been received by the pastors of the city churches from Mr. Sharpe, the secretary of the Military Y.M.C.A., acknowledging the assistance received from the churches in connection with the Christmas dinner for the soldiers.

"May I express through you to the ladies of your church my thanks for their assistance in the providing and serving of the Christmas dinner for the members of the 80th and 155th Battalions and returned soldiers who were in the city Christmas Day.

The more I think of the splendid provision made the more I realize my indebtedness to the ladies of the city's churches. I am specially grateful to the ladies who represented your church on the general committee and gave so freely of their time to the undertaking. Without their help a dinner of the proportions of the one served would have been quite out of the question.

After all there is so little we can do for the men in khaki compared to what they have offered to do, that it is little wonder that everyone seemed so eager and glad to honor them in this way.

I trust the New Year may be one full of prosperity and improved opportunities for the members of your congregation.

Esmeralda Club Gave at Home

On Friday evening the Esmeralda Club held their New Year's At-Home in Johnstone's Academy. In every way it proved to be a grand success and upward of 75 couples danced the New Year in and the old year out. Refreshments were served at 11.30 and as the clock struck twelve the merry gathering joined hands in one large circle and sang the "Maple Leaf" gave three cheers for the boys at the front, sang, "Auld Lang Syne" and "God Save the King" then proceeded to complete the latter part of the programme. The gathering broke up about 2.30 mid New Year's greetings.

NOTES

During the evening, Prof. Johnstone acted as Master of Ceremonies and the O'Rourke Orchestra rendered the music in a pleasing manner.

Many out-of-town guests were present from Trenton, Napanee, Frankford, Kingston and London, also many former Bellevillelans who were home for the holidays.

TWO MOTHERS TELL

HOW THEIR SICKLY CHILDREN WERE MADE STRONG AND WELL

"For six years our little girl suffered from a bronchial trouble, she had no appetite, could not sleep and was so nervous we had to keep her out of school. The doctors said nothing but a change of climate would help her. We were discouraged, when one day a friend asked us to try Vinol, and after taking six bottles she does not look like the same child. She has a fine appetite, is lively, healthy and well, and Vinol did it all." Mrs. F. E. Hufford, Iola, Kas.

Another child made strong:—

"The measles left my little girl thin and delicate, and the doctor's medicine did not seem to build her up. I read about Vinol and got a bottle, and her improvement was rapid, her strength returned and she is now as well as ever." Mrs. E. Linot, Pittsburg, Pa.

We ask every Belleville mother of a frail, sickly child to try Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it does not restore her child's nomal health. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

A NEW YEAR'S POEM, 1916.

Nineteen-sixteen was ushered in
  Amidst a sleet and fog.
The awful war with roaring din,
  Has scared the bright sun-dog.
And ice has glazed our city's face,
  The birds no food have found,
While children on the market place
  Are skating circles round.

I stay from church, which grieves me most.
  The hills are all a glare;
Yet numbers of our pious host
  Are doing circles there.
Some pray to keep the city wet,
  While others wish it dry,
Thus Local Option's in a sweat
  And the goose hangs high.

Our mails are filled with flaring script
  Which breathe of wine or musk;
The nectar which the gods have sipt
  May mould within the husk.
The fight's to oust the juice of corn;
  There is no medium choice,
Lest the little dog before the horn
  Should smell his master's voice.

—Wm. P. McKenna.

MARRIAGES

GORMAN—LATTIMER.—On Saturday, January 1st, 1916 at the residence of the bride's brother, Mr. W. H. Lattimer, 275 John Street, by Rev. J. H. Locke, Toronto, Mabel Agnes Lattimer, to James Lee Robinson Gorman.

SPORTING NEWS

THE RING

The Willard—Fulton fight which was to have taken place in New Orleans next March was officially declared off by Tommy Burns the New Orleans' promoter on the refusal of Tom Jones, Jess Willard's manager, to agree to an elimination bout for Fred Fulton prior to March 4.

An effort is being made to stage the bout in Milwaukee, an offer of $27,000 for the match being made by Tom Andrews of that city.

BASEBALL.

Four clubs in the International League are without managers. Toronto, Rochester, Newark, and the club that will be placed in either Richmond or Jersey City are casting about for pilots. The men prominently mentioned in baseball circles as being considered for managerial jobs in the Barrow circuit are John Granzel, former manager of the Rochester team; Joe Birmingham, formerly manager of the Cleveland club, and Harry McCormick, who managed the Chattanooga team of the Southern League.

Always the poor umpire gets the worst of it. Now it is reported that there will be no room on either major league staff for the men who acted as arbitrators in the Federal, and who, with the players, were made eligible to return. Both staffs are reported to be filled, so the former Feds. must go to the minors, if they can land jobs, or quit the work. Some of the men that Gilmore had are first-class umpires, and will be taken on as soon as there are vacancies. Others would not be given a chance in the majors in any event. Any of them that can make the grade will land somewhere. It's harder to get good umpires than good ball players.

Minced Cold Roast Beef.—Mince the beef; then season with pepper, salt and a teaspoonful of chopped tarragon leaves. Lay upon rye bread.

Pineapple and Cream Cheese.—Soften a package of cream cheese with a little sweet cream, add a pinch of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of freshly grated pineapple. Use with gluten bread.

Minced Chicken and Mayonnaise.—Mince the chicken and add a tablespoonful of chopped celery and enough mayonnaise to make a spreading mixture; with white bread.

Broiled Tomato Rounds.—Dip slices of fresh, firm tomatoes in eggs and crumbs and then brush with melted butter. Broil carefully and sandwich between rye bread rounds.

Apple Butter and Cheese.—Mix with one package of cream cheese two tablespoonfuls of apple butter and a tablespoonful of chopped nuts; add a little cream if the paste is not soft enough to spread and lay upon gluten bread.

Apple Sauce and Brown Bread.—Add to a little good apple sauce a tablespoonful of chopped nuts, spread the bread rounds with fresh butter and spread with the mixture.

Minced Tongue and Marmalade.—To a half cupful of minced tongue add two tablespoonfuls of orange marmalade, mix to a paste and spread on thin slices of graham bread.

Banana Sandwiches.—Slice the bananas thin and let them stand in lemon juice, sugar and a dash of nutmeg for half an hour; then drain and roll in chopped nuts and spread on whole wheat bread.

A GENUINE COPY.

Directions, Step by Step, For Making New England Potpie.

New England potpie is made of three pounds of breast of lamb, each rib bone cut into three inch lengths, and one small chicken, carefully cleaned, singed and jointed and the meat stripped from the breast and back. Put the meat, chicken and two sliced large onions into a deep pot, cover with water and cook gently until the meat is thoroughly done.

Forty minutes before the time to serve it have pared and sliced thick a small pudding dish full of white potatoes; put them in and season with pepper, salt and a little celery salt. Have ready raised dough enough to make fifteen dumplings, pinch them off and roll them round about the size of an egg; then lay them on a floured board to puff up. Ten minutes after the potatoes have been put in drop the puffed up dumplings lightly on top of the stew, cover quickly with a cloth and a cover and boil half an hour.

Be sure before putting in the dumplings that there is enough gravy covering the meat to float the dumplings.

When done remove the cloth and cover and lift dumplings carefully with the skimmer to one platter; then also with the skimmer lift out the meat and potatoes to another platter; then have a smooth flour thickening ready and boil down the gravy and thicken it, turning some over the stew and serving the rest in the tureen.

EGG MARKETING.

Experiment in Co-operative Work Has Proven a Great Success.

While the activities of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture with regard to the organization of Co-operative Egg and Poultry Marketing Associations have been largely confined to date to the Eastern Provinces of the Dominion, the need and opportunity for work of this kind in the Western Provinces have not been overlooked.

From the fact that co-operative marketing of poultry products was something entirely new, it was thought advisable to test out the practicability of the system thoroughly before extending it to a wider area. Satisfactory results having been obtained in the East, arrangements are now being made to extend the work to the Western Provinces.

The new field to be organized will receive the benefit of the experience of men who have been associated with the co-operative work since its inception. Mr. T. A. Benson, who for the past three years has been in charge of the co-operative organization in Prince Edward Island, is being transferred to the Province of Alberta to fill a position similar to that which he has held in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. J. H. Hare, who has had an extensive experience in this work, not only with the Ontario Provincial Department of Agriculture, but also during the last two years with the commercial and marketing end of the work undertaken by the Live Stock Branch, has been given general supervision of the Egg Circle work being conducted by the Branch. Mr. Hare is now in the Western Provinces and will devote the greater part of his time for the next year to directing operations there. For the present he will confine his activities principally to the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. R. J. Allen, B.S.A., has been appointed to take immediate charge of the organization of Co-operative Egg and Poultry Marketing Associations in Manitoba. Mr. Allen has had an extensive experience not only in Departmental work but also in the commercial field, and goes to Manitoba well fitted to carry on this work effectively.

Mr. Wm. Kerr, B.S.A., who was in district representative work in Ontario for some time previous to joining the staff of the Live Stock Branch, and who has been associated with Mr. Benson in Prince Edward Island during the past summer, is now in charge of the work in that Province. Both during his college course and later, during active work in the field, Mr. Kerr has made a special study of the theory and practice of the co-operative marketing of farm products. He enters the work in Prince Edward Island, therefore, well equipped to take up the problems that have developed in connection with the advanced nature of the work at that point.

WOMAN CITY CLERK.

Miss Martha A. Dickinson Has Filled Position With Great Credit.

Windsor, Ontario, has the distinction of having the only woman city clerk in Canada. Some go even further than that and say she is the only one in the world, with the sole exception of a town in Poland.

This unique example of feminine endeavor is Martha A. Dickinson. She is young in years compared to the incumbents of similar positions elsewhere in Canada, for example, in Montreal, where a member of the Canadian Senate holds the city clerkship.

Miss Dickinson was engaged in newspaper work when she became assistant city clerk in 1902. For 12 years she attended to the details of the office and gained the confidence of City Clerk Lusted so well that in 1914, owing to increasing deafness, he asked that she be promoted to the responsibility of acting city clerk, and she was unanimously chosen by the Council for the office. That Miss Dickinson takes her work seriously—that is, she recognizes that her position is something more than keeping books—is evidenced in the fact that she was elected by her Council to represent Windsor at the recent meeting of the Ontario Municipal Association.

Recently the Mayor of Windsor wrote of her as follows: "During her term of service Miss Dickinson has secured a thorough grasp of municipal affairs, and has developed remarkable ability in handling the work of the office. For a number of years she has been assuming more and more of the work, and last spring, when she was compelled to assume the full management on account of the long illness of the city clerk, she did it in such a manner that there was not a hitch."

Opposed to Change.

Mount Robson, which it is suggested should be changed to Mount Cavell in honor of the heroic British nurse, is popularly supposed to have got its name from Hon. John Robson, Premier of British Columbia, and uncle of the late John Robson Cameron, of the Hamilton Spectator. The proposal to change the name of the mountain has met with marked opposition.

"The first record of the mountain, under the title of Mount Robson, appears in Milton and Cheedle's book of their travels, which dates back about 60 years ago, says Prof. Sissons, a widely known mountain climber. It was referred to as Mount Robson, and evidently had the name Robson when the travel was made. We have not been able to establish the origin of the name, but I think it was called after some old explorer or prospector. It was suggested that the mount may have been named after Ebenezer Robson, the pioneer Methodist minister, who went out there about '54, but I don't think that has been substantiated. Another belief was that it was named after Premier Robson, of British Columbia, but he came after the mountain had its name, so that can be put aside also."

WHEN HE HAD TO STOP

"My doctor told me I would have to stop eating so much meat."

"Did you laugh him to scorn?"

"I did at first; but when he sent in his bill I found he was right."

LESS FALL WHEAT.

Decrease Chiefly Is In Ontario, Due to Heavy Rains in August.

The Census and Statistics Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, in a report issued a few days ago, estimates that the area sown to fall wheat for next year's crop is 1,100,800 acres, which is about 15 per cent. less than the area of 1,294,000 acres sown in 1914 for the 1915 crop. The decrease is principally in Ontario, and is due to the heavy rains of August, which prevented the working of the soil in time for seeding.

The area sown to fall wheat in Ontario is estimated to be 820,600 acres, states the report, as compared with 1,043,000 acres sown in 1914, the decrease being 222,400 acres, or over 21 per cent. In Alberta there is an increase from 230,000 acres in 1914 to 260,500 acres in 1915, the plus difference representing 13 per cent. In Manitoba there is a decrease from 10,900 to 9,400 acres; in Saskatchewan there is no change from the estimated area of 4,100 acres, and in British Columbia there is a small increase of 200 acres, making 6,200 acres sown to this crop. As regards condition on October 31, the figures are 88 or 89 per cent. of the standard for Canada and for Ontario and Alberta. In Manitoba the condition is 69, in Saskatchewan 85, and in British Columbia 95. For Ontario and Alberta the figures of condition are less than in either of the two previous years, when the condition on October 31 was over 90.

For all Canada about 53 per cent. of the area intended for next year's crops is reported as plowed by October 31, as compared with 71 per cent. last year and 54 per cent. in 1913. In the North-West the percentages are as follows: Manitoba 36, against 92; Saskatchewan 27, against 77; Alberta 34, against 56.

Root and fodder crops in Canada, consisting of potatoes, turnips, mangels, etc., hay and clover, alfalfa, fodder corn and sugar beets, occupied this year a total area of about 8,977,000 acres, as compared with 9,067,000 acres in 1914, and their estimated value, subject to revision, is $230,379,000, as compared with $226,227,000 last year. The decrease in area is principally in respect to hay and clover, and the increase in total value is due to the larger yield of the same crop.

The conditions governing the production of potatoes have this year been as bad as last year they were good. The total esimated yield is 62,604,000 bushels from 478,600 acres, an average yield per acre of only 131 bushels. Last year the corresponding figures were 85,672,000 bushels, 475,900 acres, and 180 bushels. Not since the average of 119 bushels in 1910 has the rate per acre been so low. It is 27 bushels below the average of 158 bushels for the five years 1910-14.

To Reduce.

The following exercise is an excellent one to practice if you wish to reduce an extended abdomen. Place the right foot forward about eighteen inches and raise the arms above the head. Bend the body to the left, to the front and to the right, endeavoring to reach the floor with the finger tips. Keep the left knee rigid, but bend the right just a little. Inhale deeply when rising and exhale when bending. Continue this exercise until you are fairly tired, alternating feet.

HALF THE LEGISLATION IS IN DIVORCE CASES

68 Bills at Ottawa, of Which 33 Are Cutting of Wedding Ties

OTTAWA, Jan. 3.—Private legislation for the coming session of Parliament will be exceptionally light. The general uncertainty as to the probable length of the session has discouraged many promoters from paying fees for legislation which may not go through. The total applications so far number 68, of which no less than 33 are applicants for divorce. There are only two applications for railway incorporation, six for miscellaneous incorporations, 17 for railway amendments (mostly extensions), seven for miscellaneous amendments, and three for letters patent.

Toronto heads the divorce list with eleven applications, or one-third of the total, while Edmonton comes next with three.

The list of applications is as follows:

Lillian M. Dent, Nora L. Jackson, A. Arthur, Robert W. Thompson, Ida Woltz, Lena Pearl Potter, Mabel Mills, Christopher Sinclair, Clarice Smith, Hope F Bailey, Martha J. Kenny, all of Toronto.

M. Sherwood, Ottawa; Mary P. Lasher, Kingston; Jean Porter, Lindsay; Henry J. Wardlaws, Weston; Harry J. White Cunningham, Hamilton; Percy Lynn Woods, Capra; Robert C. Veindrafau, Preston; John Selta, Winchester; David W. Rhodes, Nottawasaga; William T. Craig, Chatham.

Andrew H. Gault, Montreal; James William McKenzie, Pt. Marguerite, Que.; Raymond A. Savage, Gramby, Que.

Annie Elliott, Winnipeg; Conrad B. Marshall, Edmonton; Sadie McArthur, Edmonton; Edward A. Barnwell, Calgary; Leroy H. Ruttle, Calgary; W. Chas. Wilson, Edmonton; Rudolph Volthoffer, Southey, Sask.; Cicely E. Ferara, Shelbrook, Sask.; Robert Happer, Regina.

H. F. KETCHESON GETS BIG MAJORITY FOR MAYOR

Local Option By-Law Defeated by 80—Aldermen Poll Small Vote—School Trustee Elected

As was anticipated, the municipal election in Belleville yesterday was the keenest ever fought in the city. There were also polled far more votes than ever before. This was largely due to the fact that a local option campaign was waged, and both sides were well organized for the fray. The result was that many citizens, especially ladies, who never before took any interest in such an election as voters, were brought to the polls and exercised their franchise. It was indeed a busy day, and vehicles of every description were pressed into service in conveying voters to the polls. From the opening of the polls at nine o'clock until the close at five o'clock the interest did not lag. Many ladies were very active during the day in endeavoring to secure votes for local option, and their efforts no doubt were responsible in no small degree for the large vote polled for the measure, namely, 1,318. The vote against the measure was 1012, thus defeating it on the three-fifths clause by 80.

In the Mayoralty contest it was confidently expected that Mr. H. F. Ketcheson would defeat Mr. A. R. Robinson, but his most sanguine supporters did not for a moment think his majority would be so large, namely, 608. Of the fourteen polling subdivisions of the city the successful candidate had majorities in twelve, whilst Mr. Robinson carried two by slight margins. The vote was by three to four hundred the largest ever given in a Mayoralty contest, namely 2,260, or 170 less than that recorded for local option.

There was comparatively no interest manifested in the Aldermanic race owing to the fact that although ex-Ald. Lang qualified within the appointed time to do so, he subsequently resigned. Nevertheless a ballot had to be prepared. In Foster Ward only 4 ballots were issued, and in Murney Ward No. 13 only one ballot was marked. This was owing to the fact that the ballot was not asked for and consequently not given to the elector. The result showed that ex-Ald. Deacon secured the largest number of votes recorded, but was closely followed by Ald. Smith.

In Coleman Ward a contest took place between Mr. G. A. Bennett and Mr. W. R. McCreary for Public School Trustee. The result was that Mr. McCreary won out by a majority of 117.

The votes for Mayor, Aldermen, and Local Option were as follows:—

Cabinet Crisis Not Yet Ended

(Canadian Press Special)

London, Jan. 4.—The Cabinet crisis is far from ended. The only definite point is that Sir John Simon at the home office has resigned. He had a prolonged interview with the Prime Minister yesterday, when the latter did his utmost to induce Sir John to remain in the Cabinet, but it is almost certain that the home secretary's resignation will be officially announced on the reassembling of Parliament. Lewis Harcourt and Herbert Samuel are named among his possible successors in office. The position of McKenna and Runciman is still undecided. They are making acceptance of the Government compulsion bill conditional upon securing a concession to their views on the eventual size of the army and the Morning Post believes that such a concession will be made so that enough men will be reserved for munitions and other necessary trades. South Wales miners are apparently dead against conscription. President Winston of the Miners' Federation said yesterday. "Unless the politicians are careful they will stop the South Wales' coal fields and there will be no coal for the navy."

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The announcement was made in the House of Commons to-day of the resignation of Sir John Simon as Secretary of State for home affairs.

RUSSIANS CONTINUE ADVANCE IN EAST

(Canadian Press Special)

PETROGRAD, Jan. 4.—An official statement given out last night says that fighting continues northwest of Czernowitz with unabated energy, our forces continually advancing despite numberous counter attacks by the enemy. The enemy losses are very great and we took another group of sixteen officers and 766 unwounded men prisoners without counting the great number of wounded remaining on the battlefield.

OFFICIAL RECRUITING FIGURES GIVEN OUT

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Lord Derby's recruiting figures for the period between October 23rd and December 15th show that 1,150,000 unmarried men and 1,679,263 married men presented themselves for service.

Of this total 103,000 single and 112,000 married men enlisted immediately while eight hundred and forty thousand single men and 1,344,979 married men were attested for future service, and 207,000 single men and 221,853 married men were rejected.

British Attack Germans in France

LONDON, Jan. 3.—(Special.)—The Official Press Bureau gives out the following report from British Headquarters in France:

"Last night we made a successful bombing attack on the southern part of our front.

"To-day we directed an effective artillery fire against portions of the German lines.

"German artillery was active to the northeast of Loos and to the east of Ypres."

BANK MANAGER ENLISTS

MILBROOK, Jan. 3.—Special—Messrs. Basil and Bruce Fitzgerald have joined the colors. The former was Manager of the Standard Bank at Brooklin, and the latter is now on the Paymaster's staff at Perth. Harold Donaldson, son of Mr. W. T. Donaldson, has given up his work at Queen's University and donned the khaki.

LIEUT. CRAIG GETS MILITARY CROSS

COBOURG, Jan. 3.—Special—At Buckingham Palace a few days ago Lieut. Charles Stewart Craig, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Craig, Cobourg, was invested with the Military Cross by the King, which he was awarded recently for conspicuous gallantry.

21 NATIONS BEHIND MONROE DOCTRINE

Such is Reported Object of Pan-American Convention

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—A defensive alliance that would put the powers and resources of the twenty-one republics of North, South and Central America behind the Monroe Doctrine, it became known today, is the real purpose of the proposed convention between these nations.

Officials at the State Department refuse to discuss in any way reports that suggestions looking toward this end have been made informally, and that representatives of Central and South American Governments in Washington have despatched memoranda to their Governments.

Delegates to the Pan-American Congress who are close officially and personally to Ministers and Ambassadors of American Governments here, declared to-day such a movement is on foot.

They said that if only a part of the suggestions made during "conversations" between the Secretary of State and Latin-American officials are subscribed to the Americans could present a solid front, in event of necessity, to the rest of the world. Such an alliance, they said, would prove the most powerful in the history of the world, when resources in men and materials are considered.

Some of the Suggestions

Some of these suggestions, already made or to be made, are:

Creation of standing armies by each nation, the size of each army to be decided upon by agreement of all the nations concerned. Such armies would be subject to call for the defence of any one or more of the twenty-one republics, in the event of attack by an outside nation.

Creation of navies along the same lines.

Promulgation of a code of laws for regulation not only of boundary disputes, but of commercial, industrial and financial matters.

Agreement that no nation in the Pan-American Alliance will make any offensive or defensive treaty with any government outside the twenty-one republics of the western hemisphere.

Establishment of an international court comprising representatives of all the nations subscribing to the Pan-American Alliance, such court or body to have power to settle all disputes and to interpret the proposed international code.

Establishment of an international force, distinguished from the regular land and naval forces, to be used as a police force, this force to be called on, and to be augmented by the regular land and naval forces if necessary to put down revolutionary movements, when, in the opinion of the international court, the revolutionary movement is not a movement of the majority of the people of the nation affected.

For Government Call Only

In this connection, it is now pointed out that this international police force would be called into action only at the request of the heads of the recognized Government, and after the international court had passed on the matter.

The chief object of such an alliance, however, it will be repeatedly emphasized when the matter is formally made public, will be the adoption by every nation of the western hemisphere of the Monroe Doctrine and its principles.

Union of American nations to preserve their "sovereign integrity and actual life" was urged today before the Pan-American scientific congress by John Barrett, director of the Pan-American Union.

"Whatever may be this war's results," said Mr. Barrett, "there may be little or no love for the United States and other nations forming Pan-America. The American Republics must stand together for eventualities. War passions and war power may force a policy toward Pan-Americanism, the Monroe Doctrine, which will demand absolute solidarity of action on the part of the American Republics—all their physical and moral force."

KINGSTON'S BIG RALLY

KINGSTON, Jan. 3—Special—A big recruiting rally in behalf of the 146th Battalion being raised here, was held in the City Hall to-night. Lieut.-Col. Charles A. Lowe presided. Addresses were delivered by Major-General Hodgins, Adjutant-General, Ottawa, and Prof. L. W. Mulloy.

BRITAIN LENDS TWO BILLION

LONDON, Jan. 4.—(Special)—It is estimated that in the last year Great Britain has advanced £400,000,000 ($2,000,000,000) to her Allies.

ENEMY CONTINUE SUBMARINE WARFARE

Four More Steamers Sunk by Subs.—Three Are British and One Japanese—Ten Lives Are Lost—Total Tonnage 23,275

UNITED STATES IS CONFRONTING CRISIS

Officials Regard Situation as Gravest Since Piratical Operations Began—Uneasiness is Evident—Lively Discussion Over Persia's Sinking is Expected in Congress

Four More Sunk

Four more steamers, three British and one Japanese, were yesterday reported sunk in the Mediterranean by enemy submarines. The total known loss of life is ten. Following are the sub. victims:

Geelong, Br., 7,951 tons.
Glengyle, Br., 9,395 tons.
St. Oswald, Br., 3,810 tons.
Kenkoku Maru, Jap., 2,109. tons.

Another P and O. Boat

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Geelong, another Peninsular & Oriental liner, has been sunk in the Mediterranean.

All on board were saved.

She was a steel ship of 7,951 tons, practically the same size as the Persia. She was built for the Blue Anchor Line in 1904, and taken over by the P. & O. in the Australian service. She was scheduled to cruise by way of the Cape. How she happened to be in the Mediterranean has not been explained.

The news of the Geelong's loss came as the climax of a day of disastrous reports from Mediterranean shipping.

Glen Liner Destroyed

The British steamship Glengyle has been sunk. There are about 100 survivors.

The Glengyle had on board about 120 persons, passangers and crew. All with the exception of three Europeans and seven Chinese, were landed. So far as is known no Americans were on board.

The Glengyle carried a valuable cargo of 14,000 tons. The steamer was valued at £235,000.

The Glengyle, which was homeward bound from Shanghai, was sunk in the Mediterranean on Sunday. This was her second voyage.

The Glengyle was one of the largest steamships which have been sunk since the activity of submarines in the Mediterranean became pronounced. Her gross tonnage was 9,395. She was owned by the Glen Line of Glasgow, and was the largest steamship of that line.

The Glengyle had been in service only a comparatively short time, having been built at Newcastle in 1914. She was 500 feet long, 62 feet beam and 34 feet deep. Her master was Captain Webster.

Government Boat Lost

The British steamship St. Oswald has been sunk.

The St. Oswald was in the service of the British Government and presumably was sunk in the Mediterranean. Her movements had not been reported since October 13, on which date she arrived at Mudros Island from Alexandria.

The St. Oswald was 361 feet long, of 3,810 tons gross. She was built in 1905, and owned by the British & Foreign Steamship Company of Liverpool.

Jap. Freighter a Victim.

TOKIO, Jan. 3.—The owner of the Japanese freighter Kenkoku Maru, has been adviced that the vessel was sunk by a German submarine in the Mediterranean on December 29. The members of the crew were landed at Cannes, France. The Kenkoku Maru was under charter by a foreigner. She was loaded with hemp at Manila and sailed for Italy and England.

The Kenkoku Maru was a steamer of 2,109 tons. She sailed from Manila on November 6.

Cabinet Meeting Postponed

(Canadian Press Special)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The President cancelled the proposed Cabinet meeting, because the state department has not yet gathered complete information on the Persia. The President's private secretary issued the following statement. "The President and Secretary of State are taking every possible means to obtain facts in this grave matter and will act just as soon as infomation is obtained."

Immediate Action

The destruction of the Persia, following closely upon the crisis precipitated by the Ancona disaster, may result in the United States determing to settle immediately all the questions involved in the submarine warfare. The subject is expected to find its way to the floor of the house and senate tomorrow, when congress reconvenes after the holiday.

Strong Action Contemplated

The United States is represented as being prepared and determined to take any action that the facts concerning the Persia yet to be established may warrant. Officials still are trying to view the situation with an open mind, but it is apparent that they are disturbed by the reports received from consular agents at Alexandria and Cairo, Egypt. Every effort will be made to establish the truth of the report that he Persia was torpedoed without warning. Secretary of State Lansing contemplates taking no step until the complete details are known.

Informal Inquiries

Secretary Lansing has instructed Ambassador Penfield, at Vienna, to make informal inquiries which might lead to the establishment of the identity of the submarine whch sank the Persia, or the receipt of information concerning the circumstances of the attack.

The secretary acted upon an indication received from an undisclosed source that no submarines of other than Austrian nationality were known to be operating near the point where the Persia went down.

BROTHERS DROWNED AT ALEXANDRIA BAY

ALEXANDRIA BAY, Jan. 3.—Roy and Homer Parmater, brothers, employed by George C. Boldt at his farm on Wellesley Island, were drowned shortly after 11 o'clock last night when skim ice cut their boat as they were on their way from this place to their home. The ice had begun to form early in the evening and was about an eighth of an inch thick when the men started across the river. Roy Parmeter was 37 years of age, and Homer 33.

The skiff which the men had borrowed to make the trip to this village was an old one and the sharp ice cut a deep gash through the wood about 'midships. Although the men were within 35 or 40 feet of The Birches where they expected to land, they were unable to swim the distance on account of the ice and because they were bundled in heavy clothes. They were drowned in about seven or eight feet of water. Their bodies were discovered early this morning by Supt. H. L. Lawrence of the Boldt farms, who immediately notified Coroner Forsythe of this place. The coroner went to the scene of drowning, but decided not to hold on inquest, as it was evident that the death of the men was accidental.

OFF TO A GOOD START

No more enjoyable New Year's celebration was held in Belleville than that enjoyed by the soldiers at the Khaki Club on Saturday night. The poster in the Barracks, which said "Don't miss the Khaki Club to-night" was enough to bring every member of the battalion there, for part of the evening at least, and most of them were there from start to finish. The always brilliant and attractive rooms were of anything, more so, as the result of Sergt. Donaldson's Christmas decorations. Nor were they confined to the ground floor rooms; every room proclaimed its silent invitation to come in, enjoy a game, some music, a good sing, a smoke, a chat, the gramaphone, or the refreshments. A lively programme, arranged by Mrs. MacColl and assisted by Miss Tuit, Miss Jean Caldwell and Miss Grant, was augmented by several numbers provided by the men. This was downstairs while upstairs a gramaphone loaned by the officers provided entertainment of all kinds for those who could not get near enough to hear the programme downstairs. The records, which were in great variety, were kindly loaned by Mr. Baldwin of Campbell street.

A general late pass was extended to all ranks for the evening, and after the programme the usual abundance of refreshments, for which the Club has become famous, were served to the men by members of the Club and their friends who had provided them.

If the way one spends New Year Day is typical of the way the whole year is to be spent, it speaks well for the kind of time the members of the 80th are to have before they leave Belleville.

CUSTOMS REVENUE SHOWS BIG INCREASE

In December Nearly Double That of Dec., 1914—For Year Will Gain 20 Million

OTTAWA, Jan. 3—Customs revenue continues to show large increases over the concluding months of last year. For the month just closed customs receipts totalled $9,132,654, an increase of $4,513,856, or nearly 100 per cent. over December of last year. For the nine months of the fiscal year the customs revenue has totalled $71,721,303, an increase of $12,891,684, or about 23 per cent., as compared with the corresponding nine months of last year.

For the full fiscal year the customs revenue should at the present rate show an increase of more than twenty millions as compared with the preceding fiscal year.

BELLEVILLE

Dr. Wilson, A.D.D.C., has returned from Kingston.

A dental parade of 40 men of the 86th Battalion took place this morning.

Capt. Doyle of the 155th Battalion, has left for Kingston.

The 155th Battalion took in about 25 recruits yesterday.

Ptes J. Raymond and E. Allan of 80th Battalion, were admitted to the Napanee Hospital.

H. D. Sands of the 80th Battalion, was admitted to the Picton Hospital.

Battalion Orders

Officer for to-day—Lt. J. H. Alp; to-morrow—Lt. A. G. Scott.

Sergt. for today—Cpl. Coon, A. Co.; to-morrow—Cpl. Loyer, A. Co.

Corpl. for to-day—Cpl. Dunlop, A. Co.; to-morrow—Cpl. Woodstock, A. Co.

Lieut. Nurse of the 80th Battalion, has been transferred to the 155th Battalion.

About 10 men of the 80th Battalion were given leave yesterday to vote on the elections in their home town. A large number of them went to Brockville.

Rifles and ammunition have been issued to the 80th Battalion so that the men will soon start musketry practice at the rifle ranges.

Recruits are coming in every day now for the 80th Battalion. Last week they received 22 recruits. Yesterday's recruits amounted to 7.

The kitchen at the 80th Battalion barracks, are to be extended and the officers expect to make alterations that will entail an expense of $300. This shows that the men of the 80th Battalion are being well looked after by the C. O. and officers.

The men of the 80th get good appetites for breakfast, by having physical drill every morning before breakfast. On these cold mornings they march to the Armouries instead of drilling outside.

KINGSTON

It is rumored that the 80th Battalion, of Belleville, will be sent shortly to Malta, as one of three battalions to go from the 3rd division. The newspapers have been unable to confirm the rumor, but it comes from a very good source, and there may be much truth in it. The 80th are fit to do service anywhere and would welcome an opportunity to go into active service in any part of the present war.

Capt. Watson of the 80th Battalion, is in the city qualifying for his F. O. certificate before assuming his duties as senior major of the 80th Battalion, which will be welcome news to his many friends in Kingston.

Maj. Gray, is to be junior major of the 80th Battalion, and Capt. Caudwell is to be adjutant, succeeding Capt. Watson.

Lieut. E. V. Mullin, who has been doing duty with the 80th Battalion, came to the city on Saturday and today was attached to the 146 Battalion, for duty and instruction. Lieut. Mullin took the Royal School of Cavalry, Toronto, and will on January 24th take the course in the P.S.I. for infantry qualification.

Pte. Carman of the 21st Battalion of this city and Corp. A. Kane, a member of the Third Company, Canadian Engineers, have fallen in action. Pte. Carman is 37 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children. Corp. Kane was a member of the School of Mining, Queen's University, before he enlisted for overseas.

Mr. G. B. Haines, of Gananoque Grand Master of the Prentice Boys' Society, is in the city this evening and will install the officers of Maiden City Lodge of this city.

AN ERROR

In the obituary of the late Wm. Joseph Ross, which appeared in The Intelligencer, yesterday the name of Mrs. W. P. McCondon should have read Mrs. Mary McMahon, of Toronto.

FUNERAL OF MISS LESLIE

The funeral of Miss Eva Mildred Leslie took place from the 4th concession of Thurlow yesterday. Services at St. Andrew's church, 5th concession of Thurlow, were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Wilson of Canifton. Interment took place in the St. Andrew's burying ground. The bearers were Messrs. F. Walker, R. Brown, R. Wilson, C. Garrison, B. Martin, S. Way. There was a large attendance.

LAID AT REST

Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Rev. John Ferguson took place in this city and was attended by many relatives and friends. The remains were conveyed from his daughter's residence on George street to the Tabernacle Methodist church, where an impressive service was held, conducted by several ministers who were in atetndance. The ministerial gentlemen present at the obsequies were Revs. Moore, Kenny, Clarke, Osborne, Cleary, Egan, Wilson, Hubly, Campbell, Sharpe, Jones, Anderson, Currie, Joblin, Robeson, and Dr. Baker. At the church several of the ministers present took part in the service and all referred to the deceased as a minister highly esteemed in the church of his choice. After the services the remains were conveyed to Belleville cemetry for interment. The bearers were Revs. Messrs. Moore, Sharpe, Clarke, Osborne, Wilson and Anderson.

Ameliasburg—Mr. W. W. Anderson was reelected Reeve by a small majority over Mr. J. H. Parliament.

Local Option Results

Local option as a temperance measure is still a considerable force in Ontario, as shown by yesterday's vote in forty-seven municipalities. Out of thirty-six heard from there were only five straight defeats. In thirteen municipalities which gave majorities the vote is ineffective because it lacked the necessary three-fifths required by the act.

Local option by-laws were carried in seven towns, five villages and four townships. Local option was sustained in repeal contests in Owen Sound, Finch village, and North Gower Township. Results of the repeal contest in Newboro' are yet to come. No city went dry. Contests were held in eight cities, and three of them gave straight majorities against the by-law. The three-fifths clause keeps the others wet. The cities voting were: Belleville, Brantford, Fort William, Niagara Falls, Port Arthur, Sarnia, Stratford and Woodstock.

Relief For The Needy Belgians

On the evening of December 19th, the Rev. F. G. Joblin, pastor of the Bayside Circuit, made such an earnest appeal to the Whit's Church congregation for aid in buying flour to load the ship in Montreal for the seven million starving Belgians in Belgium that after the service Mr. I. Waldron and Mrs. L. Hall decided to canvass the appointment. They met with a ready response in the following contributions, which they forwarded to those in Montreal, who have the work in hand, and received their receipt:

GUNPOWDER IN WAR.

For Centuries Its Use Was Opposed In the Name of Humanity.

There was a period when any kind of "explosive" fighting in war was considered barbarous. The discovery of gunpowder put a stop to the old fashioned method of attack, in which only missiles and sharp-edged weapons were considered ethical, but gunpowder did not come into approval without a struggle. In fact, it was under the "humanity" ban for almost three centuries.

This remarkable compound of saltpeter, sulphur and charcoal, which was given its first tryout at the siege of Constantinople in 1453, had been known to both the chemist and the soldier for a hundred years or more. It is said to have been discovered by Roger Bacon in England about the year 1200 and by a German monk named Schwarz twenty years later. Another independent discoverer of the same dangerous mixture was an unknown and uncelebrated Moor, whose secret was ultimately carried into Europe in the fourteenth century. Even he was not the first to make an explosive compound. The Chinese "beat him to it," having used this same kind of mixture for rocket signals before the Christian era.

The fall of Constantinople was brought about by the use, the wholly unethical and altogether barbarous use, of cannon balls, and it was not until about a century later that the world gave its full sanction to the killing of men by means of gunpowder.

"LITTLE BULGARIA" GONE.

Toronto Colony Fled Before Declaration of War.

The statement is made in Toronto on the best of authority that one day in September, the Bulgarian consul to the United States paid a quiet little visit to Toronto, and that five days later, the teeming colony known to Torontonians as "Little Bulgaria" was deserted. They will say that as Bulgaria was "sold" to Germany months ago, the warning was issued, and the German agents in the United States secretly got all the Bulgarians over the border. Why? Because every Bulgarian is anti-ally, and several thousand Bulgarians would greatly increase the German and anti-British forces in the States, for political purposes.

They are gone, the Bulgarians. We know that. But those merchants who remain will tell you that the colony was not deserted all of a sudden, but gradually, covering the past year or more, as the Bulgarians, who are section men and laborers, went south in search of work. Ask Gospodin Georgieff, who keeps the general store. Ask Gospodin Hadji Peroff, the banker and grocer. They will say there is no deceit, no cunning intent in this strange flitting of a whole village.

They will tell you further: "Bulgarians, except kings and counsellors, have had seven centuries of war. There is no one of us who has not in his family some dear dead to make him curse kings and all their counsellors. Do not charge us with patriotism. It is unjust."

Perhaps the sight of so many uniforms in Toronto has driven them southward to a land ideally free of uniforms. At any rate—

These things are gone: the coming of a winter night, cold and bleak, with the wind crying in off the lake so near to King street. And at that point in King street where it turns suddenly and throws you into an old and shabby town, not like Toronto in any respect, with narrow streets turning in strange angles, with dim little alleys shoved in among the shops, the sight of an old convent tower with a cross on it, there in the grey dark—it is all some corner of an old-world town. It is the only part of Toronto, except the fashionable areas, where the streets do not run at right angles. It is the only part of Toronto that is jammed, jumbled, and tumbled. It is the only place in Canada, save some old parts of Montreal and in towns of Quebec that would make the poor of the old world feel at home.

On the coming of the cold night, the little shops all lighted up their steamy windows. Out of all the lodging houses came the hundreds of men, who slept in the day in order to enjoy the night.

They came directly to the restaurants. The street, for King street, except when a frightened street car rattled through, was like the village's main street, was crowded with men, foreign men of strange countenances, fierce moustachios, colored weskits, braided coats, tinted shirts. These were the Bulgarians who built railways all summer and spent their savings all winter in sleeping by day and in crowded restaurants all night. Now they are gone.—Gregory Clark in Toronto Star Weekly.

BIG MASS MEETING IN THE CITY HALL

Mayor Elect and Aldermen Address Meeting—Mayor Panter Presided—Pledges Made by Mayor And Aldermen Elect—Soldiers Ask For Recruits

The city hall was crowded to the doors last night with men and a few women all anxious to get the election returns. On account of the heavy vote that was polled and because in some wards it was necessary to count four sets of ballots it was quite late before complete returns were in. By eight o'clock it was definitely known that local option was defeated, the vote being 1318 for and 1012 against, giving a majority of 306 which was 80 votes short of the required three-fifths.

A recruiting meeting was held during the early part of the evening when Mr. Sandford spoke in the interests of recruiting.

After it became practically certain that Mr. Ketcheson was elected Mayor, his majority then being 482, the mayor-elect addressed the meeting. He thanked the electors for the splendid vote given him and urged all the citizens to stand by and help him and the aldermen in their work of building up and improving Belleville in every way. He spoke of the many advantages that Belleville enjoyed and the opportunities for advancement. He then urged the citizens to support the soldiers in every way they could and urged every young man who is physically fit to offer themselves for service at the front. He urged the fathers to let their boys go and stated that of his three sons two were already in France while the other was a member of the 80th Battalion now in training.

Mayor Panter then congratulated Mr. Ketcheson on the result of the election and predicted for him a successful year as Mayor of this city. Mr. Panter spoke briefly and well and said that after he had had required rest, if the people of Belleville wanted him to act in an official capacity again he would feel bound to do so. He had already served for twenty years in the city council. Mr. Panter then acted as chairman of the meeting and introduced the aldermen-elect in his own original way.

Mr. Whalen was the first of the aldermen to speak and in a few well chosen words he thanked the citizens for electing him and promised to work for the best interests of the city.

Mr. Woodley followed Mr. Whalen and said that he had served Belleville to the best of his ability for the past year and would try to do so again. He had been in charge of the water works and his record in that capacity could speak for itself. He also thanked the electors for their support.

Mr. Smith was the next speaker and after thanking the electors for the honor conferred upon him he spoke of the work of the council during the past year and eulogized Mr. Panter for his good work in the mayor's chair. Mr. Smith promised to give the city his best services.

Mr. St. Charles thanked his friends for their support and stated that he had as his special duty during the past year the work of making the fire department an effective organization. He believed he had succeeded in accomplishing this, as Belleville now had a thoroughly efficient department that would help reduce the insurance rates materially.

Mr. Deacon urged the people to take more interest in municipal affairs and advocated municipal mass meetings three or four times a year where the elector could find out what was being done by the municipal council. He said he had worked for local ooption and would continue to do so until Belleville was finally voted dry. He thought there should be a reduction of ten in the number of licences in this city. He said Belleville was known as a distillery city, which he thought should not be. He maintained that the work of the water works and gas departments should be given more publicity, for he thought that the people were not well enought informed on these subjects.

Mr. Platt said he had been none to active during the past year, because of the death of his little child that had kept him away from the council for three or four months. However, he and the other members of the council had done their best, and he was sure the incoming council would do so too. He had been criticised for raising his voice in protest of giving a grant of $2,000 to the 155th, but he thought he was justified. He said he was a patriot of English blood, and he wanted to do all he could to forward the cause of Britain, but he felt he owed it to the citizens of Belleville to find out what was to be done with the money they paid out. (The grant made by the city to the 155th was $500) He said the rumpus that followed, was now ancient history. He believed that the city council should be a dignified body of men and that dignity was essential in the council chamber. He thought the people of Belleville would give dollar for dollar with the people of other parts of Ontario. He advocated the building of good roads and general improvements. In closing, Mr. Platt said that he believed every citizen, if need be, would shoulder his musket and fight for his country and he said we must all do our part.

Mr. Earle thanked the electors for their support, and promised faithful service. He said he had been told that there was graft in the handling of the city's affairs, in connection with the Victoria avenue pavement. He maintained that the work had been done as cheap as possible, and no one got any rake off on the job. His especial work of the year had been the care of the park, and he thought the improvements made, would be a lasting monument to the administration of Mr. Panter.

Mr. Duckworth was not present, when called upon, and the meeting ended by singing God Save the King.

Trained Men Only For Officers

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The war office announces that hereafter commissions as officers will be granted only to men who have completed their course as recruits, and that preference will be given to men who have served with the expeditionary force.

This order, which presumably will apply to all units organized under the compulsory system, is expected to make possible more rapid training of troops, as well as to insure a satisfactory standard of qualification for officers.

A British Volunteer

By F. A. MITCHEL

Ralph Sackville left London to the plaudits of crowds of people who were viewing his regiment march to the station to be entrained for the coast and thence to Belgium. In six months he returned under very different circumstances. There were no crowds to greet him. Instead of the handkerchiefs waving from the windows and the sounds of martial music many of the blinds were closed, and there was only the rattle of the cab in which he was driven through the streets.

Sackville had lost a foot and ankle and was discharged from the ranks. He had been among the first to respond to his country's call, leaving the service of a bank in which he was employed, to join the colors. His position in the bank was still open to him, but it required him to stand all day paying checks, and he was unable to fill it. Indeed, there were few positions he could fill. The only occupation that occurred to him as suited to his altered condition was that of chauffeur. He was a gentleman without means and shrank from doing menial work, but it was the best he could do, and he hobbled to a garage and secured a position.

One day he was directed to go to a hotel and call for Miss Amelia Duncan, an American young lady traveling with her invalid mother, who was confined to her room under her daughter's care, assisted by a nurse. The daughter needed the air and proposed to drive out every day when the weather admitted. This was not very often, for the sun seldom shines in England. She had called for a reliable chauffeur whom she might use when required.

On this first afternoon that Sackville drove Miss Duncan they became cornered in a street crowded with people who were witnessing the departure of troops for the war. Drums were beating, flags were flying, and the air was filled with cheers.

"Isn't it splendid!" said Miss Duncan, partly to herself and partly to her chauffeur. "If I were a man I would surely go to the war."

"And either leave your bones in Belgium or return minus an arm or a leg or an eye or perhaps all three," replied the chauffeur.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Miss Duncan in disgust. "Have you no patriotism?"

"I don't believe in a nation relying solely on its best men in case of war. I think every man of proper age should be liable to military duty. These soldiers are all volunteers."

"That's what I like about them," replied Miss Duncan. "Our war between the states was fought by volunteers. Our manliest men enlisted."

"And bore the brunt of the struggle for two years, when those on the northern side began to pay the laggards to enlist. Just before the war closed men were enlisting and deserting to get the bounty. Do you consider that justice?"

"I don't know anything about that war. I was not born till many years after it had closed. It must be nice to be one of those noble men who volunteer. Don't you think so?"

"No, I don't."

"Then you admit that you belong to the class of laggards?"

"I don't admit that either. I believe in conscription."

"There's nothing noble in a man going to war because he is obliged to go."

"War is a duty, not something to be proud of. It is a horror. Did you ever see men standing in line ready to face death?"

"No, of course not."

"Every face is serious, solemn. Not a word is spoken. They are like prisoners facing a firing squad, only with a prisoner death is certain, while with them it is probable, or, what is worse, they may expect to be maimed for life."

"Are they cowards?"

"No; they are men, but when the fight is on they cease to be men and become wild beasts."

"It's a shame for you to talk in this way. Instead of sitting comfortably in an auto you should be among those noble fellows marching to war."

"It will not be so fine when they return."

"They will come back victorious with their battle stained banners flying, greeted with the applause they deserve."

"Many of them will never come back. Many will hobble back. If the regiment returns as a unit most of its members will be men who are not marching now. Quite likely they will be conscripts; possibly they will have been paid to go."

By this time the troops had passed and the auto was released. Miss Duncan ordered her chauffeur to drive her to her hotel. She did not like his talk and resolved not to have him drive her again. When she alighted he got down and handed her out. She noticed that he limped.

"What's the matter with your foot?" she asked.

"It's made of wood."

"How did you lose the real one?"

"Fighting in Belgium."

"Oh, how horrible!"

Then, red as a rose, she stalked into the hotel.

The next day the young lady sent for Sackville to drive her out again, and, after berating him for not telling her that he had been a soldier, she forgave him. After all, he didn't lose so much by serving his country. He lost a foot but he gained an American heiress for a wife.

A Deathbed Promise

By F. A. MITCHEL

"I had hoped, my child," said Atkinson, "to find paying dirt for you before pegging out, but it is denied me. If I could have left you rich I would not now mind handing in my chips. But remember this, my little girl, if there's any such thing as the dead helping the living I'll help you."

These were the last words spoken by Tom Atkinson to his daughter, Ellen. He passed into unconsciousness and died the same night. Ellen had been with him in the gold fields for years and had suffered with him one disappointment after another till to her they were no longer disappointments, but expected happenings. But till the very last he had expected to strike it rich and when he was taken down with his last illness believed that he would get well enough to dig a little lower in a hole he was sinking and would strike the continuation of a lead that was paying handsomely but a hundred feet away. When death came he had not reached the goal and left his child with but a small bag of dust, not worth $50.

However, Ellen possessed something she valued more than gold—the heart of an honest, energetic young man, who was clerking in a store not far from the property on which her father had done his last digging and where he had built the cabin in which he and his daughter lived. Mark Hosmer married Ellen a few days after her father had been laid to rest, and they lived together in the abode the bride had occupied ever since her father had been seized with his last infatuation.

Hosmer was willing to work, but the district was not producing the gold that had been expected, and sales in the store were running down. His salary had been reduced and had reached a point where they found it difficult to make ends meet. One night when Mark came home from work he told his wife that he feared his employer was about to discharge him and do all the work himself, since the business would not warrant an assistant.

At 2 o'clock the next morning Ellen awakened her husband and asked him if he heard anything unusual. After listening he said that he did not and asked her why she had asked the question. She replied that every now and again she had heard a sound like earth thrown from a shovel.

"Go to sleep, my dear," he replied. "You lived so many years in the sound of dirt thrown out of holes in the ground that it has got on your nerves."

The next night Ellen fancied she heard the same sound, but, since Mark had not heard it and thinking she would trouble him by calling his attention to what he seemed to consider a crick in her brain, she did not wake him. But she listened herself. She would hear the sound, apparently not far from the house, of a shovelful of earth thrown on the ground. Then all was silent. In a few minutes she would hear another shovelful tossed, it seemed to her, from below, as though some one were digging in a trench. Once or twice she thought she heard a pick strike a stone, but of this she was not sure. She could not locate the sounds, but it seemed to her that they came from a corner of the lot in rear of the cabin.

She was tempted the next morning to tell her husband that she had heard the sounds repeated, but refrained, realizing that he would think something had gone wrong with her. As soon as he had departed for the store she went out to the rear of what was a four acre lot, half expecting to find that some claim jumper had been digging for gold. No sign of earth thrown up appeared.

There was a thick undergrowth separating her from where she had seemed to hear the sounds, and passing through it she came to the extreme corner of the lot. The ground was just as it had always been. The surface was uneven, and a ledge of red stone a few feet high furnished a convenient seat. She sat down on it and idly picked up a loose piece of the stone. Examining it, she noticed that it presented a rather singular appearance. Her father had often shown her such pieces of ore, which, he said, were very rich in gold.

Ellen took the fragment to the cabin and put it in her bureau drawer; then, taking her father's pick and shovel, she went back to the spot from which she had taken the stone and began to dig.

Since the place was concealed by undergrowth, Mark did not notice the excavation. Ellen, who had had a long experience in the appearance of ore, dug on till she came to something that looked worth examination. Taking specimens, the next day, instead of digging, she carried them to an assayer.

One evening when Mark came home from work looking distressed on account of the dullness of trade, which foreboded his discharge, Ellen threw her arms around his neck, exclaiming:

"Mark, we are rich!"

"What do you mean?"

"Come and see."

She took him to the hole she had dug and, picking up a piece of ore, told him that she had had a specimen from the place assayed and it had shown $600 to the ton.

"How came you," he asked, "to dig here?"

Bowing her head reverently, she told him that her father had guided her, and when he asked how she reminded him of the dying promise and the sounds she had heard at night.

MAYORALTY ELECTION.

The result of the voting yesterday for the choice of a gentleman to fill the Mayor's Chair for the year 1916 gives Mr. Ketcheson a handsome majority of over 600, and had the electors a proper regard for themselves and the future industrial development of the city the figures would have been doubled.

When the apathy manifested of late by the electors on matters affecting city affairs is considered, the city may congratulate itself on the result, and Mr. Ketcheson may feel flattered at the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens.

The Intelligencer extends its congratulations, feeling assured that the newly-elected Mayor will conduct the affairs of the city with credit to himself and with the aid of the Aldermen with whom he will be associated, to the benefit of the city.

THE LOCAL OPTION FIGHT.

The battle is over, and after one of the most earnest and exciting election fights that Belleville has witnessed for many years, the Local Optionists lost the battle, lacking some eighty votes required under the law to enforce the closing of all licensed hotels in the city.

Local optionists deserve credit for the life and energy thrown into the contest. Their thorough organization and work had much to do in securing the large vote polled. Had there been the same organization on the other side of the question, which we are assured there was not, the result might have been different.

Anti-local optionists now realize the truth of what The Intelligencer pointed out when the Rowell fake scheme of "Abolish the Bar" was submitted to the electors, that there were hundreds of people who voted against that policy who would, if the question of a restriction of the liquor traffic was submitted to them upon its merits, vote for it. At the time of the general election when the "Banish the Bar" question was submitted to the people, its adoption would have involved the turning out of power a government that had placed upon the Statute Book the most salutory license laws that were ever passed, and reinstated a party that for some thirty years had been using for party purposes the power vested in them to grant licenses by exacting from license holders money to assist them in retaining power, that could not be tolerated for any future time, hence the vote against the Rowell policy was as large as it was.

The total vote of 2,330 speaks for itself. The relative merits of local option and license were thoroughly discussed, and although the majority of the votes cast favored local option, yet it was not decisive enough to insure a proper enforcement of the law, had it been enacted, and a poorly enforced local option law is admitted to be a curse to the community.

THE DOG.

Stuart Taggart's wonderful painting, "Guilty," which has been exhibited from one end of the Dominion to the other, is a life's story in itself, and perhaps the strongest part of the picture is the dog. When the subject of the painting is apparently at his last stand and is contemplating suicide, the dog, a noble brute, places a paw upon the man's knee and stays the finger upon the trigger.

The dog has always been man's truest friend.

The best friend a man has in the world may turn against him and become his enemy. His son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and our good name, may become traitors to their faith. The money that a man has he may lose. It flies away from him, perhaps when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees to do us honor when success is with us may be the first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its cloud upon our heads. The one absolutely unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog. A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground, where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer. He will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert, he remains. When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces, he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journey through the heavens. If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies; and when the last scene of all comes and death takes the master in its embrace and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by his graveside will the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad, but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even in death.

Congratulations to Mayor-elect Ketcheson.

Well, the election is over with, anyway. Some satisfaction.

The election of Aldermen didn't even cause a ripple of excitement.

President Wilson will probably practice letter writing again. He must be a busy man.

The King of Greece is reported seriously ill. Was it the recent elections that caused this illness?

The German submarine warfare seems to be directed against non-combatants. Perhaps they think it is safer.

President Poincare of France, in his New Year's message to the officers and soldiers, says that 1916 will be the year of victory. The German dream of conquering France is a long way from realization.

Ald. Whalen led the poll in Foster Ward with four votes, Ald. St. Charles 3, Ald. Smith 2, and the remaining Aldermen 1 each. Heavy vote in that ward for Aldermen, although it is a little higher than in Murney Ward, No. 13, where six of the candidates received one vote each and the remainder received none. The reason for the light vote was that many of the people thought it was unnecessary to vote for the Aldermen as they supposed they were elected by acclamation.

MRS. D. FORBES ANGUS PRESIDENT AT HER DESK

"CANADA has done wonderful. They are doing a very great share in the work," declared Her Majesty the Queen of England, founder of the Queen Mary Needlework Guild, to a lady who visited the organization's headquarters in London. In those words Her Majesty expressed her delight at the work of the Canadian Branch of the Guild, which has its headquarters at 116 Windsor Street, Montreal, and through the enthusiastic and energetic work of its officers has added to Canada's reputation for generosity.

Since Her Majesty expressed her approval of the Canadian Branch's work, this branch has won further laurels by one of the most original and successful of journalistic ventures, the organization of "The Soldiers' Gazette," a twenty-four page weekly which carries ninety-six columns of news matter gathered from every province and city of the Dominion, and served out in a way worthy of the most competent of editors. The paper is printed in both English and French, the edition "Le Patrie du Soldat" being forwarded for the French-Canadian Battalions, and it has a total circulation of over 15,000 copies weekly.

It carries a special page for each province of the Dominion.

Upon the receipt of an advance copy of "The Soldiers' Gazette," Her Royal Highness, the Duchess of Connaught, wrote:

"I congratulate the Canadian Branch of Queen Mary's Needlework Guild on the publication of the first copy of their weekly paper for the Canadian troops, and I feel sure that not only the men at the front, but those in England and in Canada, will be most grateful. I shall have much pleasure in informing Her Majesty of your enterprise.

"LOUISE MARGARET."

Since then, Her Royal Highness has written, saying that the Queen has read the first copy of the Soldiers' Gazette and thought it most interesting.

Major-General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, wrote to Mrs. D. Forbes Angus, the President of the Canadian Branch, Q.M.N.G.:

"Dear Mrs. Angus,—Permit me to congratulate you, and, through you, the Canadian Branch of the Queen Mary's Needlework Guild, on the splendid enterprise of founding a weekly newspaper for the Canadian troops.

"Nothing cheers the heart of our gallant boys at the front, or in Britain, more than to receive 'good news from home.'

"You have our sincere and hearty support in your good cause. These little heart touches are what upbuild our soldiers."

Brigadier-General Wilson, General Officer Commanding the 4th Military Division, also testified to his hearty approval of the project; while Lieutenant-Colonel C. N. Perrault, Commandant of Kingston Military College, wrote asking for the honor of being appointed the "Soldiers' Gazette" Kungston correspondent.

So much importance was attached to the venture by Major-General Hughes that he appointed an officer in London to the duty of supervising the distribution of the fifteen thousand copies that are forwarded weekly to the men in England and France.

Letters "To the Editor," from the men at the front, all expressive of the deepest appreciation of this endeavor on the part of the Guild to keep them in touch with current events in Canada are beginning to pour in, and the ladies who undertook the venture are now assured that it is a popular one and deserving of being maintained until the end of the war.

In the maintenance of the work the Guild is confronted with the need of funds. When the project was first considered it was felt that the money contributed to the Guild by the people of Canada and intended for the alleviation of suffering among the soldiers and sailors of the Empire, could not be diverted to this end. It was, therefore, necessary to establish an independent fund, to be raised by public subscription. With this object a committee was formed and Miss Marguerite Shaughnessy, of 905 Dorchester Street West, Montreal, was appointed honorary treasurer and authorized to receive donations. Owing to the nature of the distribution organization, and the fact that there are many brave Canadian soldiers who have no one at home to remember them and place their names upon the "Soldiers' Gazette" lists as subscribers, it was decided not to accept any individual subscriptions, but to forward some fifteen thousand copies weekly which would be distributed among the officers and men by the military authorities. To-day there is not a Canadian soldier overseas who does not have the opportunity of keeping in touch with the affairs of his home town through the "Soldiers' Gazette."

As the expenses are heavy it is the wish of the organizers that all who approve of the project contribute, through Miss Shaughnessy, their share toward its maintenance.

Not alone in the founding of "The Soldiers' Gazette" has the Canadian Branch of Queen Mary's Needlework Guild established its claim on public sympathy and support.

The Guild was formed by Her Majesty the Queen upon the outbreak of the war to assist in the relief of the suffering caused thereby. Donations are sent from all parts of the world to Friary Court, St. James' Palace, London, Eng., where the Queen personally supervises their distribution. Her Majesty's chief aim is to meet the greatest need, and the contributions are at once forwarded to where they are most required. On this account it is not desirable that donations be specially designated, as Her Majesty is kept informed as to where the articles may be distributed to the best advantage. Lists of requirements are issued weekly from Friary Court, and the endeavor of the branches is to fill these needs as promptly as possible. Recently a large number of Christmas puddings, cakes, etc., were received at the Montreal headquarters and as the officers considered that these were more in the form of personal gifts to the Canadians, they were forwarded to the Canadian Field Comforts Association at Shorncliffe, England, to be forwarded direct to the Canadians in the trenches.

Since its inception, the Canadian Branch has forwarded weekly hundreds of parcels and cases of goods, socks, mufflers, housewives, and a thousand and one similar devices, all calculated to bring some comfort to some soldier or sailor. The response of the public to the fund for the purchase of such comforts has been a most generous one, and quite recently, Mrs. Forbes Angus received from Lady Annie Lawley, the Honorary Secretary, an illuminated parchment certificate bearing testimony to Her Majesty's gratification at the Branch's excellent work, and accompanied by the following letter:

"Dear Madam,—

"I am commanded by Her Majesty the Queen, to send you the accompanying certificate as a mark of Her Majesty's appreciation of the valuable services rendered by you and your workers of Queen Mary's Needlework Guild.

"I remain, yours faithfully,
"ANNIE LAWLEY,
"Hon. Secretary."

The officers of the Canadian Branch are: Patronesses, H. M. the Queen, H.R.H., the Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn; Hon. President in Canada, Lady Mackenzie, Toronto; President, Mrs. D. Forbes Angus, Montreal; 1st Vice-President, Mrs. Herbert Drummond, Vancouver; Hon. Treas., Mrs. John Turnbull, Montreal; Hon. Secy., Miss C. Welland Merritt, St. Catharines, Ont.; Hon. Treas., Mrs. Robert Rogers, Ottawa.

All communications should be addressed Headquarters, 116 Windsor.

CANADA'S ARMY

Canada's going to increase her contingent to a total of 500,000 men. In Napoleon's time such an army alone was thought great enough to conquer the world—Buffalo Express.

MOCKERY

The text of the Ancona note follows generally the forecasts. It is difficult to see the justification for the satisfaction that is reported from Washington. The note sounds as if the Austrians were making mockery of our protests and of our dead.—Buffalo Express.

WHEAT CROP OF CANADA

The only countries in the world that grow more wheat than Canada at the present time are the United States and Russia, so we occupy the third place in the wheat-producing countries of the world. This fact is pointed out in the annual number of The Monetary Times by Mr. James Carruthers, "Canada's wheat king." The United Kingdom requires to import 250,000,000 bushels of wheat yearly, so within a short time Canada will be able to supply all the breadstuff's the mother country needs. Another feature is the fact that the wheat grown in the north-west is admitted by millers to be the finest quality in the world and to-day it brings the highest prices in the leading wheat markets of Europe.

RUSSIA AND ROUMANIA

The situation of Roumania becomes more intelligible. It is very different from that of Greece. We can get at Greece only from the north. Roumania fears the fate of Serbia. How can she attack Bulgaria if Austria can pounce upon her from the rear? It is this aspect of the matter, we think, which explains Russia's latest move.

It was thought the Russians and the Austro-Germans had "dug in" for the winter. So they have, apparently, in the north, and no further activity in the region of Dvinsk need be expected till spring. But in the south—in eastern Galicia and Bukowina—Russia has resumed a formidable offensive. Why? Because Roumania must be cleared of danger in the rear before she can take a step forward, or before she can even co-operate with Russia by allowing her territory to be used as a bridge toward Bulgaria. And there is something more in it than taht Roumania is "out" for spoils in every direction. From Austria she wants Bukowina and Transylvania, and from Russia she wants Bessarabia. It is of little use for Russia to parry the demand for Bessarabia by promising Transylvania at the end of the war. Roumania will be apt to say: "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. Give us of what you have; not of what you exject to have." Thus it becomes necessary for Russia to occupy the countries north and west of the northern stretch of Roumania. Not only must the existing peril to Roumania in that quarter be removed, but Russia must see that she is in a position to "deliver the goods" before Roumania will accept Transylvania without getting Bessarabia.

The problem is both political and military. The quickest way for Russia to settle it would be to renew her bombardment of Varna, and land there an overwhelming force. She could deal with Roumania more cavalierly by showing that she could get along without her. But, of course, it is best to gain her co-operation, or at least her assured neutrality, under any circumstances. That is why guns boom in the region of Czernowitz.—Hamilton Spectator.

GLIMPSES INTO THE PAST

From The Intelligencer, Jan. 4, 1868.

A man named Sullivan who was injured in a scuffle at the Anglo-American Hotel has passed away. An inquest was held and statements taken from five witnesses, the inquest was then adjourned to the 7th instant.

An urgent note has been received by the French Government from Turkey in which it is stated that Russian agents are endeavoring to incite revolt among the Christian subjects of the Sultan and a vigorous protest is made by the Turkish Government.

Tumults have broken out in Portugal in consequence of the imposition of new taxes. The unpopularity of the new system has caused the Ministry to resign.

The Poets' Corner

ASK WHAT YOU WILL

By Frank Walcott Hutt.

Ask what you will, the wise world says;
Ask freely what you will of me;
The grace of knowledge, length of days,
A lease of power and mastery,
The praises of an honored name,
The seats of splendor and of fame.

Ask what you will; but you must share
The struggles of my men of toil,
And on my broad arenas dare
The contest and the ceaseless moil,
As thousands manfully have done
Ere battles have been fairly won.

Ask what you will; but you must climb
My hills by many of devious way,
To gain those fastnesses of Times
That have not yielded in a day;
To gain those fastnesses of Time
That have not yielded in a day;
And long the siege ere you shall win
At length your right of way therein.

Ask what you will, brave knight-at-arms;
Lo, I have untold wealth to give;
But every gift that lures and charms
Seeks only of the life you live,
Wherever led, however spent,
A just and fair equivalent.

How Italian Soldiers Behave.

The Italian soldier gets a very high character from Richard Bagot in his "Italians of To-day." "To see an Italian soldier drunk or in any way misconducting himself in a public place is exceedingly rare—so rare indeed that it would create a very disagreeable impression on the witnesses. Indeed, the men of any one of the more important Italian regiments who misconducted themselves in a public place would, in addition to the severe punishment administered by the regimental authorities, undergo a very bad time of it at the hands of their own comrades."—London Globe.

Her Idea.

"Ma, your bank account is overdrawn."

"What does that mean, pa?"

"Simply this. You've written checks for $13 more money than was in the bank."

"The idea! If $13 will break the bank I'd find another one to do business with. I supposed they had thousands of dollars on hand all the time."

Outlawed.

"How about paying me for that suit I made for you two years ago?" asked the tailor.

"You surely can't expect me to pay for that suit," said the impecunious young man. "Why, it's all out of style."

"Truth Dexter"

By

SIDNEY McCALL

CHAPTER XXIV—Continued.

Van led them into the drawing-room section, and began to busy himself with shawl-straps and parcels. The thought came suddenly that this extra expense was all from Van's own earnings, and that she was demanding of him the burden of two helpless women, in which his interest was doubtful. Neither Mrs. Dexter nor Van noticed her. She crept from the compartment, and stood flattened against the wall of the passageway. The two voices within came to her as from a great heated distance. That same strange dizziness was upon her, and she threw back her head, gasping for breath. Van's hand was on her shoulder.

"Truth, try not to worry too much! You look desperately ill! I am going to do the best for both of us,—believe that. It is a strange thing that you have demanded, and, for your own sake, I must be sure that you really understand your own motives. Talk it over with grandma as soon as you are strong enough. As for the other matter, I was a brute to speak as I did. I am ashamed." Truth threw one hand up to his breast.

"Don't say any more! I can't bear it! But—I don't care,—I don't! Let it go!—only—only—don't give me up!"

Van held her to him very gently. Mrs. Dexter caught a glimpse of them thus, and gave a great sigh of relief "Poor little one!" he whispered. "She doesn't quite know what she does want, does she?"

"Yes! I want—you!" sobbed Truth.

"All aboard!"

CHAPTER XXV

In The Woods

Dew still glistened in the shadows as Truth went, searching for the memories of her childhood, into the wide, silent treasure-house of the forest. At first, as if resentful of minor impressions, she was deliberately unobservant. Her old green sunbonnet with its dear, indelible stains of blackberry, persimmon, and walnut, she drew downward until her lowered eyes could see only a semi-circle of ground,—now flecked with dry grass, now bare,—and this kept moving with her, like the cardboard turf about the feet of a paper-doll. The vague, familiar odor of earth, mingled with that of the old bonnet and black shawl (the same she had worn on the beach at Biloxi), produced a partial anaesthesia, in which recent events dissolved and those of childhood began to take on luminous outlines.

It was one of those Southern March mornings when the wind, shamed into gentleness, wanders irresolute from hill to hill, or drowses with violets in the valleys. The main road, pink from its amalgamation of sand and clay, stretched out like a fallen scarf of dawn, and upon it the trees dropped leaf-shadows in olive mosaics. All was motionless save where a dewy spray flouted the unceremonious leave-taking of a bird. Far off a woodpecker tapped his hollow drum.

Bending her course now from the main road into the wood, she took a little pathless path down the slope, here embossed with countless tiny, scalloped terraces banked up with pine-straw and the roots of grass, and brimmed with pink-white sand. Between could be traced, in shadowy ripples, the water-courses of many a summer shower. As a child how often she had planted her iris banners, and worked out flower-tales of mediaeval chivalry upon these pigmy battlements! She was at the very scene of Ivanhoe's triumph,—her Ivanhoe of a twig, in leaf armor and acorn helmet. A spasmodic contraction caught at her throat. She flung back her head and clutched the nearest tree for support. It was a slender dogwood in full, white pomp of blossom.

"When dogwood's white,
Fishers' delight!"

That was what she and grandpa used to sing! The snowy discs fluttered down upon her in an indignant shower. She swayed a moment with the tree, and kept closed eyes until the cool, thin myrrh of the pines should have brought strength.

She strolled on now more slowly. The forgotten sunbonnet hung in an octagonal green bucket at the back of her neck. On every side great pines stood rigidly upright in the slanting soil, their brown, scarred trunks softening to purple in the broad belts of distance. From the roof overhead a pine-burr suddenly fell, as, in old Eastern temples, a bronze bolt, or knob, is loosed, at last, from mouldering timbers.

Truth stooped for the gift, but paused before she reached it, arrested by a new odor, a new, delicious, tantalizing fragrance that seemed a challenge, a call, the laughter of a hidden sprite. In an instant she had flung herself on her knees and was tearing straw and dry leaves from a heap at the edge of the nearest embankment. Her cheeks were crimson, her lips already parted for the cry of triumph. Yes, she found it,—a great cluster of the wild arbutus, waxen, with coral buds!

She knelt over, sniffing at them, taking in long, quivering breaths; then, prone on the earth, with one elbow deep in sand began quickly to pluck away each bit of straw and dead leaf. She marvelled for the hundredth time at the delicate adjustment of blossoms among such extraneous substances. Not a petal was scratched. The close, green foliage, richly fluted, and lined with thin, brown fur, was almost as wonderful as the flowers. After all, it was no less than a miracle that here, from a handful of sand caught up in a crescent of dead leaves, should spring a wreath of wax, enamel, and gems. Who taught the buds to draw red ichor from the same source that gave their shielding coats impervious harshness?

When the whole group lay clear, even to a circling border of bare earth, Truth rose and stood above it in silent adoration. Then she walked away, pulled down her bonnet over her eyes once more, and, turning, came back, pretending surprise at the discovery. At last she knelt again, selected one tiny, crimson bud-spray as trophy, and carefully, twig by twig, leaf by leaf, replaced about the others their rude covering. Her troubles had vanished; she was Truth, the child, once more.

Now she looked about her frankly. At the foot of the hill lay a dark, thick line of other trees than pines, a blue-green wall of huge magnolias, cypresses, tulip trees, and bay, these, with a thick undergrowth of glossy-leaved shrubs, marking the course of "the branch." Rich, moist odors rose among the pine-stems to greet her that indescribable earth-smell which is the incense of all true nature worshippers, and the more tangible hints of dipping resin, and the thick, oozing juices of gums. As her foot touched the first spongy outskirt, she said aloud, "O God, don't let the snakes bite me!" This prayer she had always uttered, when as a child she had ventured into the supposed lairs of the moccasin or rattlesnake. She felt nothing incongruous in it now, only the usual childish confidence that she was protected. The "branch" flowers are late, and none were here to welcome her except the wine-colored stars of the red bay. These she gloated over with eye, touch and nostril. The cinnamon-brown, clear water at her feet, gathered from hillside springs to creep in sunless convultions toward the distant river, reflected familiarly the silhouette of her light-poised figure. Naked cypress knees thrust themselves upward from round, soaked beds of moss and Mitchella vines, and intertwisted tree-roots made a chain of little islands across the sullen food. Truth, laughing in sheer delight, commenced the precarious passage. Half-way across she encountered an old friend, a magnolia, growing almost horizontally, with one supporting elbow in the stream. She leaned both arms on it to rest, and fell to caressing a well-remembered group of tree ferns.

Beyond the branch antoher hill sloped slowly and dimly upward among endless tiers of pine-pillars. Here fell, wafted an counter-currents of air, a new odor, an influence faint as yet, but irresistibly sweet, piercing and subtle. She gave a little cry; her heart leaped, and her swift feet followed.

The yellow jasmine! She found it in a little clearing of oaklings at the very top of the hill. The trees were leafless yet, but at the tip of every spray grew a swollen red leaf-bud apparently on the point of bursting. Upon the ground between the trees tangled masses of vines writhed and struggled, wiry, purple stems winged at intervals with flame-points of emerald ond silver. No blossom crests tossed on these riotous waves, but up the trunk of every tree ran green and purple spirals, which darted, aspiring, to the very tip, and there, audacious, glorious, triumphant, shouted the praises of spring from a thousand golden bugles. The echo of the call was perfume. Truth felt her senses reel with it.

"Oh, I can't reach you! Come down, come down! I must have you."

The flowers bridled and tossed; the yellow sprays tinkled in the sun like a golden fountain.

"Come down!" she cried again. A saucy flower unhooked itself and struck her between the eyes. She laughed as she caught it. "Is this all I'm to have? Then all right!" She turned away singing.

"How clumsy and stupid hot-house flowers are!" she thought. "They are just like stuffed squirrels. I wonder why things get so heavy and helpless when they are cultivated. Just imagine having to smoke off bugsg from a wild jasmine vine!" She regarded the flower in her hand with close scrutiny.

"I reckon these seem more real because they grow as nature meant to have them. Somehow it seems almost wicked to over-cultivate flowers,—or people either." The thought of cities choked up in her throat. She tossed it off with a shake of her head. "How I hate hot-houses, glass, and gardeners!"

SHE RECOMMENDS "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

Mrs. Corbett Read the Advertisement and Tried It

AVON, ONT., May 14th, 1914.

"I have used 'Fruit-a-tives' for Indigestion and Constipation with most excellent results, and they continue to be my only medicine. I saw 'Fruit-a-tives' advertised with a letter in which some one recommended them very highly, so I tried them. The results were more than satisfactory, and I have no hesitation in recommending 'Fruit-a-tives'" ANNIE A. CORBETT.

Time is proving that 'Fruit-a-tives' can always be depended upon to give prompt relief in all cases of Constipation and Stomach Trouble.

THE GREAT LAKES.

Remarkable Features of Great Waterway Are Sometimes Overlooked.

"One need not be commercial in his appreciation of these inland seas but he must be geographical," writes Aubrey Fullerton in the "Bellman," of the Great Lakes. "In the terms of the gazetteer they are the largest chain of lakes in the world, and hold one-half of the fresh water on the earth's surface. From the head of Lake Superior to the mouth of Lake Ontario is twelve hundred and eighty miles of continuous waterway, to which Lake Michigan adds three hundred and fifty miles as a branch line.

"The source of that remarkable waterway is in the same region that gives birth to the Mississippi and the Red river of the North. The St Louis river, a pleasant little stream winds through the ten-thousand-lake country of Minnesota, and links up some of its lesser waters. It gives no hint of what it is going to do further, but its amiable windings are, in fact, an introduction to the great St Lawrence system.

"Lake Superior is the first expansion. Though it is fed by little playground streams, it is virtually an ocean set in the middle of the continent, opening out to other lakes that are inferior only to itself. The length and breadth and depth of Superior are oceanic—four hundred and twenty miles is its length, one hundred and sixty miles is its greatest width, and one thousand feet is its depth. A voyage upon it is a sea voyage. In surface area it is the largest single body of fresh water in the world; yet Michigan, forty-five miles shorter and eighty miles narrower, has more cubical contents of water because it is deeper.

"The lakes lessen in area as the chain stretches eastward. Ontario, the last link, is the smallest of the five, though Erie is the shallowest. Even Ontario, however, with nearly two hundred miles to its credit, is minor only in comparison with its own family.

"There is a sixth lake in the St. Lawrence system that is never counted among the Great Lakes, for it is a dwarf. Little Lake St. Clair is apt to be overlooked. Twenty-five miles long and twenty-five miles wide, and only that, it has to rank in the playground class; yet it is a link in the chain, the particular use of which is to connect Lakes Huron and Erie."

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent my be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

2,000,000 Belgians Depend on us for Bread!

Since shortly after the German invasion, the Belgians have depended for food entirely on the "Commission for Relief in Belgium". Their own store of food, even if not destroyed or pillaged, would last only three weeks—they have had no chance to raise more—and the ruthless Germans refuse to supply them!

Backed by the

so generously contributed in the British Empire and the United States, the neutral Belgian Relief Commission has imported enough wheat, flour and other foods to feed the whole nation so far. The great majority of the 7,000,000 Belgians left in the country have been able to pay for their daily allowance of bread—but a steadily growing number have no money left.

Unless we are willing to let these hundreds of thousands of women, children and old men starve, they must be fed at the expense of the Belgian Relief Fund. To make this possible someone must contribute nearly $3,000,000 a month—every month—all this winter!

No people under the Allied Flags are as well able to contribute generously as we Canadians! No cause has ever been more deserving of help! In the name of Justice and Humanity—for the sake of our own self-respect—let us give all we can to help our martyred Allies!

RECRUITING WILL BE CONTINUOUS

Sir Sam Hughes Issues Statement Emphasizing Need of Officers

OTTAWA, Jan. 3.—The New Year's announcement of Sir Robert Borden that the Canadian overseas force will be increased to half a million men has been received with general satisfaction. The increase in the force will mean no change in military plans or methods, except that recruiting will be pushed harder than ever, and will be continuous.

For the last month the recruits throughout Canada have averaged a thousand men a day, and up to the present there have been recruited 222,000 men.

At the same rate, in another month there will be 250,000 men under arms. As soon as this number is reached recruiting will begin on the new quarter of a million, and enlisting will be kept up until that force is raised. The increase in force will mean that as soon as possible the number of troops at the front will be increased.

Three Divisions Soon.

There will soon be three full divisions in the firing line, and it is expected that a fourth will then be organized. When that reaches Flanders, Canada will have nearly one hundred thousand men in the field. To keep such a force at full strength in the field is regarded as about the limit of Canada's ability.

The big problem the department now faces is to get trained officers. There are a few well-qualified officers in Canada now and with new infantry battalions being authorized daily, the problem is continually growing more acute. There are now 179 infantry battalions authorized; while through the draft system in force last fall many regiments have raised to almost double their original number.

Schools For Officers

General Sir Sam Hughes announced this morning that to meet the problem of good officers new schools would be opened for both commissioned and non-commissioned officers.

"The department," said General Hughes, "is taking steps to obtain the best officers available to organize new battalions. What we especially desire is strong men who have had successful business or professional training. Just as in the case of Clive, Nicholson and many others, so to-day the best soldiers are men such as engineers, barristers, contractors—large business men with military training. It is found that they far surpass the professional soldier. I want applications from all such men and will train men accustomed to driving through things."

NOW AS A MOTHER

don't you have the good of your family at heart? Don't you want to get for your family the very best? For internal ailments—the best medicine? For sores and skin diseases—the best ointment? If so, get Zam-Buk. Mothers who have used Zam-Buk say there is nothing to equal its soothing, healing power in cases of skin diseases and injuries, and nothing so suitable for sensitive skins.

This is because Zam-Buk is composed entirely of medicinal herbal essences and extracts, and is free from the poisonous coloring matter and harsh minerals found in ordinary ointments.

Children, having once used Zam-Buk, will cry for it when they meet with an accident. They know how quickly it stops the pain, and heals.

Use it for burns, cuts, bruises, skin injuries, piles, eczema, blood-poison, ulcers, chapped hands and cold sores.

HEIRESS RUNS AWAY

Tired of Society Frivolities She Becomes Shop Girl

PHILADELPHIA, Jan 3.—Tiring of the frivolities of society and encumbered with wealth that brought her no happiness, Miss Irene Paul, 19 years of age, daughter of Joseph Paul, of Woonsocket, R.I., reputed to be worth in the neighborhood of a million dollars, broke the fetters that bound her and ran away from the Rhode Island town on November 8 seeking "liberty" that money could not buy.

She was found working in a Market street departmental store by Hodge & Farrell, detectives, to-day.

Ever since her disappearance from her home her father spared nothing in the way of money to ascertain her whereabouts without success. To-day the detectives were passing through the Market street store when they heard a girl call "Miss Paul." The detective referred to the description of Miss Paul which had been sent broadcast, and she was placed under arrest.

When interviewed at the City Hall, Miss Paul said:

"Woonsocket is dead. What is money and all the frills of the social set in which I moved if you cannot have liberty. I envied every shop girl I saw because they appeared so happy. Finally it occurred to me that just such a life would suit me, so I came to Philadelphia, where I have been earning $8 a week and am perfectly happy."

DYES FOR CANADA FROM WEST INDIES

Arrangements Under Way Which Promise Relief to Serious Situation

OTTAWA, Jan. 3.—According to a statement issued by the Customs Department to-day, arrangements are under way by which Canadian manufacturers will be assured a supply of dyestuffs from the British West Indies in future. Through the co-operation of the Imperial authorities, who have exerted pressure on American manufacturers of such dyestuffs, the Government has been able to relieve the serious situation which promised to develop here. It arose out of the refusal of American manufacturers to export the manufactured dyestuffs to Canada as usual.

The scarcity of dyes in Great Britain has rendered imports from that country to Canada almost impossible, and Canadian companies had been getting their supplies in the shape of logwood dyes from the United States. When, however, with a view to controlling the product so that the Empire's demands might be met, the British Government placed an embargo on the export of logwood from Jamaica and Honduras, the American companies cancelled their contracts with the Canadian companies and a famine in dyestuffs threatened.

Negotiations were at once commenced by the Canadian authorities looking toward relief. As a result, arrangements have already been made to allow the export of 47,700 tons of logwood to the United States dye companies on condition that these firms shall continue to supply the reasonable demands of the Canadian mills and further negotiations are under way which, it is hoped, will result in a workable arrangement by which a reasonable supply of goods from the countries named will be allowed to be exported to the United States dye manufacturing companies coupled with conditions which will ensure a supply of the same for Canadian manufacturing purposes.

Divine Aid Again Invoked by Kaiser

Another Remarkable Message Delivered to His Army And Navy

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Amsterdam correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company says that Emperor William, according to a despatch from Berlin, has sent the following New Year's address to the army, the navy and the colonial troops:

"Comrades.—Another year of severe fighting has elapsed. Wherever a superior number of enemies has stormed our lines they have failed before your loyalty and bravery. Wherever I have sent you into battle you have gained a glorious victory. Thankfully we remember to-day, above all, our brethren who joyfully gave their blood in order to gain security for our beloved at home and imperishable glory for the fatherland. What they have begun we shall accomplish with God's gracious help.

"In impotent madness enemies from the west and east, from the north and south still seek to deprive us of all that makes life worth living. They long ago buried the hope to conquer us in honest fighting. On the weight of their masses, on the starvation of our entire people, on the influence of their campaign of calumniation, which is as mischievous as it is malicious, they believe they can still reckon. Their plans will not succeed. Before the spirit of determination which imperturbably unites the army and those at home their hopes will be miserably disappointed. With a will to discharge the duty to the fatherland to the last breath and determination to secure victory, we enter the New Year with God for the protection of the fatherland and for Germany's greatness."

Roumania

What do we know about Roumania? What will Roumania do in this war? Roumania is the greatest of the Balkan countries. Has a population of six millions; an army of 500,000 splendidly drilled soldiers. Bucharest, the capital, outrivals Washington in its electric lighting, motors, parks, shops, manufacturies, subsidized opera company. The ladies wear the latest Parisian gowns. The streets are wide avenues. No capital is the world is more attractive. King Coral the first, married a lady whom the world knows under the nom de plume of "Carmen Sybia. Of all the queens who have occupied thrones, no one in recorded history has surpassed in intellect, learning and intelligence this monarch; the authoress of over thirty volumes of books upon many subjects, the writer of hundreds of poems, conversing fluently in six languages, a wonderful musical composer and musician. Her powerful mind controlled her husband's actions in a great degree, and it is chiefly owing to her efforts that Roumania occupies the prominent position she does in the far East. Coral had no children living, and he adopted the present King Ferdinand. This man is a relative of the Kaiser, an Holenzern. He was educated in Germany and accepted a commission in the Germany army. Not long before the beginning of the war Roumania entered into a treaty with Germany and Austria against the other Balkan States, Greece and Great Britain. When Bulgaria joined the Huns that treaty was abrogated, the Germans breaking the treaty just as soon as they deemed it their interest to do so. That fact has tended to make Ferdinand somewhat cold to the German advances. The Allies have one strong card in their favor, and that is the present queen is a granddaughter of our late Queen Victoria, and heart and soul with the Allies. Recently, at a banquet given in honor of a visit from a German statesman, held in Bucharest, the queen told this statesman that under no circumstances whatever, would Roumania join in the war against the Allies. Roumania has a grievance against Russia. At the close of the last Balkan war Roumania demanded the large province of Bess-Arabia, which lies between Russia and Roumania. Russia took possession and Roumania has not recovered from her spasm of fury at the conduct of Russia. Roumania is an enemy of Bulgaria and Turkey, yet she is afraid of joining the Allies because of the Huns and Bulgarians. She also would prefer neutrality rather than have Russia attack her through Bess-Arabia. She is in a desperate position. The enormous successes of the Huns also render her timid as to her course. The Russian fleet is now bombarding Varna, a Bulgarian city. At present it is not known whether this fleet passed down the Danube through Roumania, whether it came from Odessa, the only large Russian sea port upon the Black Sea, or whether it came through the Dneester River, which runs through Bess-Arabia. If Roumania fights, I believe it will be on the side of the Allies considering all the surrounding circumstance, but "you never can tell."

A Quick Conversion

By F. A. MITCHEL

I selected the last two weeks in August for my vacation. I am what is called a new woman—that is, I have departed from the ways of those women who sit and hold their hands, waiting for some man to come and marry them.

Until that summer, when I went to the seacoast, I thought that I had no romance in my nature. I was extremely practical and had no sympathy with any one who was anything else than practical. I felt quite competent to make my own living and scorned to relinquish the work to any man.

Nevertheless in all our natures there is the germ of romance. I first discovered this germ in me on that visit to the seashore, and, having discovered it, it grew up like a mushroom.

One evening I went down to the beach to plan some school work, for I was a teacher, and walked over a narrow strip of sand to some rocks a couple of hundred feet from the shore. Arrived there, I found a convenient natural seat and began my planning.

The moon was full, and presently I saw a glimmer of light on the watery horizon. Then the bright upper edge of the moon showed itself, and lastly the round disk stood upon the ocean. It was at this moment that I became conscious of the germ of romance within me. I forgot my work and drank in the beautiful scene—the shimmer on the water, the gilded wave crests. The starry heavens seemed to invite me to their infinite depths; the splash of the waves lulled me.

For a long while I sat enraptured by the beautiful scene. The sounds on the shore, a babel of voices, dance music in the hotels, an occasional burst of laughter, formed a pleasing background for the ocean, the moon, the heavens. Gradually the sounds became confused, the splash of waves sank into a rustle, and I fell into a slumber.

This birth of romance within me, the first romantic fervor I ever experienced, was followed by an awakening of another kind. Something cold struck my ankles, and, starting up, I saw a wave receding from my feet. All about me was the ocean. I looked toward the beach and saw that the strip of sand over which I had reached the rock had disappeared, and the water there, so far as I could see, was as deep as that before me.

This second awakening that I have spoken of was not from slumber; it was the coming of a sense of weakness. There must be an inherent feeling of dependence lying dormant in the breast of every woman however she scorns the stronger sex. At any rate, the first mental impulse that came to me on looking over those merciless waters was for some man to come and rescue me.

I could not swim a stroke. There was no boat, not even a stick of timber, near me. The sounds on the shore had ceased, the lights in the hotels were few. My voice was not strong enough to make myself heard, for I must have been a quarter of a mile from the houses lining the beach, and the waves, now stronger with the flood tide, would drown my voice.

Oh, how I longed for a man—a strong man, a brave man—to rescue me!

I had spoken at women's gatherings, stating that there was no situation a woman might enter upon that she could not extricate herself without a man's help if she would only use her brains. What use was my brain in those watery surroundings? The few square yards of rock on which I stood would soon be covered. Next I would be washed off it by the force of the waves and at last a lingering agony, ended by death.

From one of the houses on the shore emerged a spark. It was a lighted cigar. I had always hated tobacco, but now I would give worlds if that cigar would bring the man who smoked it to save me. I called, but my voice did not reach him. He walked away then turned and came slowly in my direction.

I took off my white petticoat and waved it as a signal of distress. He saw it and came running toward me. At the verge he stopped and looked about him, evidently for a boat. Seeing none, he threw off his coat and vest, for there was no time to waste. Then, divesting himself of his shoes, he walked toward me till the water was up to his chin; then began to swim. When he reached me I wound my arms about him so tightly that, strong as he was, he found difficulty in loosening them. Then putting an arm under one of mine he drew me into the water and swam with me to the shore.

This task was a difficult one, for so frightened wa[illegible] that I kept clutching him and impeding his movements. At last, in order to save both of us from drowning, he struck me on the forehead with his clinched fist to stun me. He only partly succeeded in rendering me unconscious, but I was thankful for the blow, for it made me oblivious to the danger. I remained passive and he succeeded in getting me to the beach.

As he dragged me from the water and was laying me on the sand I regained sufficient consciousness to wind my arms around him again. He is now my husband and I am glad to acknowledge my dependence on him.

Delaware's Northern Boundary.

Why the northern boundary of Delaware should have been circular in form is often a source of wonderment. It came about in this way: After William Penn had obtained a grant of Pennsylvania he was desirous of owning the land on the west bank of the Delaware to the sea. He procured from the Duke of York in 1682 a release of all his title and claim to New Castle and twelve miles around it and to the land between this tract and the sea. A line that was the arc of a circle of a twelve mile radius was then run, with New Castle as a center. When the three "lower counties" on the Delaware became a state they retained this boundary.—Chicago Journal.

St. George and St. Peter.

Besides being the patron saint of England St. George is also patron of Moscow, on whose arms there figures the picture of the saint slaying the dragon. A famous Russian military decoration—the Order of St. George—which was founded by Catherine the second—also commemorates the saint in Russia. It may incidentally be pointed out that while St. George was adopted as the "military protector" of England early in the thirteenth century the patron of England had for five centuries previously been St. Peter which helps to explain why more churches have in England been dedicated to that saint than to any other.—London Mirror.

An Ingenious Device.

When Sir Robert Perks' school days were over he entered the office of a firm of lawyers and worked very hard. It was no uncommon thing to find him reading law at 5 in the morning, and this often after he had been working late on the previous night. As a matter of fact, he made it an inflexible rule never to be in bed of a morning after 5. To enforce this rule he invented an ingenious device. This consisted of a long glass tube filled with water nicely balanced over his head and attached by a string to an alarm. At the desired hour the bell rang and awakened the sleeper. If within a few seconds he did not leap from his bed and avert the calamity the descending weight of the clock destroyed the balance of the tube, and down poured the water on his guilty head!—From "The Life Story of Sir Robert W. Perks."

WHISPERING GALLERIES.

Old World Churches With Remarkable Acoustic Properties.

The most celebrated whispering gallery is that which surrounds the base of the interior of the dome of St. Paul's cathedral, London. A person speaking near its surface can be heard distinctly by one listening near the smooth wall at the other extremity of the diameter, but not elsewhere.

In the cathedral of Gloucester a whispering passage leads from one aisle to the opposite behind the east window of the choir. It is seventy-five feet long, six and a half feet high and three feet wide in the form of half an irregular octagon. The walls and ceilings are of freestone, and the slightest whisper travels from end to end.

The cathedral of the Taj Mahal in Agra, India, has most marvelous echoes and reverberating qualities, but is scarcely a whispering gallery. The whole cathedral of Girgenti, in Sicily, has this character owing to the peculiar structure of its walls. These remarkable properties also belonged to the "Ear of Dionysius," cut in the rock at Syracuse in the shape of a parabolic curve, ending in an elliptical arch. It is said that the tyrant seated in a small chamber over a hundred feet from the spot occupied by his captives by this means could hear every word spoken by his prisoners.—London Answers.

If Animals Could Speak.

It is a startling fact that if some animals could tell their life history they would be able to recall events which happened hundreds of years ago. A Russian eagle, for instance, would be able to remember watching with greedy eyes as one by one the French soldiers under Napoleon fell exhausted out of the ranks in their awful retreat from Moscow in 1812. There are crocodiles alive in India today which saw the first English traveler set foot there, while there are whales in the sea which may have skirted the coast of France when it was invaded in 1115. A great many elephants could recall historical events of a hundred years ago, while there are ravens still living whose memory could go back twice that period.—London Answers.

Plenty of Room.

The young man who writes verses was standing out in the night gazing at the sky when a friend ran across him.

"What are you doing—studying astronomy?"

"Go away and don't disturb me. I am gazing into infinite distance."

"I don't see what satisfaction you find in that."

"That's because you never had any experience with editors. You don't know what a comfort it is to find some place where nothing is crowded out for lack of space."—London Tit-Bits.

The Amethyst.

A good example of one of the ways in which magical properties became attributed to natural objects is the stone known as amethyst. The ancient Indian name of this stone had the sound represented by its present name. In Greek this sound happens to mean "anti-wine;" hence, without more ado, the ancients declared that the amethyst was a preventive of and a cure for drunkenness!—London Mail.

"Well, what about poor dad?"

"He thinks a dollar is all he will be called upon to give up."

VON BISSING SPEAKS OF EDITH CAVELL

Cannot Undesland Why world Should Become Hysterical Over Her Execution

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The World publishes a report of an interview between its staff correspondent, Karl K. Kitchen, and Baron von Bissing, military governor of Belgium, which is commented upon here as an astonishing exposure of the German deadness of soul. Mr. Kitchen, in his reports of the interview, writes:

"General von Bissing, the military governor of Belgium, whom I saw in his office, overlooking the gardens near the Palais Royale, was also most polite and solicitous for my welfare. He greeted me with the most democratic of handshakes, and before I could begin interviewing him he was interviewing me.

"So you came to Brussels to write about the Cavell case? That is very interesting," he went on before I could interrupt him. "You did not find travelling difficult, did you? And Brussels is not much changed, is it? I suppose you have been here before." After I had reasurred him on these points he said:

"The Cavell woman was found guilty of the offence of aiding English, French and Belgian soldiers to escape from Belgium. In times of war this offense is punishable by death in all countries. The Cavell woman was accordingly executed.

"I may add that she was not a young woman, who did not realize what she was doing. She was a woman of fifty, strong-willed and determined to carry out her dangerous work at all costs. These are the facts in the case. It was necessary for you to come to Brussels to learn this."

"But the entire civilized world is interested in the case," I protested.

"I cannot understand why," he replied frankly. "With all the thousands of innocent people who have died in the war, why should anyone become hysterical over the death of one guilty woman?"

"Because she was a woman," I interrupted.

"Exactly," agreed His Excellency.

"Why was it necessary to execute her? Couldn't she have been placed in prison?" I asked.

"I am glad you ask this," he replied, drawing his chair closer to his large flat-top desk, which was covered with papers, books and several photographs in silver frames. "This Cavell woman was guilty of a very serious offense. According to her own admission she aided 130 men of military age, English, Belgian and French, to escape from Belgium. Many of these men are now fighting with the enemy—naturally the case was not one to be overlooked.

'A few years in prison is not sufficient punishment for an offence of this kind. For punishment in a case of this nature is meted out to deter others from committing the same offense. If the Cavell woman had been sent to prison she would have been released in two or three years—at the end of the war. Amnesty is usually granted to all prisoners convicted of offenses of this nature, espionage and so forth, when peace is made.

"We have only recently uncovered a big spy system here in Belgium. Important military matters have been communicated to the enemy for some time. I will not go into details, but I will say that this Cavell woman was aware of their activities—had guilty knowledge of much of their work. Such a system of spying assails our very safety and we proceeded to stamp it out.

"The Cavell woman was charged with espionage. The charge of aiding the enemy's soldiers to escape, which was made against her was sufficiently serious. Her death was deplorable—but I do not see why it should occasion such hysteria in America. In England—yes. There are many hysterical persons in England, and England is at war with Germany."

I informed His Excellency that many people in Berlin—even high officials—regarded the execution as a political blunder in view of the delicate situation in Belgium.

"Very interesting, very interesting," he commented. "Some people make mountains out of molehills," he went on, adding, "and sometimes what appears to be a molehill turns out to be a mountain."

I did not ask if His Excellency referred to the case we were discussing. But he must have divined my thoughts.

"You have all the facts you desire about the case?" he asked.

I replied in the affirmative.

"Then let me wish you a pleasant journey back to America," said His Excellency, rising and offering me his hand. "If I may be of any service to you, command me."

As I was leaving his office he called to me: "Please present my compliment to your Minister, Mr. Whitlock. He is held in the highest esteem by all of us."

A moment later I was on my way down the stairs to the bright sunshine of the street.

What are Peps

Peps are the new treatment for coughs, colds and lung troubles. They are little tablets made up from Pine extracts and medicinal [illegible] turn into healing vapors, which are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes. The Peps treatment is direct. Swallowing cough mixtures into the stomach to cure ailments and disorders in throat and lungs, is indirect. Peps are revolutionizing the treatment of colds, as their price is within the reach of all. 50c. box all druggists, or Peps Co., Toronto.

Kitchener's Way

Some few months after "K," as Tommy Atkins calls Lord Kitchener, had taken over the command from Lord Roberts in South Africa, he had occasion to visit some blockhouses which were in course of erection just outside one of the leading commercial towns. One, he noticed, had been put up in a rather exposed position, and he therefore ordered trenches and sangars to be thrown up at once, in order to strengthen it. Going inside one of the blockhouses—they were all connected by telephone—he rang up the officer commanding a unit in the town, when the following dialogue took place:

K.—Are you there?

C. O.—Yes, sir.

K.—Are you——, in command of the——shire regiment?

C. O.—Yes, sir.

K.—I want a working party, fifty strong, with intrenching tools, to be here at 6 o'clock to-morrow morning.

C. O.—I beg your pardon, sir, but my men are all employed on something or other, the majority escorting prisoners down the line.

K.—Oh, I see. Ah! is that a band I hear playing there?

C. O. (hesitatingly)—Y—es, sir.

K.—Oh, it is. What band?

C. O.—Regimental band, sir, playing outside the mess.

K.—Playing at mess? Well—ah—just have those instruments put away for some future occasion, will you? and make that working party 100 strong to arrive here to-morrow morning at 6 o'clock, or there will be a regimental command vacant.

C. O. (stammeringly)—Very good, sir.

How to Cook Roman Meal Porridge
Invariably use double boiler, or set boiler basin of boiling water. Have water boiling in both vessels, that in inner one salted to taste. Slowly stir in one cup of Roman Meal to each two cups water. Cover, set in outer vessel, and never stir again even while serving. For early breakfast cook at evening meal and warm in morning, using a little less Roman Meal. It's dark, nutbrown, granular, rich porridge. It nourishes better than meat, prevents indigestion and positively relieves constipation or "money back." Ask your doctor. All grocers, 10 cts. and 25 cts.
Made by Roman Meal Co., Toronto.

MUSIC & DRAMA

AT GRIFFIN'S

The Reese Bros. Africander Minstrels opened their engagement at Griffin's last night. A good crowd was present and all were pleased with the brand of dancing and singing put on by the members of the Company. The hit of the evening was the old darkey song, "Way Down Upon the Swanee River" which was sung by one of the ladies of the company, and was generously applauded by the audience.

During an interval in the performance Mr. Ralph D. Tompkins, the famous one-legged walker, who has traversed on foot the greater part of the United States and part of Europe, gave a song of his own composition viz. "Won't You Be a Friend of Mine."

The Reese Africander Minstrels are at Griffin's for the balance of this week.

Way Out There

A woman, who has nobly given of her time, money and energy in assisting the Belgian Relief Committee in its work in Liege, since the good situation became so serious, chanced the day upon a little fellow of seven standing among the adults in the line waiting to receive bread. The woman's cheery smile has done almost as much as her assistance in other ways, and thinking she might bring a little light into the little fellow's face, she stroked his curly head and said, "where is daddy now?"

"Way out there" was the vague answer of the boy, and his chubby hand pointed off in the direction of the great battlefield of Europe.

That was all he knew of daddy. "Way out there.' Fighting for Belgium and the Allies, perhaps dead.

"And mama?" pursued the woman.

"Way out there too,' 'and the tears began to trickle down the lad's checks

And then the woman understood. Here was another of those orphaned by the bravery of Belgium or the atrocities of Germany, another of the thousands of lads and lassies of his age that must fight the world's battles alone unless Canada will help.

"Way out there" is a serious thing to these helpless, cold and starving little ones, and Canadians should send their thoughts in the direction of "way out there" and do their part towards giving them what the world owes them—life. Canada must do it or they will die. Then our carelessness will be no better than the atrocities of the Germans who made them orphans. They killed those who in a measure could defend themselves. We will be murderers of the helpless.

No wonder those women of the committee are sending their appeal to us across the water for food. No wonder the Belgian Relief Committee of Montreal is taking up the appeal and scattering it broadcast over the Dominion.

Canada must send her wheat, her flour "way out there' to feed these starving orphans and the equally hungry aged and widowed. The purchasing power of a trifling sum is wonderful when feeding those on the verge of starvation. Two dollars and a half, if sent to the Treasurer of the Belgian Relief Committee, 59 St. Peter street, Montreal, will keep a Belgian family alive a month—ten dollars will see one through the perils of the winter.

Why not send it "way out there" now?

VON BISSING SPEAKS OF EDITH CAVELL

Cannot Undestand Why world Should Become Hysterical Over Her Execution

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The World publishes a report of an interview between its staff correspondent, Karl K. Kitchen, and Baron von Bissing, military governor of Belgium, which is commented upon here as an astonishing exposure of the German deadness of soul. Mr. Kitchen, in his reports of the interview, writes:

"General von Bissing, the military governor of Belgium, whom I saw in his office, overlooking the gardens near the Palais Royale, was also most polite and solicitous for my welfare. He greeted me with the most democratic of handshakes, and before I could begin interviewing him he was interviewing me.

"So you came to Brussels to write about the Cavell case? That is very interesting," he went on before I could interrupt him. "You did not find travelling difficult, did you? And Brussels is not much changed, is it? I suppose you have been here before." After I had reasurred him on these points he said:

"The Cavell woman was found guilty of the offence of aiding English, French and Belgian soldiers to escape from Belgium. In times of war this offense is punishable by death in all countries. The Cavell woman was accordingly executed.

"I may add that she was not a young woman, who did not realize what she was doing. She was a woman of fifty, strong-willed and determined to carry out her dangerous work at all costs. These are the facts in the case. It was necessary for you to come to Brussels to learn this."

"But the entire civilized world is interested in the case," I protested.

"I cannot understand why," he replied frankly. "With all the thousands of innocent people who have died in the war, why should anyone become hysterical over the death of one guilty woman?"

"Because she was a woman," I interrupted.

"Exactly," agreed His Excellency.

"Why was it necessary to execute her? Couldn't she have been placed in prison?" I asked.

"I am glad you ask this," he replied, drawing his chair closer to his large flat-top desk, which was covered with papers, books and several photographs in silver frames. "This Cavell woman was guilty of a very serious offense. According to her own admission she aided 130 men of military age, English, Belgian and French, to escape from Belgium. Many of these men are now fighting with the enemy—naturally the case was not one to be overlooked.

'A few years in prison is not sufficient punishment for an offence of this kind. For punishment in a case of this nature is meted out to deter others from committing the same offense. If the Cavell woman had been sent to prison she would have been released in two or three years—at the end of the war. Amnesty is usually granted to all prisoners convicted of offenses of this nature, espionage and so forth, when peace is made.

"We have only recently uncovered a big spy system here in Belgium. Important military matters have been communicated to the enemy for some time. I will not go into details, but I will say that this Cavell woman was aware of their activities—had guilty knowledge of much of their work. Such a system of spying assails our very safety and we proceeded to stamp it out.

"The Cavell woman was charged with espionage. The charge of aiding the enemy's soldiers to escape, which was made against her was sufficiently serious. Her death was deplorable—but I do not see why it should occasion such hysteria in America. In England—yes. There are many hysterical persons in England, and England is at war with Germany."

I informed His Excellency that many people in Berlin—even high officials—regarded the execution as a political blunder in view of the delicate situation in Belgium.

"Very interesting, very interesting," he commented. "Some people make mountains out of molehills," he went on, adding, "and sometimes what appears to be a molehill turns out to be a mountain."

I did not ask if His Excellency referred to the case we were discussing. But he must have divined my thoughts.

"You have all the facts you desire about the case?" he asked.

I replied in the affirmative.

"Then let me wish you a pleasant journey back to America," said His Excellency, rising and offering me his hand. "If I may be of any service to you, command me."

As I was leaving his office he called to me: "Please present my compliment to your Minister, Mr. Whitlock. He is held in the highest esteem by all of us."

A moment later I was on my way down the stairs to the bright sunshine of the street.

What are Peps

Peps are the new treatment for coughs, colds and lung troubles. They are little tablets made up from Pine extracts and medicinal essences, which when put in the mouth these medicinal ingredients turn into healing vapors, which are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes. The Peps treatment is direct. Swallowing cough mixtures into the stomach, to cure ailments and disorders in throat and lungs, is indirect. Peps are revolutionizing the treatment of colds, as their price is within the reach of all. 50c. box all druggists, or Peps Co., Toronto.

Kitchener's Way

Some few months after "K," as Tommy Atkins calls Lord Kitchener, had taken over the command from Lord Roberts in South Africa, he had occasion to visit some blockhouses which were in course of erection just outside one of the leading commercial towns. One, he noticed, had been put up in a rather exposed position, and he therefore ordered trenches and sangars to be thrown up at once, in order to strengthen it. Going inside one of the blockhouses—they were all connected by telephone—he rang up the officer commanding a unit in the town, when the following dialogue took place:

K.—Are you there?

C. O.—Yes, sir.

K.—Are you——, in command of the——shire regiment?

C. O.—Yes, sir.

K.—I want a working party, fifty strong, with intrenching tools, to be here at 6 o'clock to-morrow morning.

C. O.—I beg your pardon, sir, but my men are all employed on something or other, the majority escorting prisoners down the line.

K.—Oh, I see. Ah! is that a band I hear playing there?

C. O. (hesitatingly)—Y—es, sir.

K.—Oh, it is. What band?

C. O.—Regimental band, sir, playing outside the mess.

K.—Playing at mess? Well—ah—just have those instruments put away for some future occasion, will you? and make that working party 100 strong to arrive here to-morrow morning at 6 o'clock, or there will be a regimental command vacant.

SPORTING NEWS

BILLIARDS.

The first big billiard match of the year, in 1916, will be a championship at stake to be decided in Boston for Alfredo De Oro, who will defend his world title at three cushions against Lloyd Jevne, on January 12, 13 and 14, probably in the Convention Hall Building.

Only a short time ago De Oro defended his title against August Kieckhefer in Chicago, and the wizard of the angle game gave the finest display of three-cushions ever seen. Not only did he defeat Kieckhefer decisively, but in the second night's play he established a world's record for a championship match by scoring 50 points in 35 innings and he established a new record by scoring 150 points in 145 innings in three nights' play.

Jevne has been a national three-cushion champion and is reckoned one of the best players in the game. In 1904 he went to Paris, and while there played a match with Manuel Sanchez, the brilliant Spanish player who was runner-up to Willie Hoppe in a balkline tournament. Sanchez attempted to give Jevne 10 points in 100, but lost by 100 to 81. Jevne's high run at three-cushions is 16, made at the Imperial room, Chicago.

Boston has been fortunate in billiards this season, in that it was here that Willie Hoppe and Koji Yamada played for the 14.1 title not many weeks ago.

DRUG FAMINE COMING?

CANADA IS SHORT OF MANY NECESSARY CHEMICALS.

Many of the Supplies Used in the Preparation of Drugs Come From Germany and Austria, and Very Small Quantities Remain in the United States—Arnica Largely in Use at the Front.

We hear a lot about the increase in the cost of living nowadays. But if the price of drugs soars any higher, or if it remains long at its present figure, the increase in the cost of dying—if death be preceded by anything in the nature of a long and serious illness—bids fair to become a more serious consideration still. Prices of drugs in this country—and indeed on this continent—have already reached an altitude never before attained, says a writer in The Toronto Star Weekly.

"There are several causes for this shortage," The Star Weekly was told at one of the largest establishments of wholesale chemists in Toronto, "but they are all more or less referable to the war. The great majority of the drug supply in this country is imported from Europe. And in Europe to-day merely a fraction of the herbs which are used in the making of many prescriptions is being produced.

"Then a whole lot of the chemical products which are in constant use come from Germany in normal times, and now they do not come in at all. And it is impossible to supply their place in many instances. For example, there is lots of soda on this continent, but to make a salt of soda, something else is needed, and that something else usually comes from Germany in quite a large number of cases. Synthetic drugs also come largely from Germany, such as are used in the manufacture of photographic material. Substitutes for these at high prices have to be used now."

At another large establishment of the same kind, it was said that the shortage of drugs, which has resulted in the high prices in Canada, is largely attributable to the fact that Europe to-day needs more drugs than ever before.

"Europe's own factories," it was said, "make use of most of her own herbs grown at home. She wants far more in the way of drugs than she can possibly get. Take the case of arnica, which is in immense demand. Or, again, there is glycerine. Europe has shut off practically the whole supply of materials entering into its composition, and the stock is low here. Of course, a whole lot of crude glycerine is being used to make explosives. The price of glycerine is to-day between twice and three times as high as the normal price. Glycerine is used in many patent medicines. But the price of these is not likely to go up with the price of glycerine while the stocks of the various dispensers of patent medicines last. For these prices have become standardized."

Among other drugs, the price of quinine has gone up with a bound.

"Quinine," The Star Weekly was told at one establishment, "costs about five times as much to-day as it did a couple of weeks ago. The price has gone up in that time from 50 to 60 cents an ounce to about $2.50 to $3 an ounce. In the battlefield of Central Europe soldiers undoubtedly find that they need quinine a good deal more than they do in their own countries. It is contemplated now to use for the raw material for quinine Peruvian bark from South America, in place of the product of Java, which is the source of supply in normal times. But this substitute can only be produced at a very considerable increase in the cost.

"Again, the cost of benzoate of soda, which is largely used as a preservative, is to-day extremely high, by reason of the shortage of benzoic acid. What would in ordinary times cost 40 cents will now cost $4 or $4.50.

"In fact, nearly all drugs have greatly advanced in price. This is particularly true of bromides and other ranges of goods.

"Cod liver oil is made from crude oils which come from Norway. The supply of this is short, and the cost of the crude product has risen from $40 to $80 per 25-gallon barrel.

"Olive oil has doubled in price. Russian cantharides is more than five times as dear as normally. Permanganate of potash is about ten times as dear."

It may be added that camomile tea is likely to become a luxury. The leaves for making this come in time of peace from both Germany and Austria. The horehound herb is also an Austrian product.

Saskatchewan's Output.

Between 125,000,000 and 130,000,000 bushels of grain have been shipped out of Saskatchewan to date by the three railways, according to an estimate by R. W. Drew, general freight agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway for Saskatchewan. He stated he could not estimate the amount remaining to be shipped, for the yields have been far in excess of any estimates he has yet seen.

In some parts of the province threshing operations are still going on east of Yorkton, as far as the Manitoba boundary, about fifteen per cent. of the crop remains to be threshed. About ten per cent. of the threshing is yet to be done in the western part of the province, east of Swift Current, north and south.

Britain Is To Control Shipping

Will See That Prevailing Shortage of Ships Does Not Interfere With Carrying Food

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The Government is taking stringent measures to see snall not interfere with the shipment shall not interfere with the shpment of food and other necessities to ports in the United Kingdom. Vessels are being requisitioned right and left for the shipment of wheat from the Americans, and in shipping circles it is reported that the Admiralty intends to call in the British ships that are now trading between foreign ports. The latter measure is expected to particularly affect British ships trading between South America and the United States. Shippers here predict that such action would have a disastrous effect on this trade.

Shipowners in England and neutral shippers regard the new born energy of the Government with misgivings, as requisitioned wheat ships are receiving only thirteen shillings, compared wth the normal rate of seventeen shillings. The first hint a vessel receives that it is to be requistioned is the followng telegram from the Admiralty toward the free end of its voyage: "You are required by the requisitioning (carriage of foodstuffs) committee to fix your vessel to load a cargo of 75 per cent wheat from the Atlantic coast of Canada, the United States or the Gulf to the United Kingdom. You may make your own arrangemens as to freight, etc. Formal notice is following by letter."

Letter From Admiralty

The owners then receive the following letter from the Transport Department of the Admiralty:—"I have to inform you on behalf of the requisitioning (carriage of foodstuffs) committee that it has been found necessary to require your vessel to be employed in the North Atlantic wheat trade. I have therefore to give you formal notice in accordance with the provisions of an order-in-council dated November 10, 1915, that the above vessel is requisitioned under that order. Under this the requisition committee requires you under the authority given them in the order quoted, to arrange forthwith that the vessel shall be fixed to load at a port on the Atlantc coast of Canada or the United States, including the Gulf, a cargo of which at least 75 per cent shall consist of wheat, and to discharge this wheat at some port or ports of the United Kingdom. The vessel is to proceed on its arrival in the United States to one of the above ports to load, as stated.

Rely On Good Will

"I am also to require you to inform me within a week of this date of the arrangements you have made. The committee rely confidently upon the good-will of shipowners generally and their co-operation in arranging for the supply of such additional tonnage as the national requirements may necessitate from time to time in the trade now in question, or in any other for which similar action may be required."

The last sentence is considered as significant corroboraton of news already received by charterers that the Government intends to make full use of its undoubed power to completely control the British merchantile marine. The assertion of such power means the inevitable injury of foreign traders who depend largely on British ships for the carrying of goods.

For example, it is reported on the Baltic shipping exchange that the American coffee trade, which is largely dependent on British ships will be vitally injured by any considerable withdrawal of these vessels, for sufficient neutral ships to take their place do not exist.

Other trades with South and Central American ports also will suffer great damage if the requisitioning plan is extended to British ships trading between foreign ports.

BUSINESS MEN WANTED FOR OFFICERS

OTTAWA, Jan. 4.—In connection with the New Year's announcement that Canada's fighting forces will be increased to half a million men, Major General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, said this morning:

"We want strong business and professional men to perfect their military training, as in the case of Clive, Nicholson and other famous soldiers, the best men for command are successful barristers, contractors, engineers and prominent business men with thorough military training. Such men far surpass the professional soldier. We want applications from such men."

HALF MILLION MEN BY NEXT AUTUMN

Sir Sam Hughes Confidently Expects Canada Will Raise Them—Twenty-One New Divisions to be Appointed

100,000 SKILLED MECHANICS EMPLOYED

Manufacturing Munitions of War—250,000 Men in Uniform By the End of the Month—Sir Sam Praises French-Canadians

Half Million Men

TORONTO, Jan. 5.—Canada proposes to raise the quota of troops necessary to bring her war contribution to the half-million men by securing twenty-one additional divisions. The raising of these divisions has been apportioned as follows: From Toronto district, five divisions; from western Ontario, two divisions; from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, three divisions; from Alberta, two divisions; from British Columbia, two divisions; from Quebec, three, possibly four; and from the Maritime Provinces two divisions.

225,000 Men Now

At the present time, training at home and in Britain, and at the front, Canada has 225,000 men in uniform. Two divisions, each of 18,000, are at the battlefront; four divisions are in Britain awaiting the call to reinforce their fighting comrades, and two divisions, completely trained, are waiting in Canada to sail.

100,000 Mechanics

By the end of this month the Canadian forces in uniform will number 250,000. In addition, over 100,000 skilled Canadian mechanics are at work, manufacturing munitions of war.

It is confidently expected that "before the snow flies next fall" the full complement of half a million men will have been raised.

French-Canadians Fighters

In enumerating and assigning the new divisions to be raised, General Hughes spoke particularly of the large task he was assigning Brig.-Gen. Logie in the Toronto district, and also the French Canadian enlistment in Quebec. Some 8,000 French-Canadians had gone to the front. They had proved themselves a splendid lot of men, and official reports to his department declared that their fighting qualities had been "simply beyond belief."

LA GRIPPE CLAIMS MANY NOTABLE VICTIMS

Premiers Borden and Hearst, Col. Currie and Others Affected

TORONTO, Jan. 5.—It seems as if public men are getting their share of the agonies of la grippe.

Premier Borden went south to recuperate and gain strength to help him through the coming Parliamentary session, but he returned only to inhale the germs of Ontario's most fashionable disease. He has been laid up for several days.

Premier Hearst has also had a similar experience.

Col. John A. Currie, M.P., is another victim. He caught cold last week, and has been confined to his home on Howland avenue ever since.

Parks Commissioner Chambers has been confined to his bed for a few days, and Works Commissioner 'Roly' Harris has also had a taste of the malady.

E. A. LANCASTER, M. P. IS CALLED BY DEATH

ST. CATHERINES, Jan. 4.—E. A. Lancaster, M.P., died at his home in this city about 9 o'clock to-night, after a lingering illness of over two years. He defeated the late Hon. Wm. Gibson in 1900, and had represented Lincoln county ever since. He leaves a wife, one daughter and two sons. The elder son, Capt. E. H. Lancaster of the 10th Battery, 3rd Brigade, Canadian Field Artillery, is now at the front in Belgium.

Typhus Plague In Mexico City

Large Number of Cases Reported Throughout Country—No Definite News Available

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—(Special.)—Typhus in more serious proportions than that in Serbia is sweeping over Mexico City and unless it is checked it will prove one of the greatest plagues of the history.

The Carranza government has succeeded in suppressing news to such an extent that only a faint idea of the facts had reached this country.

Less than a month ago, American physicians in the hospitals of Mexico City estimated that there were 50,000 cases of typhus in Mexico City alone.

It was impossible for anyone to form any definite opinion of the number of cases of the plague which is communicated by vermin.

In the city of Puebla there were 1,600 deaths from typhus in one week recently.

In Tachuca the disease was so widespread that the officers of the United States Smelting & Refining company persuaded the city government to let it take over the health work of the place. There had been 3,3000 new cases of typhus in one week. The smelting company's men at once set to work shaving men and cropping their heads. Clothing was burned and houses were disinfected. It is not known what success the effort to cope with the plague has had in Tachuca.

The Mexicans are not making adequte efforts to deal with the epidemic. Last month the Carranza government issued a statement saying that there was no typhus in Mexico City, although there were thousands of cases there then. On December 17th or 18, these same Carranza officials held a conference in Mexico City with Mexican doctors to try to hit upon methods of checking the spread of typhus. American doctors were not asked to the conference. The American Red Cross is unable to do anything because the Carranzistas forced the American organization out of Mexico, saying that they needed no outside help.

Havana and Nassau are quarantined for yellow fever against all of Mexico north of Yucatan. Yet there is not much evidence of yellow fever in Mexico compared with the appalling evidence of typhus on every hand.

The facts are successfully repressed by the Carranza government. Letters are reguarly opened. This, however, is to be expected of a military despotism, which is the form of government maintained by Carranza. But trouble arises from the fact that Carranza is still only one of the military despots of Mexico. Emiliano Zapata, the Morelos rebel, is now the sole ruler of about one fifth of Mexico. For months there have been almost daily battles within three miles of Mexico City between the forces of Carranza and Zapata.

Of Villa no one thinks anything any more. But as a matter of fact he has been nothing but a stray bandit for nearly a year.

BRITISH SHIP GUARDED AT NEW YORK DOCK

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 4—During the last few days United States Secret Service men and Pinkerton detectives have been numerous about the piers where the British ships are loading or unloading. Five Pinkerton men who arrived from New York yesterday are tonight guarding the British steamship Gordon Castle, of the Union Castle Mail Line, which reached port this morning from the west coast of Africa. It is the first time since the outbreak of the European war that such precautions have been taken to safeguard ships here. No one was permitted to leave the ship until after the detectives had stationed themselves. The cargo of the Gordon Castle is said to consist of chrome ore, wool and hides, about 5,000 tons in all. Whether or not any article other than those mentioned is in the cargo could not be learned. There is an air of general mystery concerning the amount of her cargo, and even the employees of the Terminal Shipping Company, agents for the vessel in this city, share the mysterious manner of Captain Betts. Similar cargoes of the kind said to be on the Gordon Castle have arrived here from time to time ever since the war began, and no such secrecy was maintained. About 3,500 tons of chrome ore will be unloaded here, when the Gordon Castle will leave for Boston and New York to discharge the remainder of her cargo.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE CAPITAL OF BUKOWINA

Czernowitz Reported to Have Fallen Before Victorious Russian Army—Report Unconfirmed But Stated in Two Despatches

TEUTONS GET INTO DESPERATE POSITION

Being Slowly Forced Into Position Similar to That of Allies in Macedonia, Only No Neutral Territory to Retire To

Prisoners Taken

LONDON, Jan. 4.—A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says that the Teutonic forces are reported to have evacuated Czernowitz, Bukowina. It adds that a large number of prisoners have been taken, including many Germans.

The Petrograd correspondent of the Havas Agency also announces that the Austrians have evacuated Czernowitz, the Russians having seized all the heights dominating the town.

The Russian official communication does not confirm the evacuation of Czernowitz, but says: "North-west of Czernowitz we have occupied a line of trenches and repulsed strong enemy counter-attacks."

Capital of Bukowina

The capture by the Russians of Czernowitz, the capital of the Galician Crown land of the Bukowina, would not in itself be as significent as its possible consequences. The city is not fortified to any formidable extent. However, by taking it, the Russians could push the Teutons against the Carpathian mountain passes to the south and against the Roumanian border to the south-east.

8 Miles From Roumania

Czernowitz is only eight miles from the northernmost corner of Roumania. From the Bukowina capital to where the Carpathians touch the Roumanian border the distance is about 50 miles. Only if the Teutons were positively assured against a possible attack by Roumania at a later stage of the new Russian offensive could they afford retaining their lines on the Roumanian border and withdraw their Bukowina forces to this fifty-mile stretch. In view of the uncertainity of Roumania's future attitude and repeated assertions that "a strong military showing" on the part of the Russians, and only such a showing could induce her to actively join the allies, it is not believed lieved that Field Marshal von Mackensen will risk being pushed against King Ferdinand's frontier, for the Russians with their apparently reinforced and well equipped masses could easily drive southward to the Carpathians and thus completely bottle up the Teutons.

Serious Position

In that event the Teutons would be in the same position as the allies were in Macedonia; they would face the alternative of fighting a decisive battle or retreat into neutral territory, namely, Roumania. That kingdom is, however, not in the same position toward the Teutons as Greece was toward the Entente's troops, but, on the contrary, is generally conceded to be morally pro-ally. The fighting in the Bukowina particularly the Russian offensive there, is, however, absolutely interdependent with the developments on the northern part of the battle line, and the Russian success in the south can be assured only by an equally continued and successful offensive in Volhynia. If the Czar's' troops fail to keep up their progress in the north, and allow the Germans to turn from the defensive to the offensive, Rovno, the one stronghold in the Volhynian fortress triangle, will be menaced and its fall, followed by a Teuton drive eastward, would endanger the Russians progress in the Bukowina will threaten the Teutons.

Lord Derby Makes Report

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Earl Derby's report on his recruiting campaign, which is addressed to Lord Kitchener concludes with the following paragraphs:

"The canvass shows very distinctly that it is not want of courage that is keeping the men back, nor is there the slighest sign but that the country as a whole is determined to support the Prime Minister in his pledge made at Guild Hall regarding calling out of married men the same as when that pledge was made. There is abundance of evidence of the determination to see the war through to a successful conclusion."

In a supplementary report to the foregoing Lord Derby says: "Large as the figures are I am afraid on analysis they do not prove as satisfactory as I could have wished. Owing to the great rush of recruits it was impossible in many cases to have more than a most perfunctory medical examination and the number of men who will be rejected when called up and subjected a a proper examination must be very large."

ONLY TWELVE SALOON PASSENGERS RESCUED

LONDON, Jan. 4.—(Special.)—A press telegram from Cairo reports that only twelve out of 80 saloon passengers on board the Persia were saved. The Peninsular & Oriental Company now estimates the loss of life to total 222. The name of Robert McNeely, American Consul at Aden, is not on the official list of the survivors received by the Admiralty.

Other prominent men and women who perished as the result of this latest massacre include Col. E. R. Swiney, Lieut.-Col. Howell, Lieut.-Col. Nethersole, Capt. J. T. Lodwick, Lieut. V. Gough; the Rev. A. C. Grant, pastor of the Anglican Church at Bombay; Mrs. H. DeR. Coddington, wife of Lieut.-Col. Coddington; Mrs. H. T. Tresham, who was the daughter of Major Burch of Leytonstone, and F. M. Coleman, one of the proprietors of The Times of India, Bombay.

HOW TO AVOID LA GRIPPE

(By Dr. C. J. O. Hastings)

Ventilate your rooms well.

Avoid exposure to those infected.

Keep the system in good order.

See that all eating and drinking utensils are sterilized after use.

Quarantine or isolate every person who gives evidence of cold in the head.

Look for trouble, and you will generally find fault.

Indian Prince On Liner Persia

Famous Jewels Reported Lost P. & O. Liner was Sunk by Sub.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—(Special).—The suite of his Royal Highness Jagatjit Singh, Maharajah of Kapurthala, were passengers on the steamship Persia, which has been sunk on its way to Bombay. A despatch from Cairo states that the Maharajah's famous jewels were lost with the ship, but gives no further indication of the fate of the members of his party.

The Maharajah was waiting at Port Said to join the ship and continue his journey to India accompanied by his suite. It is assumed that his wife, who was formerly Anita Delgado, a Spanish dancing girl, was waiting with him at Port Said, and that Miss Cullen was with them.

His Royal Highness is having an exciting trip back to India. When he sailed from New York on the steamship Rotterdam last August the greatest secrecy was observed, and not until the Rotterdam arrived at Falmouth was it made known that he was on board. He feared that on account of his great wealth and the aid which he had lent to the British cause the Germans would make a special effort to capture him or sink his ship. A British cruiser met the Rotterdam off Falmouth and convoyed it through the mine field.

ALLIES TAKE KAISER'S HOME FOR HOSPITAL

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The British Government has notified Greece that the Kaiser's summer residence, "Villa Achilleion," on the Island of Corfu, will be taken by the allies for use as a hospital, according to a Central News despatch from Athens.

Emperor William purchased "Villa Achilleion" from the heirs of the late Empress Elizabeth of Austria. The villa itself is a marble palace. Over the gateway is the word "Achilleion," as the villa was dedicated by Empress Elizabeth to Achilles, who, she said, was to her the personification of the Hellenic soul. The Island of Corfu belongs to Greece. It is about twelve hours by sea from Brindisi, the southern Italian port, and is one of the show places of the Mediterranean. The King of Greece also has a summer home there.

THIRTY TRANSPORTS LAND AT ORPHANOS

ATHENS, Jan. 4.—The newspaper Nea Hellas says that thirty transports filled with allied troops have arrived in the Gulf of Orphanos, Greece, and that disembarkation has begun.

Orphanos is about sixty miles east of Saloniki, and it was reported last week that the allies would land troops there.

UNION MEETING

The second service in the series of union meetings, during this "The Week of Prayer," was held in Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, last evening; the Rector of the Church, Rev. A. M. Hubly presided. All the pastors of the Evangelical churches of the city were present and took part in the service.

Rev. S. C. Moore, B.A., of the Tabernacle Church, gave a masterly address on the theme appointed—"The Church Universal."

There was a large attendance. Mr. Hubly informed the people that the offerings taken at these union meetings were to be given to the Belgium Relief Fund.

The meeting closed with "God Save the King," and benediction. Service this evening in West Belleville Methodist Church.

HORSE SMASHED WINDOW

At about 6 o'clock last evening, a rather peculiar accident occurred on Front street, resulting in the demolishing of a large plate glass window of the Ritchie & Company's store. It appears that Mr. Penny, driver for the John Sloan Company of this city, drove up to Vermilyea & Son's shoe store and ran into the store leaving the horse standing near the curb. The lines in some manner got beneath a runner of the sleigh and the animal in moving its head was so directed as to go upon the sidewalk where it slipped and fell. In the endeavor to regain its feet the horses' head came in contact with the window, smashing it to pieces and causing considerable commotion. The nose of the animal wsa slightly cut. The broken window is one of the largest in the city.

Another German Game Nipped

PARIS, Jan. 4.—(Special.)—Speaking on behalf of their countrymen, a committee of distinguished Allsatian statesmen publish a manifesto in today's Figaro protesting against the proposal of last week's Socialist Congress that Alsace and Lorraine vote on the question of annexation to France at the end of the war.

The committee says the formation of a plebiscite as proposed by the Socialists would be manifestly unfair, because of 350,000 German emigrants in Alsace and Lorraine, who would vote pro-German. The territory should be repatriated to France by the treaty of peace, say these statesmen.

Letters to the Editor

We are at all times pleased to insert letters upon subjects of local or general interest. It must, however, be understood that we in no way identify ourselves with our correspondents' opinions.

All letters should be written on one side of the paper only, and should be as concise as possible. They must be accompanied by the name and address of the sender, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

Editor, The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Permit me through your columns to bring before the ratepayers of Hastings County the vast and useless expenditure that has been incurred on the repairs of O'Brien's Bridge. According to the report of Mr. Allen, the Engineer, at the county meeting, he was authorized by the Council to go ahead and repair the bridge, the south pier of which had settled some few inches at the east end. The work was commenced about the middle of August, 1915, since when, in my opinion, there have been nothing but a series of experiments for which the ratepayers have to go down in their pockets to pay.

Two acrloads of timber were on the job, half of which has never been used. These were for the purpose of making false piers to support the bridge. Surely if the Engineer had taken soundings where these piers were to be built he could have estimated the amount of timber required without having the taxpayers pay for carting a lot of material which was not to be used.

This timber was hauled from Corbyville siding, a distance of five miles. Six timbers to a load was all that the teamsters put on, making two trips per day. These men were paid at the rate of $3.50 per day or 35 cents per hour. At no time during the work was any teamster on the job at 7 a.m. and they were all gone before 6 p.m. These men should not have got a full day's pay. I for one believe in paying a fair rate for actual work, but I am sure there is no other job where men are paid from the time they leave their stable till they get back.

The steel coffer dam, of which there was about 110 pieces 35 feet long and weighing about 1100 pounds each, was hauled from the same siding—three pieces to the load. Had this teaming been let by contract the County would have saved quite a sum of money.

A car load of cement was carted up in September, and is still there, the most of it being unfit for use as it has hardened.

This shows extremely bad management, as they did not know at the time what amount of cement they would require and when they would start to use it.

This carting in itself has shown very bad management, and while dealing with it I would like to add that the price of some of the fuel (cordwood) which was bought, was $5.00 per cord, or $6.00 delivered. Was the seller allowed to deliver the wood? No; but a team was hired and paid at the rate of $3.50 per day for hauling two cords —which made the price of the fuel $6.75 per cord.

The hoisting engine which was hired costs the County, I believe, $75.00 per month rent. This engine, before being erected, was examined by a man sent specially from Belleville. He condemned it as being unfit for use; yet it was put up and put in operation, and was not capable of supplying enough steam to run the steam hammer for the purpose of driving the piles for the coffer dam, as a consequence of which, the work of driving the piles had to stop every twenty minutes or half-hour till they got up steam. Another engine was brought from Madoc and connected up. The cost of working these two pieces of junk would make a nice bill. Coal and wood arrived every day, and three men were occupied in running these engines—one man, a certified stationary engineer, a fireman and a man to supply the water, carrying it in pails a distance of about 35 yards. When a person takes into consideration the fact that it took over seven weeks to construct this cofferdam, surely it would have been a money-saver to have put a small hand pump in, which could have been operated by the fireman in addition to his other duties.

When the pumping started to empty the cofferdam it was found that these two engines were not powerful enough, and a traction engine belonging to the County took the place of the one from Madoc. This was an improvement, but then it was found that the pump was too small, although the foreman said that it would only take four minutes to empty the cofferdam. Another and larger pump was brought on the job, and having been tinkered up by the engineer, was put into operation along with the small pump. Even then these two pumps failed to do the work. The water would be lowered about three feet after several hours' pumping, and fifteen minutes after the pumping stopped the cofferdam was as full as when they started.

The engineer (Mr. Allen) instructed the foreman to shingle the cofferdam, that is, where it showed any signs of leaking to drive in the thin edge of a shingle. This was about as much use as the manure which was put on the outside of the dam, which went down stream as fast as it was put in.

Another large pump was brought on the job, but has not been put into operation yet as the work has been stopped; but from reports, we have to pay two dollars per day for the same.

Evidently the heads of this work are at a loss as to how to proceed, and are afraid if the original pier was left as it was, the ratepayers would insist on the bridge being left in its original state, which would be anything but creditable to the men at the head of affairs. The pier, I understand, was to be left until the part now under water was examined, but the pier was blasted and thoroughly destroyed. This act, I think, shows the incompetency of the people in charge as they were unaware of the true cause of the pier settling.

According to reports of several old residents in the vicinity of the bridge, the pier has not settled any in the last three years; and while the work was going on the gin pole for hoisting purposes was placed on the pier. The pier, with all this jarring, did not move enough to cause a ripple on the water inside the cofferdam.

Although the report goes that Mr. Sills saw the foreman distinctly move the pier, which weighs approximately some 35 to 40 tons, with an ordinary crowbar, this is a most ridiculous statement for any person to make.

On one of my visits to the bridge I noticed some timbers with truss irons extending on each side of the bridge. When I asked what it was I was informed that it was for the purpose of putting a chain block to hold the steam hammer.

"I" beams were sent to Belleville, two or three trips being made, for the purpose of having holes bored for bolts. After a couple of days being occupied in the erection of this track it was found to be of no use whatever. Is this experimenting or not?

In the beginning of December, when the men were working half an hour at noon to get in their ten hours. The local men who were on the job were told that work would not start till 7.30 although it was light enough at 7 a.m. —but the only reason they got when enquiry was made of the foreman was that he could not get his gang up in time.

Below are a few questions which I am sure is only fair for the Council to answer:—

1.—From whom was the hoisting engine rented, and at what rent?

2.—Who ordered the cement to be delivered; was it properly checked off, and by whom?

3.—Who measured the lumber and checked same to see if the amount received tallied with the invoice?

4.—Does the Council expect people to supply the tools for this work?

The ratepayers of Hastings should certainly rise against any such waste of money as has been expended on this job. The Councillors who have allowed this work to go on in the manner it has are certainly not competent men to represent the people.

I am,

Yours truly,

D. POUCHER.

FRENCH COOK PRAISES A BELLEVILLE PRODUCT

Graham Co. Receives Words of Praise From a Cook in The French Army

The Graham Co., of this city, have received the following letter from a French cook in the trenches, and speaks well for the company and their product:

From the Trenches, Dec. 13, 1915.

Sir:—Being a cook I am using your product with success; it it very practical. We have to give our men soup early in the morning. Before we were obliged to peal all the vegetables by candle light, which was very hard. All the men in our company say the soup is very good. I want to tell you that we are from different countries and a little help from you would do us a lot of good, because we do not get help from home.

Yours very truly,

MILON DESIRE,

20th Co., 801st Infantry.

The Graham Co. are sending some assistance to these men, which they hope will be acceptable.

Fatal Accident In G.T.R. Yard

Thomas Curry, a Section Man, Struck by Light Engine and Killed—Inquest to be Held

Mr. Thomas Curry, who was employed as a section man on the Grand Trunk Railway, yesterday afternoon met his death in the yard here, whilst in the discharge of his duties. Although the unfortunate accident was not apparently seen by any person, it appears that Curry was engaged in cleaning out a switch near the round house, which is situated in the east yard. An engine, upon which Mr. Johnson was engineer and Mr. Taylor fireman, had brought in a short haul freight train, and the engine was running backwards towards the round house, when it struck Curry, inflicting injuries which virtually caused instant death. After the victim had been struck he was picked up and conveyed to the G.T.R. waiting room, but death ensued in the meantime. His injuries consisted of the chest being caved in, the left leg fractured near the thigh and terrible wounds about the head. At the point where the accident occurred there are several tracks, and engines are continuously passing to and fro. It is surmised that Curry did not notice the approach of the engine at the point where he was working. The engine did not pass over the unfortunate man, but threw him to one side.

After death ensued the remains were conveyed to Tickell & Sons' undertaking establishment, and an inquest was ordered by Dr. Boyce, a coroner of the city.

The deceased was about 55 years of age, and was born in Hungerford Township, being a son of the late Mr Alexander Curry. He had lived in Belleville for some time, his home being on Cemetery street. He had been about five years in the employ of the G.T.R. and was considered a good reliable man. A widow, one son and two daughters survive. Mr. Curry was an adherent of the Methodist church.

Funeral notice will appear to-morrow.

The Inquest

Last evening the inquest was opened before Dr. Boyce, coroner, at the Morgue of Tickell & Sons, before the following jurymen: Mayor Panter, foreman, R. E. Adams, W. H. Day, R. W. Adams, C. Walters, J. B. Archibald, E. T. Cherry, R. D. Black and J. Penny.

Sergt. Naphin being sworn, testified that the jurymen selected were qualified to act in that capacity as they were residents and voters in the city.

John Wesley Curry, a son of the deceased, gave testimony as to recognizing the body as that of his father. He (the witness) worked for the G.T.R., and was speaking with his father a few minutes before he met his death. He could not tell how the accident occurred as he did not witness it.

This was the only evidence taken and an adjournment was made until Friday evening of this week, at the police court room.

In the meantime the remains have been prepared for burial and taken to the family residence on Cemetery street.

Czar Renews Peace Pledge

LONDON, Jan. 4.—During a review of the Russian army on January 2, Emperor Nicholas delivered an address to the Chevaliers of the Order of St. George, according to a news agency despatch from Petrograd. The Emperor is quoted as saying:

"To you as the most valiant representatives of our army, I offer my most cordial and profound appreciation of your services which in this campaign have been full of bravery and sacrifices. I am pleased to transmit to your respective regiments my sincere gratitude for your painful efforts which have succeeded as all Russia, as well as I, understands. And rest assured that, as I said at the beginning of the war, I will not conclude peace until we have expelled the last enemy from our territory and I will only conclude this peace with the full accord of our allies, to whom we are bound not by paper treaties, but by real friendship and blood.

"I ask you personally to convey to all the troops my recognition of their devoted service which gladdens my heart. May God protect you."

92 Per Cent. of Foe Exports Stopped

LONDON, Jan. 4.—(Special.)—A British Parliamentary memorandum was issued tonight dealing with the "interception of sea-borne commerce of Germany." Referring to German exports to America, the report says:

"The latest returns available, namely, those of September, show that over 92 per cent. of the German exports to America have been topped."

The report also states that effective measures have been taken to stop exports on a small scale from Germany and Austria to America by parcel post.

Regard For Neutrals

Summing up the results of the blockade the memorandum says:

"Firstly, German exports to oversea countries have been almost entirely stopped. The exceptions made are in cases where refusal to allow the export of goods would hurt the neutral concerned without inflicting injury on Germany.

"Secondly, all shipments to neutrals adjacent to Germany have been carefully scrutinized with a view to the detection of a concealed enemy destination. Whatever there is reasonable ground for suspecting the destinction of the goods they are placed in Prize Court. Doubtful consignments are detained pending satisfactory guarantees.

Restrict Trade With Germany

"Thirdly, under agreements with bodies of representative merchants of several neutrals adjacent to Germany stringent guarantees ae exacted from importers. So far as possible all trade between neutrals and Germany, whether arising overseas or in the country itself, is restricted.

"Fourthly, by agreements with shipping lines and by the vigorous use of the power to refuse bunker coal, a large proportion of the neutral mercantile marine which trades with Scandinavia and Holland has been induced to agree to conditions designed to prevent goods on these ships from reaching Germany.

"Fifthly, every effort is being made to introduce a system of rationing which will insure that the neutral concerned will only import such quantities and articles specified as are normally imported for his own consumption."

DEATH ROLL

WILLIAM WEBSTER

Many were the expressions of regret heard to-day when it became known that Mr. William Webster had passed away. His demise occurred suddenly during the night at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. John T. Sargent, 2nd Concession of Sidney Township, with whom he had made his home for some time. Deceased was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, 71 years ago. When a young man he came to Canada and for years was a resident of Belleville. In 1878 he was appointed Collector of Customs for the port of Belleville, and retained that position until a few years ago, when he was superannuated. Since that time he had lived a retired life. Mr. Webster was well known in this city and had a host of friends. He was a genial and kind hearted Scotchman, having a kind word for all. Mrs. Webster preceded him to the tomb a few years ago. Mrs. Sargeant, of Sidney, a daughter, is the sole surviving member of the family. Mr. Webster was prominent in Masonic circles, being a Past Master of Eureka Lodge, Past D.D.G.M. for Prince Edward District No. 13, a member of Moira Chapter No. 7, R. A. M. and King Baldwin Preceptory, Knight Templars No. 6. He was also a member of the Sons of Scotland Society of this city. In religion he was a Presbyterian. Heart disease was the cause of death.

MRS. FRANCES GILLUM

After a few hours illness Mrs. Frances Gillum, widow of the late Mr. Stephen F. Gillum, died at midnight last night at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Percy Geen, John street. Heart trouble was the cause of death. Deceased was an aged lady and was highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Mrs. Gillum had been a resident of this city for many years. She was born at Bedford, England, and came to this country at an early age. Deceased was a member of the Anglican Church. Two sons and two daughters survive. The sons are, Stephen F., of Japan, and J. S., manager of the Bank of Montreal at Winnipeg. The daughters are, Mrs. J. G. Thompson, of Gerardem, Missouri, and Mrs. Percy Geen, of Belleville. A funeral notice will appear later.

NILES' CORNERS

This neighborhood and vicinity were suddenly plunged in gloom when word came of the sad accident which caused the death of our blacksmith, Mr. Fred H. Nease. While he and Mr. Wm. Bedell went for a spin in Mr. Bedell's auto on Wednesday night, the 29th, something gave way about the car and it turned turtle, and badly cut and bruised Mr. Bedell about the face and head and fatally injured Mr Nese. He was rendered unconscious and remained so until Thursday morning, when death came. The car was badly demolished. Deceased will be greatly missed in his home and neighborhood, as he was a kind and tender husband and a good neighbor.

His funeral was largely attended on Saturday, the first day of the New Year. Interment at Christ church cemetery, Hillier.

Messrs. William and Ray Embry, and Mrs. Embry, of Belleville, visited Mr. B. Clarke's one day last week.

Mr. B. Clarke is improving.

Of all overworked women probably the housewife is the hardest worked. She has so much to attend to, with very little help. Her work can be lightened if she knows the value of system and she should try and take a short rest in the daytime. A physician who became famous almost around the world, Doctor Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the specialist in woman's diseases, for many years practiced medicine in a farming district. He there observed the lack of system in the planning of the work.

If it is a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncontrollable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, a woman naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the organs. In nine cases out of ten the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for its cure. The disorder should be treated steadily and systematically with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

For diseases from which women suffer "Favorite Prescription" is a powerful restorative. During the last fifty years it has banished from the lives of tens of thousands of women the pain, worry, misery and distress caused by these diseases.

If you are a sufferer, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free.

HOW TO SAVE YOUR EYES

TRY THIS FREE PRESCRIPTION

Do your eyes give you trouble? Do you already wear eyeglasses or spectacles? Thousands of people wear these "windows" who might easily dispense with them. You may be one of these, and it is your duty to save your eyes before it is too late. The eyes are neglected more than any other organ of the entire body. After you finish your day's work you sit down and rest your muscles, but how about your eyes? Do you rest them? You know you do not. You read or do something else that keeps your eyes busy; you work your eyes until you go to bed. That is why so many have strained eyes and finally other eye troubles that threaten partial or total blindness. Eyeglasses are merely crutches; they never cure. This free prescription, which has benefited the eyes of so many, may work equal wonders for you. Use it a short time. Would you like your eye troubles to disappear as if by magic? Try this prescription. Go to J. S. McKeown druggist, or to the nearest wide-awake drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Optio tablets; fill a two-ounce bottle with warm water, drop in one tablet and allow it to thoroughly dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. Just note how quickly your eyes clear up and how soon the inflammation will disappear. Don't be afraid to use it; it is absolutely harmless. Many who are now blind might have saved their eyes had they started to care for them in time. This is a simple treatment, but marvelously effective in multitudes of cases. Now that you have been warned don't delay a day, but do what you can to save your eyes and you are likely to thank us as long as you live for publishing this prescription. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail if your druggist cannot.

Railways War For Business

C. N. R. and C. P. R. in Keen Fight Over Freight Rates to Coast

VANCOUVER, Jan. 4.—A fight between the Canadian Northern and C. P. R. for business between the prairies and the Pacific coast appears to have been precipitated by the recent entry of the new transcontinental into the field of freight traffic.

C. N. R. officials said today that when their line started business, a few weeks ago, reduction in rates to and from Edmonton and many other points came into effect. They say that immediately following this the C.P.R. retaliated by clapping on a rate too high for switching cars at terminals in Vancouver and New Westminster. The C.P.R. owns practically all local switches and side tracks to industrials and warehouses.

A few days ago the C.N.R. threatened to appeal to the railway commission against a charge of $20 for switching a car when it believed the C.P.R. should have charged only $5. The answer of the C.P.R. is that the C.N.R. cannot appeal to the railway commission in so far as the railway in British Columbia is concerned, because Mackenzie and Mann agreed some years ago to give the provincial government at Victoria absolute control of rates. This brings a political as well as a railway question into the dispute.

BRITAIN TOO ANXIOUS TO SATISFY NEUTRALS

Prospective Unionist M. P. Contends Sea Power is Not Fully Exerted

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Thomas Gibson Bowles, who changed his political coat and subsequently reverted to his original faith, will be the Unionist candidate for the parliamentary seat of St. Georges, made vacant by the recent elevation of Sir Alexander Henderson to the peerage.

Mr. Bowles' role in the House of commons, to which, in view of the present system of uncontested elections, he is sure of being returned, will be agitation for the sterner use of Great Britain's sea power in the prosecution of the war. He contends that the navy's grappling irons are hampered by fear in some of the government departments of offending neutrals, and he wants to see a more complete stoppage of supplies reaching Germany through neutral countries.

'HOUSE BASED UPON WOMAN'

"A house is not based upon the ground, but upon woman," is an old Montenegro proverb. To her falls the hard work of the household. They use the sickle, tend the flocks, as well as the spinning wheel, and have the vitality and health to enjoy it.

American women should take more care to preserve health and vitality by avoiding nervous, run-down conditions, and for this purpose our local Druggist, J. S. McKeown, has a most valuable combination of the three oldest tonics known in Vinol. If you are weak, run-down, over-worked just try it.

King Peter of Serbia, old, infirm, and ill, fleeing before invaders and seeking an asylum in Italy, is one of the pathetic figures of the war. He managed to please his people principally by being merely a royal personage and never mixing in their politics. His daughter, a good, sensible girl, whose advice he often sought, married and went to Russia; his eldest son, in whom he centered his hopes, was compelled to leave Serbia, and the old man afterwards led a lonesome life at the royal palace in the shadow of the crime that made him King. Even should Serbia survive as a kingdom, it is scarcely likely that he will return as its King; he will be more willing than ever to turn the honor over to Alexander, his second son.

Joe Murphy, an old-time actor, best known for his impersonation in "Kerry Gow," died recently of pneumonia in in New York. He was 83 years of age, and left an estate estimated at $3,000,000. Mr. Murphy went to California in 1850, and was widely known among the early California pioneers. He made an annual visit to Canada for a period extending over many years, appearing in "Kerry Gow", "Shaun Rhue" and other Irish plays.

FRANCE AND THE WAR.

France has not called out its young men of the class of 1917, but the government has fixed to-day as the date when it may summon these young men for the beginning of their training, which means that they may be going to the front by April of this year. The class of 1917 means the young men who will be twenty years old in that year. If they should go to the front in April they will then be completing their nineteenth year, and so will be going to the colors only one year earlier than under ordinary circumstances. In this connection it may be recalled that in the American Civil War the North sent to the front nearly a million men of eighteen years old or less.

As a matter of fact, France has not yet employed in this war the class of 1916, that is, the young men who will become twenty years old this year, but they are undergoing preliminary training and will be ready for the firing line by the time men of the class of 1917 are beginning their preliminary work. First of all comes the weeding out of the unfit. Those who are physically disabled are set aside, and those who are not fully up to the required standard are assigned to auxiliary services, such as hospitals, clerical posts and other work in the rear of the armies. The older men are used as guards in prison camps and along railway lines.

It was said long ago that France had called out the classes of 1887 and 1888, that is, men in their forty-eighth or forty-ninth year. The government has notified these men that they may be required, but they have not been called to the colors. Compulsory service in France includes from the age of twenty to that of forty-seven. The class of 1887 was forty-seven years old in 1914, at the beginning of the war. A year later these men would have been beyond the age limit, so a law was introduced empowering the government to call upon the classes of 1887 and 1888 if necessary; but they are still in civil life.

France, it will be seen from these facts, is by no means at the end of its resources in the matter of men. A Paris correspondent, discussing the announcement concerning the class of 1917, says: "Four months are required to form the new soldier for safe service in the field—and the government pointed out that there could be no question of the class of 1917 going to the front before April of this year. Perhaps they will be needed then for the final smashing offensive — which everyone hopes will come by that time—but the government did not say. It is then Kitchener says England will have 4000,000 men under arms. France will have her part and more, as she has had from the beginning."

For nearly a year and a half a great part of the German army has been within one hundred miles of Paris, yet, whatever was the feeling in France during the first few months of the war, during the last year the French have been steady and confident. They have made terrific sacrifices, but they are prepared to make more. The French not only believe they are going to win, but they steadily refuse to consider any other possibility, and without hesitation, young and old, they back their belief with their lives. Deserving success, France will command it in time. It is giving a glorious example to the world.

BI-LINGUALISM.

The French press of the Province of Quebec has apparently lost all regard for the truth when dealing with the school question as administered by the Province of Ontario. La Presse, a journal conducted with more than ordinary ability, and as a rule somewhat moderate in dealing with questions of race, has been indulging in all kinds of vituperation when discussing the school question as administered in Ontario.

La Presse says: "Horror and "disdain of the French-Canadian "has been so cultivated in that "Province that race prejudice has "become there a normal senti"ment." Is it possible that La Presse does not know that such an accusation against the people of this Province is maliciously untrue? Again, in referring to the Toronto Daily News, it says, "It knows that "the little French-Canadians of On"tario are forced to learn their "French through the medium of the "English language."

"The little French-Canadians, on the contrary," replies the News, "are taught everything in French "for the first two years of their "school lives. During that time "they get English lessons through "the medium of the French lan"guage. Afterwards they spend "one hour a day at French gram"mar and composition.

"It is not true that these French "lessons must be conducted in Eng"lish, or that the use of French "conversation for explaining prin"ciples of the French language is "prohibited. (Regulation 17, Sec. "4, Sub-Section 1). La Presse must "know that its statement is untrue. " 'It is useless to try to reason with " 'a visionary,' says La Presse. "How much more useless to at"tempt to reason with a wilful per"verter of known facts!"

The race fanatics of Ottawa, aided by certain of the French press and French clergy of the Province of Quebec are, through ignorance of the facts, or wilful misrepresentation of them, rendering any concessions, if such are needed, impossible. Ontario is not averse to the teaching of the French language in its Public Schools. On the contrary it recognizes to the fullest extent the advantages accruing to all, particularly to those in public life, that a knowledge of both languages gives them.

This has been proved in the past and will be continued in the future, notwithstanding the constant misrepresentation of the school policy of the Ontario Government.

Returned soldiers, he intimated, are to be given the preference in the matter of Government positions."

Mackenzie King, Minister of Labor in the Laurier Government, speaking at North York on March 8th, 1913, charged a combination between Tories and Nationalists, and emphatically denied that there was any real navy emergency. "He has handed himself over body and bones to a group of men in England who say that when men leave the Old Land and go to the Colonies to build homes for themselves their loyalty cannot be trusted."

The Only Hope.

The only hope that Germany can see for the human race is for the Entente Allies to acknowledge themselves beaten. If they don't do that, the world will have to get along without being plastered over with "Kultur."—Montreal Herald.

A Monument.

The suggestion is made in the eastern press that a memorial to Miss Cavell should be erected in every capital throughout the empire. The idea is a good one. If a movement to place a monument at Ottawa to the heroic nurse's memory be started, we are sure the response of the people of the Dominion will be immediate and complete. Nothing has stirred the blood of British peoples round the world like the noble simplicity of the sacrifice of this fine woman has made for her country and for humanity.—Vancouver World.

Business.

General Joffre evidently does not allow sentiment or sympathy, or even politics, to interfere with his business of conducting the war. A late official statement showed that five generals of divisions had been retired, and three generals and seven brigadiers placed on the reserve. Apparently he doesn't know what it means to stand by an old friend for old friendship's sake, or to stick up for the boys for the sake of the boys. The one test General Joffre seems to apply to all: Whoever makes good goes up; whoever fails to make good goes down.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

Canada's Timber.

Analyzing in the annual number of The Monetary Times the factors which must be considered in estimating the life of Canada's present commercial timber supply, Mr. R. H. Campbell, director of forestry, Ottawa, states that the existing supply of commercial saw timber lies between five and seven hundred billion feet, board measure, and covers an area of approximately 170,000,000 acres, the greater part of which land is unsuitable for agriculture, but suitable for producing timber. There are over 150,000,000 acres of forest reserves in Canada, much of which does not carry timber of commercial value at present, but all of which is capable of producing valuable forest products.

The Poets' Corner

Which Was Kept?

There were two little kittens, a black and a gray,
And grandmamma said with a frown
"It will never do to keep them both,
The black one we'd better drown.

"Don't cry, my dear," to tiny Bess,
"One kitten's enough to keep,
Now, run to your nurse, for it's growing late,
And time you were fast asleep."

The morning dawned, and, rosy and sweet,
Came little Bess from her nap.
The nurse said: "Go, into mamma's room
And look in grandma's lap."

"Come here," said grandma, with a smile,
From the rocking chair where she sat,
"God has sent you two little sisters,
Now, what do you think of that?"

Bess looked at the babies a moment
With their wee heads yellow and brown,
And then to grandma soberly said:
"Which one are you going to drown?"

TO QUICKLY RELIEVE

Soreness and Inflammation

Rub in a few drops of Absorbine, Jr. It is surprising how promptly it penetrates and acts—how clean and pleasant it is to use and how economical, because only a few drops are required to do the work.

In addition to being a dependable liniment, Absorbine, Jr., is a safe, powerful, trustworthy antiseptic and germicide which doubles its efficiency and its uses.

When applied to cuts, bruises, and sores, it kills the germs, makes the wound aseptically clean and promotes rapid, healthy healing. It allays pain and inflammation promptly. Swollen glands, painful varicose veins, wens, and bursal enlargements yield readily to the application of Absorbine, Jr.

Hogs.

Selects, fed and watered, $9; 50c is being deducted for heavy, fat hogs, and thin, light hogs; $2.50 off for sows and $4 off for stags, from prices paid for selects.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Jan. 3.—The receipts of live stock at the Montreal Stock Yards for the year ended Dec. 31, 1915, were 73,913 cattle, 81,360 sheep and lambs, 120,972 hogs and 38,940 calves, while the receipts for the week ended Jan. 1 were 1200 cattle, 1500 sheep and lambs, 2700 hogs and 400 calves.

The year opened up rather quiet for cattle, and, as the supply was fair, an easier feeling developed in the market, which resulted in a decline of 25c per 100 pounds, but even at this reduction the demand from packers and butchers was somewhat limited. A weak feeling has developed in the market for sheep and lambs, and prices for the former since this day week have scored a decline of 25c to 50c per 100 pounds, and the latter 35c to 50c.

Calves are firm, owing to the small offerings, and sales of milk-fed stock were made at 8½c to 9c per pound, and grass-fed at 4½c to 6c. A stronger feeling prevailed in the market for hogs, and prices advanced 15c to 25c per 100 lbs. Selected lots sold at $10.15 to $10.25, sows at $8.15 to $8.25; and stags at $5.07½ to $5.12½ per 100 lbs., weighed off cars.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.75 to $8, do. medium, $6.50 to $7.50; do. common, $5.25 to $6.25; canners, $3.25 to $4.50; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6 to $6.25; do. medium, $5 to $5.75; do. bulls, $5 to $6.50; milkers, choice, each, $90 to $95; do. common and medium, each, $80 to $85; springers, $65 to $75; sheep, ewes, $6.50; bucks and culls, $6; lambs, $9.50 to $10; hogs, f.o.b., $10.15 to $10.25.

The smile faded from her eyes. She walked abstractedly, with drooping head, until a big blue violet, staring eagerly, caught her attention. She was down beside it in a moment, one finger under the velvet chin, that she might gaze more deeply into the single, mysterious, yellow eye. "Dear little violet," she said in a solemn voice, "if you see a gardener coming, you take my advice and just—die! It will save lots of trouble." The violet nodded sagely, and continued nodding, as if talking to itself, long after Truth had passed. The two understood each other perfectly.

But sad thoughts had no power to cling, a day like this. Oh, the joy of being in her woods again! Was ever a sky so blue? No chiselled dome could be more tangible. The fringed openings of pine-branches cut it into irregular shapes; each area might have been a slab of turquoise set in green bronze. The beams of the sun came in sheaves and bands through purple pine-trunks, that were half dissolved in golden mist before they could touch the earth. Sharp contrasts were eliminated. The luminous solvent crept with the warmth and lull of an elixir into the heart.

Truth wandered inconsequently from point to point, her course making odd little parallelograms and zigzags through the dry, scant grass. Now a wild iris beckoned her, a pointed, azure flame springing from the ashes of last year's growth; now a group of ferns, half-hidden in some tiny cave or dell, about to enroll curled fronds of chrysoprase, hung with loose white filaments, as of forgotten moon-rays. The great bronze welts upon the buckeye she knew for volcanoes of struggling leaves; the dried umbels and racemes of a vanished summer were pledges of beauty and rebirth. The dogwood trees gleamed out ever and again, and always with startling effect. Violets, iris, jasmine, and arbutus abounded. Not an inch of earth but might produce a friend. These, these alone were her kin, her companions; this was true living, this the only life,—to blend one's self with the being of the kind old earth, to lean one's tired head upon her knee, and let the mesmeric fingers of the wind exorcise the circle of the world's troubled phantoms.

She threw herself prone upon the old shawl, but kept her hands and cheek upon the sand. Her eyes closed in a drowsy beatitude of utter irresponsibility. The great, steady magnet of the earth radiated peace. She smiled dreamily as the sun threw over her a thin coverlet of warmth.

For an hour she lay there, neither asleep nor awake, but in the blessing of unreflecting trance, of impression more keen and inclusive for its directness, the consciousness of Nature's primaeval races, and, so lying, so dreaming, her human body drifted, as it were, into a world of other dimensions, the plane of things that leaf and bud; her blood ran as cool as the sweet sap along swaying boughs, and, through a stillness as absolute as if her heart had stopped —out of the very hush of finite movement,—a new and larger rhythm filled gradually the vacuum of her perceptions and she knew herself to be a mere sentient atom, part of the diurnal motion of a great, dumb planet, helplessely secure, transmutably persistent.

In her slow return to a perception of personal identity, Truth Dexter, the individual, dawned as a clear vision from the troubled haze of recent experiences. What had she to do with Craighead, culture and Boston? It was a pagan soul that lay there, sleepy and strong. A slight movement overhead drew her attention to a squirrel that peered down at her from a pine-branch, with round bright eyes and head tilted daintly. At that moemnt he was much nearer of kin than the grandmother who waited so anxiously at home.

Truth closed her eyes again, and a drowsy stir of speculation made her wonder whether, in some early incarnation, in a world as yet unpeopled, her spirit might not have been that of a pine tree or a hillside stream, which to-day's loosening of successive sheaves had freed for a last vision of Nature's harmony.

The sun, now directly overhead, caressed her with too fervent kindness. Idly she planted a little weed-stalk upward and noted that it cast no shadow.

"Why, it must be twelve!" she said aloud.

She gave a long sigh that was half a smile, and rose slowly to her feet, looking all the while around upon the forest.

"Yes, I must go," she repeated as if to the trees. "But, oh, how glad I am that I came! It is not lost. I have found it now, forever, and it was myself. Sometimes it seemed to be lost, but it was only watching for me here!

She stooped for the shawl and bonnet. Suddenly the old look of anguish darkened her face. Letting them fall she flung her arms impetuously about the nearest pine. "Old pine!" she cried, "did you ever have lightning crash down through your branches, so that you thought for a while you were dead, and could never grow any more? Well, that is just how I have been feeling! But after a while the first dreadful hurt passes, and you know that you are not dead,—that you are even going to keep on growing with what is left. The birds and squirrels won't laugh at your scars; and after a while, vines will creep up to hide the ugly spaces. Isn't it so, dear tree friend?"

The tree answered nothing, but that is often the way with a thoughtful listener.

CHAPTER XXVI

The Good And Faithful Servant

Mrs. Dexter stood on the veranda steps waiting Truth's return. At sight of her the pent-up anxiety broke into words:—

"My dear child! Where have you been so long? I began to fear that you were lost."

"Me lost!" cried Truth with a laugh. "Does a bird get lost in the air, or a fish in water? Why, mummie, I've been findin' myself. But it was selfish to leave you so long. What have you been doing your first morning?"

Mrs. Dexter did not answer at once. Her face changed into a beautiful sadness, and the smile on her lips deepened. Even before she spoke Truth knew.

"I went—to him!"

"Oh, mummie! Without me! I thought we'd go together this afternoon, when the woods were warmer."

"Yes, darling. For the first time without even you."

"Is the place in order?"

"Such beautiful order! Such neatness! Norah has done more than well. But you shall see for yourself, later. The whole quarter is swarming with friends come to welcome us home. You must speak a few words to them, and tell them that the presents will be here in a day or two. And right after lunch I have promised Uncle Norah that we would go all over the place with him. He has been hanging around since daybreak."

The old lady was more animated than she had been for months. Her eyes shone, and in her cheeks pale tea-roses bloomed.

"Mummie! I'll declare, you are a different woman already! Oh, isn't it good to be back home!"

Mrs. Dexter gave a long tremulous sigh of satisfaction, with, Truth vaguely imagined, something of bitterness in it, too.

"But where are the darkies, you say?" cried the younger woman. "I'll go to them at once; but if they expect to see 'Miss Troof' turned into a Boston swell, they'll get a severe shock."

The dusky community was assembled,—all but Uncle Norah. Literally, as Mrs. Dexter had said, he had been, since morning, dressed in the full glory of one of the Colonel's ante-bellum evening outfits, waiting for to take the two beloved mistresses over the scene of his care and loving labors. During the months of their absence he had found happiness in the task of restoring the old gardens to something of their former beauty. On every side new fences, smooth-trimmed hedges, and clean-cut gravelled walks gave evidence of good stewardship.

In appearance Uncle Norah strangely suggested a big brown cricket. The color, a rich mahogany brown, was identical; his arms and legs, stiffened by many winters of "mis'ry in de jints," stuck out at entomological angles. Even that time-worn falsetto, his voice, had the cheerful croak that brings to mind fireside dozing, and flickering logs. This analogy went further than externals, for Uncle Norah had kept tame crickets as long as the "Quarter" could remember, housing them under a particularly rusty brick at the corner of his hearth, and feeding them daily with dampened corn-bread. He could never be persuaded to impale one of these insects on a fish-hook, although every one knows that, to fishes, they are more tempting than wood-sawyers, grasshoppers, or the most contortionate of worms.

Once, when rallied on this weakness, he had retorted "Well! s'posin' I do lak crickets,—what den! My eyes iz my eyes, an' years my years, —nobody else ain't axed to lissen! Craickets stays where dey b'longs, an' sings, rain or shine. Dey don't gallervan all over creation lak hoppergrasses, and' straddle-bugs, an' yaller niggers. I reckin when de Good Lord comes ter figger up de seasonableness er crickets an' yaller niggers, de crickets gwine to come aut a good many jumps ahead." His assailant was a young and very "lively" yellow girl and the last remark struck home.

THEY REFUSE TO EAT

At periods in most childrens' lives they fail to relish their meals and refuse to eat even the delicacies prepared to tempt their appetites. They lack ambition, and growth seems impeded, which causes anxiety and worry.

To compel them to eat is a grave mistake, because nutrition is impaired. Healthful exercise in fresh air and sunshine is important, but equally important is a spoonful of Scott's Emulsion three times a day to feed the tissues and furnish food-energy to improve their blood, aid nutrition and sharpen their appetites.

The highly concentrated medicinal-food in Scott's Emulsion supplies the very elements children need to build up their strength. They relish Scott's—it is free from drugs. Avoid substitutes.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

ISHMAEL OF THE FOREST.

Life and Death Secrets of Megaleep, the Wanderer, Told by a Hunter.

One of the most interesting of the larger animals ranging through our northern forests here in Canada is the caribou. His Indian name, Megaleep, means the Wandering One, and it is rightly given. Of all baffling, uncertain creatures of the wood to mislead a frantic hunter Megaleep seems to be the most adept in the art among the big fellows. This is not so much due to his instinctive sense of cunning as to his apparently aimless wandering nature. He is here, there, everywhere, except where the hunter expects to find him. Then, too, he is as changeful as he is restless in his disposition. At once, he is shy and bold, solitary and gregarious; restless as a cloud, yet clinging to his feeding grounds, in spite of wolves and hunters, until he leaves them of his own free will; wild as a bird, yet impelled through curiosity to approach closely, even to his undoing—truly, Megaleep is the most fascinating and the least known of all the deer family.

Among the few who through very love of it have made a special study of the habits of such wild animals in their most remote haunts is William J. Long, who tells in a charming way the secrets of Megaleep's life and death, especially the latter, which is so peculiar as to excite one's greatest amazement. Mr. Long writes in part as follows:

Megaleep belongs to the tribe of Ishmael. Indeed his Latin name, as well as his Indian one, signifies The Wanderer, and if you watch him a little while you will understand perfectly why he is so called.

There is another curious habit of Megaleep; and this one I am utterly at a loss to account for. When he is old and feeble, and the hitherto tireless muscles will no longer carry him with the herd over the wind-swept barrens, and he falls sick at last, he goes to a spot far away in the woods, where generations of his ancestors have preceded him, and there lays him down to die. It is the caribou burying ground; and all the animals of a certain district, or a certain herd, will go there when sick or sore wounded, if they have strength enough to reach the spot.

All animals, when feeble with age, or sickly, or wounded, have the habit of going away, deep into the loneliest coverts, and there lying down where the leaves will presently cover them. That is why one rarely finds a dead bird or animal in the woods, where thousands die yearly. Even your dog, that was born and lived in your house, often disappears when you think him too feeble to walk. Death calls him gently; the old wolf stirs deep within him, and he goes away, where the master he served will never find him. And so with your cat, which is only skin-deep a domestic animal. And so with your canary; in death alone he would be free, and beats his failing wings against the cage in which he lived so long content. But these all go away singly, each to his own place. The caribou is the only animal I know that remembers, when his time of separation comes, the ties which bound him to the herd, winter after winter, through sun and storm, in the forest where all was peace and plenty, on the lonely barrens where the gray wolf howled on his track; so that he turns, with his last strength, from the herd he is leaving to the greater herd which has gone before him—still following his leaders, remembering his first lesson to the end.

How was his resting place first selected and what leaders searched out the ground? What sound or sigh, what murmur of wind in the pines, or lap of ripples on the shore, or song of the veery at twilight made them pause and say, "Here is the place?" How does he know, he whose thoughts are all of life and who never looked on death, where the great silent herd is that no caribou ever sees but once? And what strange instinct guides Megaleep to the spot where all his wanderings end at last?

A Drastic Optimist.

An English lord, well-known from some years residence in Canada and now at the front, is the author of one of the brightest and most comprehensive war sayings of any on record. This young lord—whom we shall not name, though he is personally known to many in this part of the country—wrote a letter not long ago to one of his relatives in this country. He is with one of the Guards regiments and therefore cannot be suspected of writing war "bon mots" in an arm chair in somebody's villa behind the lines. More than likely this lithe-limbed young aristocrat, with the pink cheeks gone to a bronze hue, was sitting on a cracker box when he penned or pencilled the following terse observation that is worth crystallizing into a song:

"Well, if we keep on killing the Huns as we've been doing of late, I hope the war will last a jolly long while, for we shall do the job all the better before we finish."

There is a philosophy of optimism born of experience in this sentence that should be copied into every recruit's scrapbook.—Canadian Courier.

Ahrens Picture for Patriotic League.

Mr. Carl Ahrens, the gifted Canadian painter, has given his beautiful picture, "The Willows," to the Toronto Women's Patriotic League to be disposed of for the benefit of the objects they have at heart. The gift is made jointly with Mrs. Ahrens, and is their way of doing "their bit." "The Willows," which is 24 x 32 inches, was to have been taken to Belgium with the Mercer collection of Mr. Ahren's works, for exhibition there. It had been intended by Brigadier-General Mercer, before war intervened, to exhibit this collection in England, Holland, France, and Belgium. "The Willows," which shows this exquisite painter of landscape at his best, was originally valued at $3,000, and should yield a large return to the Patriotic League.

A MASTER OF SATIRE.

Stephen Leacock is a Humorist of Subtlety and Vitality.

In "Who's Who" Stephen Leacock is described as a professor of political economy. You might imagine a dried-up, stooped, dusty little man, through whose spectacles the joy of economics still shines, and whose holiday reading consists of "The Statesman's Year Book", and the agricultural reports. The real Stephen Leacock is a humorist with twinkling eyes and a merry laugh, who lectures in political economy when he is not otherwise engaged.

Prof. Leacock's craftsmanship has improved with each book that he has published. There is a marked difference between the quality of "Literary Lapses" and that of "Arcadian Adventures with the Idle Rich." A few of the sketches in "Literary Lapses" he has scarcely surpassed. "My Financial Career" is an excellent example, but as a whole "Literary Lapses" is his poorest book.

Prof. Leacock is a master of delicate satire. He pokes fun at everything and everyone. No class of society is proof against his genial thrusts. Clergymen, financiers, and professors are equally favored. Prof. Leacock finds a sort of unholy joy in shattering our prejudices and illusions. Those who have been thrilled by Captain Marryat and inspired by Horatio Alger must experience a shock in reading "Nonsense Novels." Has the day come when the adventures of the poor, but honest Hezekiah Hayloft in New York arouse emotions, not of sympathetic admiration, but of uncontrollable mirth? O tempora! O mores!

Prof. Leacock's methods are entirely different from those of some American humorists. The latter get certain effects by the use of what is known on the stage as "slap-stick." Leacock is an artist, not a clown. Only a master can tell a commonplace story in such a comical way that the recollection of it, even in church, makes us clutch our nose in a desperate effort to avoid public disgrace.

Our political economist makes quite as much fun of the respectable, unimaginative middle class as Bernard Shaw, but with what a difference! The Shavian method is that of a surgeon who thoroughly enjoys a gruesome operation. Prof. Leacock loves his characters, even when he is laughing most heartily at them. His wit is never caustic. In the hands of a less "human" writer, Mr. Spillikins, in "Arcadian Adventures," would be nothing more than a shallow fop. Prof. Leacock makes him a pathetic little object, ridiculous as he is. Do you remember him when he was telling how Dulphemia had received his proposal, when his 30-inch chest was shaken with a sudden storm of sighs? "But at any rate she was awfully nice, let me say—everything I wanted, and when I explained what a fool I was, she said she didn't think I was half such a fool as people thought me. But it's all right. It turns out that she isn't thinking of getting married. I asked her if I might go on thinking of her and she said I might." Poor little Mr. Spillikins!—J. D. Bush in Toronto Star Weekly.

Canadian Singer Returns.

Miss Juliette Gauthier, a French-Canadian girl whose musical education was conducted under the patronage of Lord and Lady Strathcona and Sir Wilfrid and Lady Laurier in Budapest, Rome, and Paris, and who has studied under the world's greatest masters, has returned to Ottawa, her home town, to remain until after the war. Miss Gauthier has a charming personality, is artistic in appearance and is gifted with a quaint humor, altogether irresistible.

Miss Gauthier's musical education began in Ottawa, where she studied the violin at the Conservatory of Music. Later she studied at McGill Conservatory of Music under Alfred De Seve and attended the Royal Victoria College for Women for two years. In 1907 she left Canada for Budapest, Hungary, where she was accepted as a pupil of Jeno Aubay and also admitted to the Royal Conservatorium of Music, which is a high honor as she was the only Canadian ever admitted. After three years' study she passed examinations for both singing and violin and under the advice of Jeno Aubay and David Popper, the world renowned 'cellist, also of Budapest, Miss Gauthier went to Italy to take up singing. She remained there for four years under Vincenzo Lombardi, the most celebrated teacher in Europe.

After a successful debut in Italy she signed a contract with the Boston Grand Opera. She has sung in several concerts in Canada, and would have toured the Dominion but for the war, which interrupted everything of that kind in this country.

Miss Juliette Gauthier is the daughter of Louis Gauthier, of Ottawa, and a sister of Miss Eva Gauthier who also is well known in musical circles in Europe and America.

A Floating Studio.

An experiment probably without a parallel on the continent will be undertaken by Mr. and Mrs. F. McGillivray Knowles, the well-known Toronto artists, in a few weeks when they will say farewell to studio life on dry land and embark on a floating studio on the inland waters of Canada and the United States. Mr. Knowles has purchased a commodious yacht, the "Ariel," and will make it the future home and studio of himself and wife.

The yacht is 80 feet in length, and will be fitted up as homelike as possible. Mr. and Mrs. Knowles will leave Toronto in February for New York, their headquarters, and will then move north and south with the sun, as it were. In cold weather they will be far down to Florida, and come north with the warming winds, spending the summer months probably in Canadian waters. The experience will be unusual, but Mr. Knowles believes it will be healthful and inspiring to his work.

KINGSTON

The Government of Canada has purchased a number of rapid fire guns of the Lewis type, and these are being issued to the Canadian troops now in training. It is not the intention of the Government to have this type of rapid fire gun take the place of the machine gun proper, but to supplement its use by this small and easily handled English product. The Lewis gun is really an automatic rifle, and not a machine gun. For aerial work, such as attacking aeroplanes, it is a splendid weapon, but for assailing a large target in the form of a large body of troops it lacks the destructive and demoralizing effects of the machine gun with its belt feed and fixed platform. The Lewis rapid fire gun is practically an ordinary rifle barrel with a rapid firing attachment, surrounded by a metal tube, with a fan apparatus for air-cooling the barrel. Over the loading mechanism is a large disk, which is loaded with a clip of 49 bullets. The loading is a simple matter, and all that has to be done is to replace the disk, point the rifle, and pull the trigger, and the gun will maintain fire until the disk is exhausted. In emergencies several disks, ready loaded, can be kept on hand, so that firing may be almost continuous. The whole gun weighs about 29½ lbs. and can easily be carried on a man's shoulder. It has an extreme range of 4,000 yards, but is most effective at short ranges. Whilst the Lewis gun can be used on a fixed platform, it is really intended to be used as a rifle, and as a rifle the human element handicaps it in competition with the machine gun proper and its fixed platform, and an entire absence of the human element in driving at a target under the most exciting conditions. One Lewis gun with every machine gun section will, however, be a valuable addition.

A great recruiting meeting was held in the City Hall, Kingston, in the interests of the 146th Battalion. A parade took place from the Armouries to the City Hall in which the R.C.H.A. Band, the members of the Kingston Veterans' Association, and the returned heroes from the front took part. The meeting was addressed by Gen. Hodgins, Col. Hemming, Lt.-Col. Low, "Trooper" Mulloy and others. At the close of the meeting fifteen members of the Salvation Army enlisted.

NEW DEPARTURE IN EARLY CLOSING

During the Months of

January, February, March

SINCLAIR'S STORE Will Close

Saturday Nights at 7:00

After carefully considering the question of Early Closing, we have decided that for the Winter Months of January, February and March we will close our Store every Saturday Night at 7 o'clock.

This early closing means much to our Staff, many of whom live a long distance from our Store, and will thus be saved a long walk to and from their homes during these stormy winter months.

But in this movement for Early Closing we must ask the co-operation of all our customers, as well as the many friends of such a forward movement, for we want to serve the public just as well for the future as we have tried to do in the past.

Instead of our staff going home to tea, one half at 5 o'clock and one half at 6 o'clock as heretofore, they will now all remain until 7 o'clock, and the hours from 5 to 7 will, we hope, be busy hours in our store, and our complete staff will be at your service.

This Early Closing will begin Saturday, January 8th

EDUCATING THE RICH

PETER M'ARTHUR DREAMS OF A NOVEL SCHOOL.

Just by Way of Making Education Really Universal Instead of Limiting It to the Farmer and the Worker He Suggests a Class for the Capitalist and the Captain of Industry.

THE following passage from Peter McArthur's new volume of essays "In Pastures Green," contains kindly humor and a wealth of common sense which will make an appeal to the citizens of rural Ontario:

Since moving to the country I have been greatly impressed by the spread of education. Those who are set in authority over us seem to think that education is a remedy for everything. If the farmers are not prospering the cry goes forth, "Educate them." When the high cost of living begins to pinch in the cities they trace the whole trouble to the farmer, and then someone yells, "Educate him!" If the farmer complains about the exactions of the middlemen, the answer invariably is "Educate him." No matter what "Educate him."

Once in a while a reporter representing the press, our modern palladium of freedom, calls on a canning magnate and tells him in a deferential tone that the farmers are complaining because he is not paying enough for tomatoes on the hoof and is charging altogether too much for catsup. The great man looks at the paragraphical serf with a baleful eye, scatters some benzoate of soda on a pile of bills, puts them into his vault and snarls: "The farmer is grumbling, is he? Then ejjercate him."

Another trembling representative of the above-mentioned palladium calls on a high financier and tells him that the farmers are complaining because the last issue of watered stock he unloaded on them had typhoid germs in it.

"Oh, they are, are they?" sneers the plutocrat as he packs a tainted million in a deposit vault and wipes his hands on his overalls. "Then why don't you educate them?"

While I [illegible] on [illegible] of the voluminous report of the Department of Education meditating on these deep matters in a playful spirit I began to wonder what would happen if the farmers got to thinking, like everyone else, that education is a national cure-all. If they once get this into their heads they will want to educate a few other people who are standing in the way of progress. They will want to start night schools in Toronto and Montreal to educate a few plutocrats into right ways of thinking. Does not your imagination kindle at the prospect? The class-room would be the smoking-room of the Millionaires' Club, and the little scholars would be sitting around in large, kind-looking armchairs, smoking expensive cigars, toying with slim-necked glasses, and letting their second chins rest comfortably on the bosoms of their dress shirts. Unobtrusive imported waiters would be flitting about noiselessly, taking orders and promoting good cheer. Enter Bill Simmons, instructor in true economic doctrines. Bill's necktie is climbing over his collar, but no one dares to smile, for he is carrying a well-oiled harness tug in his brawny right hand. Hanging the tug suggestively over the corner of the mahogany desk, he takes his place on the costly Ispahan rug, thrusts out his chin truculently, and opens the proceedings with a few well-chosen words. Thus Simmons:

"The House Committee informs me that after last night's session some of the hollow-stemmed glasses were full of cigarette ashes, and that there were cigar stubs in the silver-plated champagne-coolers. Now, I want it distinctly understood that if I catch any dollar-besotted financial degenerate up to tricks like that I shall dust his swallow-tails so that he will eat his meals off the onyx mantelpiece for the next week and then I shall kick him several parasangs down the street. Do you get me?" (Oh, yes, he would talk like that. You have been educating him, you know.) "The class in elementary economics will now step forward."

Prompt at the word Sir Philabeg McSporran, Senator Redneck, Mr. Gosh Whatawad, and a few others step to the edge of the rug, where they stand with thumbs at the seams of their trousers legs, heels together, and their toes well apart.

"Now, my pretty ones," says Bill, "if a railroad is built under a government charter, with the assistance of the public treasury, and is then presented to the company that [illegible] it, to whom shoula that railroad finally belong?"

"To me," pipes Sir Philabeg, who is a High Financier and understands how to manipulate the market.

"Wrong," says our bold bucko from lot 17, seventh concession of Alfalfa township. "It will belong to the peepul—at least sufficiently so to justify them in regulating its operations so that it will serve the best interests of the community. You may go to your seat, Sir Philabeg, and figure it out, and I will come around with the tug in a few minutes and see that you have it right."

Then the grim instructor goes on: "What is a Big Interest?"

"A corporation that contributes liberally to our campaign fund," says Senator Redneck, with a knowing smile.

"Wrong!" booms Simmons. "The Biggest Interest in this country is farming and after that comes labor—both engaged in producing the real wealth of the country. If anyone is to get special privileges the farmers are the ones that should get them. You may go to your seat and figure that out, and I will see you when I get through with Sir Philabeg."

And so it would go through the whole educative evening.

Toronto's Debentures.

Toronto last year sold $15,000,000 worth of municipal debentures.

ANIMALS IN PAWN.

Tame or Wild, They Are Good For a Loan In This New-York Shop.

Among the curious industries or sources of livelihood in New York city is an animal pawnshop. As you take a watch to an ordinary pawnshop to raise money on it, so you may take a watchdog to the animal pawnshop. Recently a man did this, getting $20 on a dog that was easily worth $50, the pawnbroker said. But he was a trick dog which had been taught to open doors. So in due time he opened a door and let himself out while letting the pawnbroker in.

A well known animal trainer owns the shop. He takes camels, lions, elephants—any animals. There are no charges for interest on the loan, the only charge being for the keep of the animals, among which at almost any time are dogs, monkeys, bears, goats, cats, coons, foxes, parrots, canaries. At one time he had forty trick donkeys in pawn. The profits arising from charges for feed and care are enough to make the institution pay.

Once he had a lion in pawn which broke his chain in the stable and went roaring around, scared almost to death, and it was only after heroic efforts that they mustered courage to capture him. As a matter of fact the animal was a decrepit beast that had served his time in sideshows and was anxious to get away.

Good Advice on Hair Culture

How to Stop Falling Hair and Drive Away Dandruff

Once a day, if only for one minute, every woman and every man, too, for that matter, ought to rub the scalp vigorously with the tips of the fingers.

The blood supplies nourishment to the hair, just as it does to the skin, and frequent massaging gently stimulates the scalp and causes the blood to flow more freely.

Both men and women should be careful in the choice of a hair dressing. A good one used regularly, not only destroys dandruff germs, but keeps the hair from falling, and causes it to grow profusely and lustrous.

Parisian Sage is the hair dressing, grower and beautifier most in demand by discriminating people. So certain is its tonic action on the scalp and hair, and so sure is it to give the limit of satisfaction that the manufacturers guarantee Parisian Sage to abolish dandruff, to stop falling hair and itching scalp, or refund your money.

Parisian Sage is free from grease and stickiness and once used will never be displaced by any of the ordinary commercial hair tonics.

A large bottle costs but 50 cents at your druggists.

"I have used Parisian Sage for some time, and think it has no equal as a hair beautifier and scalp cleaner."—Mrs. William Hoglund, Sault Ste. Marie.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices, or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

INSTALLATION OF OFFICER

S. O. E. B. S.

At the regular meeting of Oxford Lodge 17, S.O.E.B.S., last evening, January 4th, the ceremony of installation of the officers elect for the ensuing year was carried out in a commendable manner by District Deputy P.P. Bro. Goodman of Deseronto, who expressed his appreciation of the able and efficient way in which the officers of the Lodge conducted that business. Following the installation ceremony, D. D. Bro. Goodman presented P. P. Bro. Follwell with the handsome Past President Jewel. P. P. Bro. Follwell expressed his appreciation of the honor bestowed upon him in a few well chosen words. At the close of the meeting the members adjourned to the anti room, where a dainty repast was provided for them by Bro. J. L. Simpson and his fellow committeemen, to which the brethren did ample justice, afterwards carpet ball was played until the bewitching hour of midnight. The following officers were installed:—

MUSIC & DRAMA

MAY BELL MARKS CO.

A good crowd greeted the May Bell Marks Co. last night at Scott's Palace Theatre, and it is no exaggeration to say that they presented one of the best plays seen in this city in many a day.

Not only was the play above the standard, but the presentation of it was highly commendable. May Bell Marks is an actress of recognized ability, and she is supported by a company with dramatic talent.

It is a relief after seeing a series of third and fourth rate companies murder the productions they have tried to present, to see a play presented that the theatre-goer may really enjoy.

The company staged "The Scarlet Band", a story of New York in 1912, during the investigation of graft in the police department, and Miss Marks, in the character of Mary Holden, could hardly be excelled, while Mr. Hubbard as Robert Clavering, is one of the best old men parts seen in Belleville in years. All the other members of the company filled their respective parts in a pleasing manner.

The specialties between the acts were of the highest class of vaudeville and the humor was really laughable, clean and bright, not of the stage worn variety.

PRESENTATION AND SHOWER AT BAYSIDE

On the evening of December 23rd, at the annual "At Home" of Wesley Sunday School, Bayside, neighbors and friends took the opportunity of making a tangible expression of their appreciation of the services and associations of their friend, Miss Winnie Gun, by presenting her with a beautiful writing desk accompanied by the following address:

Miss Winnie Gunn.

Dear Friend:—As we have learned with deep and sincere regret of your intended departure from our midst, we cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing to you our heartfelt appreciation of the sterling Christian character, the unselfish services that have won the esteem and gratitude of our whole community. We assure you that in our Sunday School you will be greatly missed by all. Ever ready to help in every good work, your devotion to duty in our Master's kingdom has been to us an inspiration. In our choir your place will indeed be hard to fill, and we shall long remember with pleasure the constraining and uplifting power with which you have led us in Christian song.

As a tangible expression of our appreciation of your labors of love, we beg of you to accept this writing desk, hoping it may remind you of our many associations together in Wesley church.

We trust that God's richest blessings may follow you wherever your future lot may be cast, and that true happiness may be your portion.

Signed on behalf of the congregation:

W.H. Finkle,
E. B. Mallory,
G. W. Bush,
E. Rush.

Miss Gunn, who was taken completely by surprise, expressed most feeling her thanks to all for the gift she would long prize in memory of her friends at Bayside.

Again on the evening of Monday, Dec. 7th, a very large number of the friends of Miss Gunn gathered at the home of Mr. Frank Wilson, to extend their congratulations and best wishes upon her approaching marriage. After a most delightful social evening the bride-to-be was made the recipient of a splendid miscellaneous shower, testifying to the popularity and high esteem in which she is held by all. A pleasant hour was spent in games and music, and after partaking of a bontiful repast provided by Miss Alice Wilson, the friends dispersed to their several homes, declaring that one and all had had an ideal time and one not soon to be forgotten.

WEDDING BELLS

WEESE—GUNN

A quiet wedding was solemnized at noon, December 29th, in Wesley church, Bayside, when Miss Winnifred Beatrice Gunn, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Gunn, was united in marriage with Mr. Kenneth Weese of Albury, by Rev. F. G. Joblin. The bride was given away by her father, and attended at the altar by Miss Alice Wilson, while the groom was assisted by Mr. Bruce Martin of Thurlow, cousin of the bride. As the register was being signed, Mrs. Frank Aikens sang "O Promise Me."

The happy coupie left immediately after the ceremony, taking the train from Belleville for Montreal, and other eastern points, acompanied by showers of good wishes from their hosts of friends.

PASTORS HAVE CHANCE TO FIGHT THE HUNS

Anglican Synod Believed to be Against Suggestion—Methodist Position

Pastors now have a chance to go as combatants. A suggestion that they do so has come from Ottawa. In face of this it is believed that the policy of the Anglican Synod is not to allow their clergy to go as fighters. Rev. Dr. Chown, General Superintendent of the Methodist Church, in an interview yesterday, stated that the Army and Navy Board of the Church does not stand in the way of any Methodist minister going to the front as a combatant if he cannot get there as a chaplain.

Several ministers yesterday declared themselves as favoring the scheme of a pastors' battalion. "I would like to see them do it," said Rev. Lawrence Skey, rector of St. Anne's Anglican Church. "I think there is no difference between a clergyman and a layman. I hold that if it is right for a layman, it is right for a clergyman," he continued.

SPORTING NEWS

HOCKEY

There was no game at Cobourg Monday night between Peterborough Electrics and Cobourg intermediates. Referee Ernie Lang of Belleville, who was at Cobourg to officiate, declared the game defaulted to Cobourg, but it is hardly likely that the Peterborough team will be declared out of all competition as teams which default usually are in O.H.A. competitions. There are peculiar circumstances. Peterborough had four men before the O.H.A. sub-committee yesterday applying for reconsideration of a refusal to grant certificates, and were confident of getting by. Of the four, only Jerry Coughlin was declared eligible. This left the Peterborough team with only five men to play Cobourg Monday night, and the wire service was so badly disorganized that Manager Smuck, who was in Toronto, could not get hold of club officers in Peterborough to send down juniors to fill the team out at Cobourg. The result was that he only had five men, and as Cobourg St. Michael's refused to play short-handed Referee Lang declared the game forfeited to Cobourg. No game at all was played, and the crowd was handed return checks.

B. C. AND THE WAR

Hard Times Have Driven the People Back to the Land.

The war and the collapse of real estate speculation are proving blessings in disguise to the people of the West, says a writer in Toronto Saturday Night. One has induced saner views in the direction of both personal and municipal economy, and the latter has removed most of the get-rich-quick spirit which was a mill stone around the neck of true progress. What the extreme western province has needed for a long time has been more natural production and less living on borrowed capital. The war has cut off the inflow of capital very decidedly, and the hard times are driving many people back to the land. It may be said at once that British Columbia will never be a great agricultural province in the sense that Ontario and Alberta are, because it abounds in mountain ranges, water courses and vast tracts which will never be anything else than mining areas, not to speak of the many unbroken stretches of standing timber. But there are many fertile valleys and districts which are suitable for mixed farming and fruit growing. The more they are cultivated the less the province will have to import. There is the fertile Fraser Valley stretching from Chilliwack to Boundary Bay, a distance of about ninety miles, most of which is extremely rich and capable of producing a vast amount of produce. There are some splendid farming areas on Vancouver Island, while vast areas in the Peace River district are suitable for raising wheat and other grains. The Okanagan is famous as a fruit-growing centre and its output is steadily increasing.

Okanagan growers are this year considerably extending their markets, according to information obtained from C. P. R. sources. For years past apples have been shipped from this province to the Old Country and prairie markets and also to Australia. This year the field has been widened and B. C. Jonathans and Wealthies have found their way to South Africa and the Argentine. Shipments to these latter countries are more or less of an experiment, but it is hoped to secure a market and gradually develop it with increased production in the Okanagan. The carload which was shipped to Table Bay last year was followed this season by three carloads. The initial shipment was made quite in the nature of an adventure, and it was gratifying for the shippers to learn that the fruit sent had been much appreciated and that more was demanded.

The first shipment to the Argentine, made this season, consisted of three carloads of Jonathans and Wealthies—apples which better stand climatic changes. It is hoped that this will be but the thin edge of the wedge in securing for British Columbia apples a place in South American markets.

Local freight officials of the C. P. R. state that arrangements have been made for the shipment of six carloads of apples to England from British Columbia, and there is a possibility of another six cars being sent. The last boat to Australia, it is interesting to note, carried 2,500 boxes of the King of Fruits. This Australian business is, of course, a trade of some years' standing, but it is reported to be developing steadily.

B. C. Timber Output.

According to the timber returns for the month of September issued by the British Columbia Minister of Lands, the total output of sawlogs for the Province, as shown by the sealing figures, amounted to 92,080,493 feet board measure, while 361,911 lineal feet of poles, piles, and props, together with 29,312 cords of railway ties, fence posts, shingle bolts, etc., were also scaled for royalty during the month under review. The figures for the Vancouver district were 53,001,924 feet board measure sawlogs, 14,394 lineal feet piles, etc., and 16,264 cords ties, bolts, etc., the Island district contributing 5,307,218 feet sawlogs, in addition to 2,520 lineal feet piles. In the Prince Rupert district there were scaled 954,135 feet sawlogs, while the totals under the same heading for the Cranbrook, Nelson, and Vernon districts were respectively 21,595,575 feet, 7,135,290 feet, and 3,349,603 feet. Poles, piles, and props to the total of 328,304 lineal feet were scaled in the Nelson district, and in the Cranbrook division to the total of 15,018 lineal feet.

Timber sales recorded during September cover an estimated total of 7,338,000 feet sawlogs, and 3,030 cords of shingle bolts, estimated to produce a total revenue of $12,876.

Exports to Britain Jump.

An increase in imports from Canada of $34,697,000 and a decrease in exports to Canada of $20,498,000 during the first nine months of the present fiscal year is shown by figures for that period received by the Trade and Commerce Department from Commissioner Ray, of Birmingham. The total imports from Canada were $138,917,000, and exports to the Dominion $49,407,000.

Details are also furnished of the recent steps taken by the British authorities in respect to the requisitioning of all ships of British register, which regulations closely affect Canada. These show that rumors that the Government contemplates the requisitioning of the entire British mercantile marine are without foundation, but that power has been taken to deal, by the requisitioning of a sufficient number of vessels, with cases where an emergency of national importance exists at any particular market owing to the absence of tonnage, and, further, to regulate the employment of British shipping in the carriage of cargoes between foreign ports by means of licenses.

Idle Dream.

"Poor dad! Sister told him that the girls of her class are going to graduate in dollar gowns."

"Well, what about poor dad?"

"He thinks a dollar is all he will be called upon to give up."

Silent Water.

Three or more can play the game called "silent water." First one is chosen to be "it." He or she is then blindfolded and made to stand in a corner. He then counts from one to ten and says, "Silent water no more moving." The rest of the players, having run to some place, stand still at the command. The first one found and named by the blindfolded person is "it."

The Contented Frog.

A dear little frog,
All spotted and green
(Indeed, just the cutest
Frog ever was seen).

Lived far from the town
In a pond, cool and clear,
And there he did dwell
Throughout the whole year.

He never went roaming
About, so 'twas said,
For he was a frog
That was most contented.

So there in his pond,
So cool and so clear,
Lived little green frog
Throughout the whole year.

Plenty of Room.

The young man who writes verses was standing out in the night gazing at the sky when a friend ran across him.

"What are you doing—studying astronomy?"

"Go away and don't disturb me. I am gazing into infinite distance."

"I don't see what satisfaction you find in that."

"That's because you never had any experience with editors. You don't know what a comfort it is to find some place where nothing is crowded out for lack of space."—London Tit-Bits.

DINOSAURS OF ALBERTA SWELL U. S. MUSEUM

Arrangement of Colossal Exhibit In New York Begun by Barnum Brown

NEW YORK, Jan. 4—New York now has the world's greatest collection of dinosaurs, according to the announcement made to-day by the American Museum of National History, which s to install its herd of monsters of the past in Dinosaur Hall among the fossil trees of the period in which they roamed the earth.

Barnum Brown, Associate Curator of the Department of Palaeontology of the museum, who has just returned trailing the big lizards among the rocks in Alberta, will now devote himself to the arranging of this colossal exhibit. The latest accessions weigh twelve and a half tons.

So important are many of the new finds that in formation concerning them is withheld until they can be scientifically named and described. They are said to indicate radical changes in the commonly conceived theories about animal life on the western hemisphere in pre-historic times. The museum now has complete skeletons of many important dinosaurs which previously, both in its own collections and in other institutions, were represented only by skulls.

PREPAREDNESS PLAN DOOMED TO DEFEAT

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Unless materially modified, President Wilson's preparedness plan is beaten. This is the opinion authoritatively learned to-day from the Administration itself.

The defection of Senator Kern, Senate Democratic leader, from the forces working for the great army and navy program outlined by the President in his message to Congress was the final proof to the White House that its plans will not carry.

Senator Kern's decision that he cannot support the program became known to-day. That the people of Indiana are opposed is his chief reason, it is said.

This leaves the preparedness program unsupported by the leaders in both houses. Mr. Kitchin, House majority leader, has held off from the first.

The wave of sentiment for a great preparedness program which a few weeks ago was sweeping the country aparently has reached its crest, some Administration leaders think.

To-day the President is receiving many discouraging reports. The opposition centres upon Mr. Garrison's army plan.

1000 SHELL MAKERS FROM CANADIAN TROOPS

OTTAWA, Jan. 5.—Special—Canada is helping Lloyd George by releasing for munitions work in England about one thousand skilled mechanics from among the Canadian troops who have gone overseas. The request for their release came some days ago, and was promptly acceded to by the Minister of Militia. To-day the following cable of thanks from Lloyd George was received by the iMnister of Militia:

"I thank you most warmly personally as Minister of Defence, and the Canadian Government, for the ready response which you made to my request, made to you through Sir Max Aitken, to release certain highly-skilled mechanics from the Canadian forces for work in our factories.

"I thank you again for your quick co-operation, which is another sign of the ties that bind the Dominion and the Motherland. The ressolution of our men in the field and in the factory is more powerful than ever, and we look forward to undoubted victory.

(Signed) Lloyd George."

British Repulse German Attack

LONDON, Jan. 5—Special—The Official Press Bureau to-night issued the folowing report on operations from British Headquarters in France:

"On the southern portion of our front there were active artillery actions.

"This morning we repulsed an attack on one of our advanced posts near Marincourt.

"Our aeroplanes successfully dropped bombs on the enemy's aerodrome at Douai. A German aeroplane dropped bombs on Boulogne, but did no damage."

CONSCRIPTION BILL WILL PLEASE NOBODY

Editorial Opinions of London Papers Denounce Bill—Satisfies Neither Conscriptionists Nor Voluntary Advocates —Labor Against Bill—Leader to Resign

IRELAND IS EXCLUDED FROM MEASURE

Bill Makes Compulsory Military Service For All Males Between 18 and 41 Who Are Bachelors or Widowers Without Children—Must Keep Faith, Says Asquith

Satisfies Nobody

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Judging by all editorial opinions expressed this morning the conscription bill will satisfy nobody. The voluntary papers denounce it almost as much as the conscriptionist press. A general election in the next few weeks is predicted by the Daily News, which declares it is almost certain the Labor Conference will decide against conscription and if the conference so decided, three more cabinet ministers, McKenna, Runciman and Menderson, will resign.

Bill Introduced

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The bill providing for compulsory military service was introduced in the House of Commons to-day by Premier Asquith.

The largest assemblage of members since the war began faced the Premier. Many members had obtained leave to return from the front so that they might be able to vote on the compulsion bill.

The Earl of Derby, who conducted the recruiting campaign, was in the Peers' Gallery.

Ireland is Excluded

Under the terms of the compulsory military service bill, introduced in the House of Commons to-day, all males between the ages of 18 and 41 who are bachelors or widowers without children dependent on them are liable for military service..

Ireland is excluded from the terms of the measure.

Mr. Asquith said no case had been made out for general compulsion, and that the bill he was introducing could be supported by those opposed to conscription.

Must Keep Faith

Mr. Asquith said he was totally unable, after making the largest possible hypothetical deduction, to consider the number of unrecruited single men as anything but a substantial and even considerable amount. He added that Sir John Simon, whose resignation as Home Secretary was announced yesterday, thought the figures might be reduced to an inestimable quantity. If he had shared this view, Mr. Asquith said, the present contingency would not have arisen, but he could not think that. The primary obligation was to keep faith at all costs with the married men.

Mr. Asquith said exemption from service could be claimed under the terms of the bill on the same grounds as in the case of men attested under the Derby plan. The grounds of exemption include conscientious objection to performing military service.

Other grounds for exemption from service, the Premier said, included ill-health, physical infirmities, the necessity to support dependent persons, and the fact of being engaged on work of national importance.

Labor Leader to Resign

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Arthur Henderson President of the Board of Education and leader of the Labor party in the House of Commons, served notice on the Labor Congress to-day that if it decided he should oppose the Government Compulsion Bill he would refuse to accept such decision and would immediately resign his seat and ask his constituents whether they approved of his action or not.

Labor Opposes Bill

The motion in the Labor Congress that Congress should support the measure of compulsion by forcing single men to attest, was defeated by two million, one hundred and twenty-one thousand votes to five hundred and forty-one thousand.

Trouble Over Ottawa Schools

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—A. Charbonneau, a member of the Ontario Government's commission to control the Separate Schools of Ottawa, was pelted with snowballs and ice yesterday afternoon by school boys at the Guiges school, which has been the storm centre for the past two days, the parents refusing to allow their children to be taught by commission teachers and supplanting them with teachers of their own. Mr. Charbonneau also became involved in a struggle with some of the opposing faction.

STEAMER PERSIA RECEIVED NO WARNING

Stories of Passengers Bear Out Previous Reports—Officers and Seamen Praised

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The survivors of the Persia reached Alexandria, Egypt, according to the account sent by Reuter's correspondent at that point, all bearing traces of shock and hardship. Most of them had badly bruised and bandaged limbs. One woman is in a hospital with a broken leg.

The tragedy was enacted so rapidly that the survivors say they hardly realized what had happened, consequently they had little to tell. The passengers were sitting quietly at luncheon, every one in good humor, and at atmosphere of gaiety prevailing. Five minutes later, those who escaped were in boats or clinging to wreckage, and the luxurious liner was completely gone.

Luncheon had just started when there came a terrific explosion. The liner trembled violently and a moment later listed sharply to port. Only those who left their seats instantly and those who had not yet come down to the dining hall had any chance to escape. Many seemed paralyzed with fear and sat as if glued to their seats. Their indecision was fatal, as the water poured in and the list increased. Some of those who gained the deck lost their footing and slipped immediately into the sea, while others were swept away by waves.

It was possible to launch boats only on one side of the ship, and only the promptest action by officers and crew enabled them to launch four boats. All the passengers praise the coolness and quickness of the crew. There were no signs of panic. Everyone made the most of the few remaining moments.

One young woman described her experiences as follows: "I was just sitting down at table when the explosion occurred. I ran at once to my cabin for a life preserver, and twice was thrown down in the passage by the rocking of the ship. I got to my cabin, snatched a life belt and rushed to the deck. I had the utmost difficulty in keeping my footing, and was again thrown down. As I reached the deck the liner lurched heavily and I fell. Although badly shaken and bruised, I quickly jumped into the sea, where I was rescued fifteen minutes later.

Two bank clerks going to Egypt rushed to the bridge and dived into the water from which they were saved. Mothers who went in quest of their children were saved.

The chief officer is said to have been in his cabin at the time of the explosion. He rushed to the bridge and did all that was humanly possible. He went down with the ship, although some passengers said they saw the captain swimming.

Everything possible is being done here for the comfort of the survivors. Charles Grant, of Boston, who, so far as known, is the only American now able to tell the story of the disaster, is a guest on board the United States cruiser Des Moines. Sixty-three Lascars among the survivors include a fireman and a stewardess. Only one of the stewardesses was saved.

GOLD FOR TORONTO COMES FROM BOMBAY

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 4.—When the British ship Gordon Castle, from Bombay and Cape Town, arrived in this port Sunday, after being convoyed by two British cruisers, great mystery surrounded a heavy guard of detectives placed at the pier. Collector of Port Ryan and Captain Betts refused to place any valuation on the cargo, which was listed as chrome ore and hides.

The mystery was cleared up to-day when it was learned that the Gordon Castle had on board 250 cases of gold and silver bullion, which has since been shipped by the Adams Express Co. to Toronto.

MORE C. P. R CONDUCTORS ARE IN TROUBLE

MONTREAL, Jan. 6.—(Speciol.)—C. P. R. Passenger Conductor Wm. Wallace appeared before Police Magistrate W. W. O'Brien of Fort William and pleaded guilty to a charge of theft and was fined $100.00. Conductor T. Reynolds, also charged with theft, appeared before Police Magistrate S. Weegar at North Bay on January 4th, who committed him for trial to a higher court.

GERMAN PRESTIGE IS SINKING IN GREECE

Failure of Teutons to Advance and Confidence of Allies Largely To Blame—King Learns True State of Affairs in Germany

GERMANS AND BULGARS FORM FOR DRIVE

Early Drive on Saloniki Expected by Central Powers Troops—Greece May Join Allies in Defence of Their Territory

German Prestige Drops

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 6.—A Daily Mail despatch from Athens says:—"The last ten days have seen the biggest drop in German prestige since the war began, despite the Allies' evacuation of the Gallipoli Peninsula. The failure of the Teutonic troops to advance; the Allies' confidence in the strength of their position at Saloniki, and the impatience of the Greek troops to resist any attempt of a Bulgarian attack into Greek territory which has compelled the Government to give the commander on the border necessary orders to be prepared for action against the Bulgars, are given as causes for this German slump.

"Moreover King Constantine is learning the true state of affairs in Germany from letters received by the queen from her sister, Princess Charlotte of Saxe Meiningen."

Preparing to Advance

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Special—The Austro-Germans are massing heavy artillery at Guevgheli for an early drive on Saloniki. A despatch to The Paris Temps from its Saloniki correspondent to-night says that allied aviators returning from a reconnaissance over the German lines, state that large numbers of twelve-inch mortars are arriving at the Greek frontier from Nish.

Field Marshal von Mackensen will command the combined army of Austrians, Germans, Turks and Bulgarians in their campaign against the Allies. Despatches to-night definitely locate the noted German Commander on the Greek front. He had previously been reported withdrawn to Bessarabia.

Despatches from three sources to-night indicate that the drive on Saloniki is at hand.

Massing on Frontier

The Saloniki correspondent of The Paris Temps says:

"There is great likelihood that von Mackensen will lead an immediate attack against the Allies.

'Our aviators report that Austro-German and Bulgarian troops are massing all along the frontier, particularly at Guevgheli, where a number of heavy cannon are being detrained."

The Saloniki correspondent of the Corriere Della Sera of Milan wires to his paper:

"The Comander-in-chief of the Allies to-day said to me:

" 'It looks like an early attack. That is just what we want.' "

In case the Bulgarians advance on Saloniki with the Germans, it is almost a certainty that Greece will join hands with the Allies and oppose the invaders as the Greek populace is determined that the Bulgars shall not set foot on Greek territory.

Belleville Woman Gets Award

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 6.—Mrs. Luella Ridley, of Belleville, is entitled to $204 from the estate of her sister, the late Mrs. Edith P. Bly, of Trenton, is the decision of Mr. Justice Britton, Mrs. Ridley asserted that her sister had invited her to come and help her in a grocery store she was about to open in 1901 and she would leave her half her estate. They got along well together till there was a difference between them about Mr. Ridley who afterwards became the husband of the plaintiff in this action and they parted in 1912. Mrs. Bly died, recently leaving an estate of $1800 and this action was brought against the only son of Mrs. Bly, as administrator of his mother's estate, Mr. Justice Britton holds that the agreement is not proved but that the plaintiff is entitled to $6 a month for her services for the period within the statute of limitation.

Doctor's Accident Cost Big Sum

Should Dr. F. W. Mitchell, late of Valparaiso, Ind., live to be seventy years of age and remain disabled, he will have collected $275,400 from the Fidelity & Casualty Co., if a judgment given yesterday by Mr. Justice Middleton yesterday holds that long. Dr. Mitchell was an eye, nose, ear and throat specialist, and was insured by the company in 1913, and paid four years in advance. In May last he fell from the upper berth of a sleeping car and injured his wrist, which is now helpless. The company paid him $13,500, and then quit payments. The judgment provides for a further payment of $1,950 quarterly.

Turks Shell Kut-El-Amara

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The General Townshend reports that the Turks shelled Kut-Elamara heavily for an hour on Sunday afternoon, but up to Tuesday there has been no further firing.

German Submarine Rendered Harmless

LONDON, Jan. 5.—During Christmas week a German submarine appeared in English waters, but it was so closely followed by patrols that it did not succeed in doing any damage.

According to the best information obtainable this was the first hostile submarine that had succeeded in cruising in British inland waters since September 23, 1915. The marauding U-boat encountered such heavy weather that her chances of obtaining any intended results were minimized. The stormy seas, however, also operated to save her from destruction by the patrols, which closely followed her every movement.

PASSENGER AGENT TO SERVE TWO-YEAR TERM

TORONTO, Jan. 6—In pronouncing a sentence of two years on W. A. Mason, found guilty of embezzling some $1,500, the property of the railway company, Judge Winchester in the Sessions Court yesterday remarked that the accused had betrayed a position of trust. The sentence, His Honor added, was not so much a matter of punishment as a warning to others. The system adopted by Mason was to turn in stubs on long distance fares as if the tickets had been issued to local points. It was pleaded on his behalf that he was exposed to temptation owing to the looseness of the system, and also that he had sold some tickets on credit and had never been paid.

Killed Five Tnrks; Revenge of Lusitania

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Jan. 5.—Special—Jas. Cooper, a former mill overseer in this city, who joined the British army after the loss of his wife's child on the Lusitania, has written friends in this city that in a fight on the Gallipoli Peninsula he jumped out of a trench, rushed to the opposing lines and killed five of the enemy without receiving a wound.

Cooper said that his act was inspired by the remembrance of what happened on the Lusitania.

RECRUITING MEN IN NEW YORK STATE

For Canadian Army, in Violation of United States Laws

WATERTOWN, N.Y., Jan. 5.—An international controversy may arise from the activities in this city for the past few days of "Jack" Leamon, formerly of Watertown, but now a sergeant in the Canadian army. Leamon came to this city from Prescott, where he is stationed, a few days ago, making his headquarters at the Crowner House, started recruiting Americans for the Canadian forces. To friends here he said that he was forming an American Legion which was to become a part of the Canadian Oversea forces.

At the Crowner House yesterday it was stated that Leamon publicly made the statement that he was after recruits for the Canadian army. It was also stated that many young men from this city visited Leamon when he was at the Crowner House, and that the former Watertown man made the statement that he had secured nine recruits from this city, and that they would go back with him to Canada.

It is reported, too, that Leamon made a trip to Sackett Harbor, where he talked to several enlisted men of the Third Infantry. When he returned to this city, he is said to have made the statement that he would take a dozen men from Sackett Harbor back to Canada with him for service on the firing line in France.

There seems to be little question but that Leamon is violating the United States law in recruiting men for a belligerent nation in this country. A similar case of several English officers which occurred in the west not long ago was considered a violation of the neutrality of the United States.

BLIZZARD IN WEST WRECK ON C. P. R.

MOOSE JAW, Jan. 5.— Two men were killed in a wreck on the C. P. R. here last night, Fireman Lagrue, Moose Jaw, and a male passenger, name unknown. General Superintendent J. G. Taylor was a passenger on one train, and was badly shaken up and had both cheeks frozen after the wreck is assisting the injured. The injured include C. L. Samuel, 103 Drummond street, Montreal, right side bruised.

The C. P. R. train No. 53, local from Regina to Moose Jaw, plunged into the tri-city express eastbound, shortly after ten. A switchman is under arrest, and a C.P.R. engineer is pinned alive, under an engine, despite frantic efforts to move him.

Facing a blizzard, the like of which has not been seen for years in this section of the country. No. 53 westbound arrived at the east switch of the Moose Jaw yards just as the tri-city express pulled out. It is said the switch was left lying for the main line, as a result of which the trains came together. Number 53 suffered worst. The mail car was thrown on its side and badly damaged, although none of the clerks were hurt. The passengers in the front coach received severe shocks and of the six injured. It is believed five were in this coach. The tri-city express was thrown entirely off the track.

Richard Grigg Dies in Ottawa

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—Richard Grigg, Canadian commissioner of Commerce, dropped dead at the Central sation here this morning. He was on his way to Montreal to spend the day with his son and was waiting his turn at the ticket wicket.

A CLERGYMEN'S REGIMENT

OTTAWA, Jan. 5.—(Special)—The proposal on the part of the Minister of Militia and Defence to raise a regiment of clergymen is being well received by the cloth throughout Canada. Rev. Mr. Muncaster, of Calgary, has been the first to write the Minister and assure him he is ready to serve in such a regiment in any capacity from private to colonel.

THE RULING SPIRIT

The victim of the motor collision was dying, and the nearest clergyman had been called in. "Your companion," said the rev. gentleman, "who was with you in the accident is already dead, and in a few moments your soul, too, will start for heaven."

Now the dying man was a famous motor racer. "Bet you $100 I pass him before he gets there!" was his reply.

IN and ABOUT THE CITY

A MARK OF RESPECT

The flag over the post office building is floating at half mast out of respect to the late Mr. Wm. Webster, who was for some years the Collector of Customs.

AT THE FRONT

One man in Belleville, Scotty MacKean, has a son, a son-in-law, fourteen nephews and a grand nephew now at the front, which is quite a record.

PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT

At the City Mission last night the annual entertainment took place and was largely attended. The pupils of the Sunday Shool in connection with the Mission provided a programme that was pleasing to all present. At the conclusion of the programme presents and sweet meats were given to the scholars of the school.

INAUGURAL MEETING

The inaugural meeting of the City Council will be held in the Council Chamber on Monday morning next at 11 o'clock, when the various chairmen of committees will be selected. The five important chairmanships are, Finance, Public Works, Fire, Water and Light.

CASE DISMISSED

A charge of assault preferred against William and Harry Murphy of Tyendinaga, was yesterday by Judge Deroche investigated, with the result the accused were acquitted. Mr. W. S. Herrington, K.C., for Crown and Mr. W. D. M. Shorey for the accused.

ONLY A SCARE

The police this morning answered a call to a residence on Dundas street, it being thought an intruder was in the house, but such was not the case. The lady of the house went into a neighbor's place for a few minutes and upon returning discovered the front door wide open. This led her to believe some one was in the place, but upon investigation no one had apparently entered.

PRESENTATION OF PRIZES

The annual presentation of prizes at St. Thomas church Sunday School took place last night at an entertainment given by the children. There was a large attendance, and about 200 prizes were distributed.

NO QUORUM

A meeting of the Separate School Board of the city was called for last evening for organization for 1916, but there were not enough members present to constitute a quorum.

REEVES ELECTED

The following reeves have been elected in nearby places not previously reported:

Dungannon—T. Turriff, (re-elected).
Faraday Township—W. A. Hubble, (re-elected).
Maynooth—Mr. Green.

ARBITRATION PROCEEDINGS

An arbitration court composed of Judge Deroche of Hastings County, Judge Ward of Port Hope, and Col S. S. Lazier, Master of Chancery of Belleville, were in session here to-day. The court is endeavoring to fix values for properties which were appropriated in Lennox County by the C.P.R. when the new line of railway ran through that country. Messrs. W. S. Herrington, K.C., and M. Spence for the C.P.R.; Messrs. Porter & Carnew for owners of property.

DELIVERY RIG SMASHED

Last evening a lively runaway occurred on Pinnacle street. A horse, the property of Mr. Harry Rowe of Sidney Township, ran away and in its wild career ran into Mr. E. C. Sprague's delivery vehicle, which was passing the corner of Bridge and Pinnacle streets. The result was the latter outfit was badly wrecked. A lad, who was in the vehicle escaped serious injury. Mr. Rowe's horse was slightly injured. The affair caused considerable commotion in the vicinity where it occurred.

A CIVIL ACTION

A civil case was yesterday tried before His Honor Judge Deroche. The plaintiff in the case was Mrs. Miribeth Murphy, and the defendants were her two sons William and Harry. The plaintiff sought to recover from the defendants, one horse, a harrow and several other farming implements, which it is alleged were given to them by their deceased father, Mr. Neal Murphy, without having a right to do so as he had no title in the property. The plaintiff alleges that it was her property and her money invested in the farm. The outcome of the case was that the plaintiff failed, as it was shown that the deceased was acting as her agent in the transaction. Action dismissed without costs. Mr. W. S. Herrington, K.C., for plaintiff, and Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the defendants.

BIRTHS

PONTON—In Cobourg, Jan. 5th, to Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Ponton, A daughter.

The funeral will take place from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Percy Geen, 255 John St., on Saturday, Jan. 8 at 10 a.m. to St. Thomas Church. Interment, Belleville cemetery.

WEBSTER—In Sidney, Jan. 5th, Wm. Webster, aged 71 years.

The funeral will take place from the home of his daughter, Mrs. John Sargent, 2nd Con. Sidney, to-morrow, Friday, Jan. 7th at 2.30 p.m. Service at the house at 2 o'clock. Interment, Belleville cemetery.

Quaker Healer Works Wonders

Many Citizens Say Ontario Millwright Helped Paralytics Greatly

MONTREAL, Jan. 5.—Nearly every decade sees some blacksmith, millwright, carpenter farmer or other man used to an outdoor life come out of the obscurity of a rural hamlet because of wonderful cures he has been instrumental in effecting among his neighbors by methods peculiarly his own, and without the aid of the scientific knowledge necessary to a physician. As a rule, their powers have a strictly limited application and their theories as to why they have these powers disregard many of the known and tested facts of biology, but it cannot be denied that in many cases where their theory runs far astray they have sometimes secured astonishing results in practice. Within the past year or two, the subject has been well treated in fiction by Mr. Frank L. Packard, the Montreal novelist, whose story, "The Miracle Man," and the play made from it, had as central figure a blind patriarch, where simple faith and his power of imparting it to others resulted in seemingly miraculous cures.

It would seem from the testimony of many well-known families in Montreal that this city recently had one of these men within its limits for three of four weeks. The new healer, a Quaker by persuasion, comes from a rural home three miles fom the village of Charleston, near Athens, Ont. He is now an old man, but though his services have been used to some extent locally, his fame is greater beyond the borders of his own community. A gentleman born near the old man's home happened to describe his powers to a Montrealer in whose home was a woman long bedridden and apparently paralyzed in her lower limbs. Willing to try anything which offered hope of release, the Montreal man sent for the old Quaker.

Insists on Large Shoes

Brother Sherman, a large, venerable figure with silver locks surmounted by a wide-brimmed Qhaker hat, and wearing enormous shoes, arrived in Montreal. The size of his shoes are important, in that part of his practice in healing consists of insisting that anyone he treats shall have shoes so large that there is absolutely no constriction of cramping of the toes.

Arrived at the sick-room he held out a large virile hand to the sirk woman. "How are you, sister?" he said. Then he placed his hand under her neck, which had been affected for weeks by neuritis of an exceedingly painful kind, did a little rubbing, and exterted some pressure with his fingers. "Move your head a little, sister." Her friends state that to their surprise she was able to move her head freely and easily, although for weeks she had not done so because of the pain entailed in the movement.

As she had no feeling in her lower limbs, the Quaker had her feet raised on a blanket, put cotton wool in each space between the toes so as to separte them, and then began to tickle the bases of the toes in full sight of the patient. In a few minutes she felt a tickling sensation, and drew up her legs. Warmth also returned to them, and the circulation impeded for some time, returned to them. In the three weeks that he was in the house a great improvement was seen in the patient. Others in the city hearing of this, asked him to look over similar cases, and he did so. One father claims that a boy, suffering from infantile paralysis, had shown decidedly good effects form the treatment. In another case a child which had been in bed for years walked with help across a room.

A cardinal part of the treatment seems to be to keep the toes well separated, as a help to the circulation, because of the old Quaker's theory that man's health depends greatly on his maintaining connection with the magnetism of the earth. Thus he will not let any patient wear rubbers or any non-conducting substance. Lined boots he abominates, and women have to discard fashion in their footwear. He is also death on corsets.

Brother Sherman, according to all reports, steadfastly refuses payment for his services. He seems to start from the beginning with the object of making his patients help themselves with little excercises within their reach, and to fan their ambition. No doubt his Quaker hat and his absolute belief that his theories and practices are right contribute to giving some relief in the class of cases to which he restricts himself.

Brother Sherman has obtained all his education from Nature and the Bible. He supports every statement by copious quotations from the Scriptures and by tales of his observations among the Indians of the Peace River Valley and the Upper Mackenzie. He spent years up there, and he investigated very carefully, by questioning and observation, why the tribes had so many old men among them, their habits, their simple remedies, and their habits as bearing on the way in which they preserved their faculties to a good old age. He does very little healing at his own home at Charleston

MINISTER EXPLANS REFORMING OF C. M. R.

Suitable For Relief of Infantry Brigades in Trenches

OTTAWA, Jan. 5.—The Militia Department to-day issued a statement in reply to certain objections raised among Canadians in England to the reorganization of the cavalry sent overseas as infantry. It is understood that this step led to misunderstanding in some quarters and the following statement has been issued in this connection:

"As there has been considerable comment based entirely on a misunderstanding of the reorganization of the Canadian Mounted Rifles brigades, it is best that the true reason for this step should be properly understood. The explanation is that it was found that the organization of the first and second Canadian mounted brigades, each consisting of three regiments of three squadrons, was suitable for the relief of infantry brigades in the trenches. Application was made early in November to reorganize these units into a brigade on an infantry basis. This wise and extremely necessary recommendation has now been sanctioned by the Canadian Government.

"The Canadian Mounted Rifles brigades which will continue their present nomenclature are composed of a magnificent body of men and much credit is due to the spirit in which they have accepted the change in their anxiety to render service to their comrades in the infantry and for the Canadian corps. They will form a brigade of which any commander may be justly proud."

Alkali Makes Soap Bad For Washing Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

Three-Cent Stamp Is Being Issued

OTTAWA, Jan. 5.—(Special)—The new stamp of three cent value, issued by Postmaster-General Casgrain to overcome the inconvenience caused by the necessity of affixing an extra war stamp of one cent to all letters, is now being sent out. The stamp is the ordinary two-cent stamp surcharged with the letters "T.T.C." By using the plate of the ordinary two-cent stamp, the issue of the new stamp has been greatly facilitated and is now being made at the rate of a million a day. All cities in Canada have already been supplied, and instructions have been issued to the distribution offices in each province to have the stamps distributed as expeditiously as possible. Within a week's time the department will be in a position to issue these stamps at the rate of 2,000,000 per day.

WINNIPEG HOTELS WILL BE PROCEEDED AGAINST

WINNIPEG, Jan. 4.—The Free Press this morning says five prominent hotels, the Grange, St. Regis, St. Charles, Royal Alexandra and Fort Garry, will be proceeded against in the Provincial Police Court Wednesday afternoon for an alleged violation of the liquor license act in allowing the consumption of liquor on their premises during prohibited hours New Year's Eve. Chief License Inspector Argue stated that there would be no individual prosecutions. The Free Press adds, that it is thought there may be a suspension of licenses.

BIGAMIST SENTENCED TO REFORMATORY

Oliver Frank Rose, alias Oliver Avery, was this morning brought up before Judge Deroche for sentence on a charge of bigamy, to which he pleaded guilty. It appears that on the 9th day of August, 1913, under the name of Oliver F. Avery, the accused was married at Ottawa to Miss Hattie McDonald of that city. From a marriage certificate produced, the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Robt. Eadie, a Presbyterian minister.

Under the name of Oliver Frank Rose, he married in this city Miss Florence Cummins, the marriage ceremony being performed on Nov. 7th, 1911, by the Rev. C. G. Smith.

Avery, or Rose, when confronted with the facts, admitted his guilt and could give no excuse for his actions. He is a comparatively young man and appeared to be penitent for what he had done. The accused stated that he had lived in Canada for five years and was unable to state whether his proper name was Rose or Avery, as he was recognized by both names by relatives.

Judge Deroche, after briefly commenting upon the case, sentenced the accused to one year in the Provincial Reformatory and also 6 months in the same institution for non-support of the second wife, both sentences to run concurrently. Mr. Wm. Carnew, County Attorney, was present on behalf of the Crown.

Young Farmer Is Killed Near Fergus

FERGUS, Jan. 5.—Mr. Fred Shaw, a farmer about 25 years of age, residing near Speedside, about five miles from here, went up on his barn to oil a power mill this forenoon. As he did not come in for dinner his wife looked out to see what was the matter, and saw that he had been caught in the shaft and wound around it until quite dead. Neighbors were summoned, and with great difficulty managed to extricate the body by cutting the clothing off in small pieces. Dr. Kyle, coroner, was summoned, but life had been extinct for some time. Shaw was married just a year and a week, and resided with his aged parent. Besides his wife he leaves a baby. His sudden and awful death has cast a gloom over the community.

1st District Can Raise 24,000 Men

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 5.—Local military officers to-day expressed confidence that little or no trouble would be experienced in raising 24,000 more men for overseas service in the 1st Military District, as asked for by the Militia Department. Recruiting continues brisk all through western Ontario, and the indications are that it will continue so. It was estimated today that fully half of the western Ontario troops now overseas or in training are married men.

GUILTY OF EXTORTION

BERLIN, Ont., Jan. 5.— Judge Hanning in the County Court this morning found Dr. Wellington Q. Jacobs, a local osteopath, guilty of the charge of extortion of the sum of $500 from Mrs. Daniel Snider of St. Jacob's, in order to hush up a criminal offence committed early last year. His Honor suspended sentence on condition that the accused pay all the costs of the prosecution. D. S. Bowlby, of this city, made a strong plea for leniency in view of the previous upright character of the accused.

Within the Military Circle

Capt. Allen of the 155th Battalion was in Toronto yesterday.

Sergts. Turner and Wells are around the city securing recruits for the 155th Battalion.

Lieut. Raymond of the 95th Battalion has been transferred to the 155th Battalion.

One of the ministers in charge of a church in this county, with regard to recruiting, says: "Every eligible man in my congregation is in uniform with the exception of one, and he is not leading any peaceful acquiescence as far as I am concerned.

The recruiting at Tweed and Trenton for the 155th Battalion is progressing very favorably.

The strength of the 155th Battalion is now over 250. Most of these recruits were secured in the surrounding villages, the number of recruits secured in Belleville being very small compared with other places.

Capt. Watson, after visiting different centres, has returned and taken up his command in the 80th Battalion.

Capt. Lockett has been appointed commanding officer of C. Company, 80th Battalion, at Napanee. Lieut. Nickles has been appointed second in command.

Up to the present time twenty-nine recruits have been secured this week for the 80th Battalion.

R. Leavitt of this city will leave on Monday for Kingston to enlist in the 33rd Battery.

Col. Ketcheson of the 80th Battalion says there will be no changing of companies for a month or so yet.

80TH BATTALION ORDERS

Orderly Officer for today—Lt. L. H. Bertrand; for tomorrow, Lt. F. L. Drayton.

Orderly Sergt. for today—Cpl. Cook, B. Co.; for tomorrow, Cpl. Webster, A. Co.

Orderly Corporal for today—L. Cpl. Knowles; for tomorrow, L. Cpl. Potter.

KINGSTON

Kingston War Garrison, Jan. 5.—The extreme and sudden changes in the weather are responsible for much sickness among the local troops. Officers and men are all complaining of severe colds, and conditions call for much sympathy from medical officers of units. Several officers are laid up with colds, and many others feel as though they ought to be in hospital rather than on duty.

Local Odd fellows are sending their members at the front in the R.C.H.A. and the A.S.C. an aluminum identification tag bearing on the face the three links of the order, and the motto of the I.O.O.F. Yesterday afternoon, Sergt.-Major Jordan, W.O., sent fourteen of these tags overseas. On the inside of the tag is a space for the name of the wearer, his number, and address, unit, and next of kin.

The local Masonic lodges sent packages overseas for the holidays for their members, and these contained many useful presents with many a luxury that will be appreciated by the boys in the trenches.

According to an order from Ottawa, the ammunition column is to be mobilized here, but there was a rumor around yesterday that it might be mobilized in Ottawa. There is very little prospects of the order being changed to Ottawa, as Kingston is by far a better place for the moblization of such a unit, and the department usually considers the welfare of a unit rather than the whims of an individual

Everything Depends On the Workmen

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The House of Commons yesterday passed a bill designed to facilitate the output of munitions.

The bill is in the form of an amendment to the Munitions Act.

In appealing for the passage of the measure, David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, said:

"I hope the Commons will not render more difficult the task of turning out munitions—a task more serious than I dare tell.

"Everything depends upon it. The length of the war depends upon it. Everything depends upon whether we turn out munitions in sufficient quantities to bring the campaign to an end this year.

"That does not depend on the soldiers, who have done their task heroically. It depends entirely upon—I say it in all solemnity—the workmen of this country doing what the workmen of France have done; frankly setting aside conditions, throwing themselves into the work and sticking to their workshops.

"Unless they do that, I cannot tell what the result will be.

"But I can tell what the result will be if they do so. They, and they alone, will achieve victory for this Empire and the human race, and will reflect credit upon the labor movement."

The Minister of Munitions announced that 396 additional establishments had been enrolled under the control of the Ministry since January 1. This makes a total of 2,422 controlled establishments.

U.S. Better Out Of World War

Not Needed and "Preparedness" Will be Drowned in "Pacifism" Says Northcliffe

To get an expression of the British attitude toward the war at the beginning of 1916, the United Press went to Lord Northcliffe, proprietor of the London Times, and probably the world's greatest present day newspaper publisher. Northcliffe, who through his fifty publications is probably more closely in touch with the British public than anybody else in the United Kingdom, has answered with the following statement:

LONDON, Jan. 5.—When months ago I had the honor of communicating with at least fifty million people of North America, through the United Press, I plainly expressed my belief that we were in for a long, long war. Events have followed the lines I indicated. I do not pose as a prophet, but I do know something about the touchness of Anglo-Saxon fibre as compared with that of the Prussians, and I do know that each day brings access of strength to us and weakening to them.

Pre-War Pacifism

The German war point of view is frankly money-making and territorial aggrandizement. Dr. Helfferich, the German finance minister, constantly dilates upon the indemnities Germany is going to get. Germany hopes, in addition, to obtain the Belgian Congo Germany was under the impression that the wealth of France would pour into her lap within a few weeks of the outbreak of the war. England was not expected to enter the war. The pacifists, like yours, again and again informed the world that we did not raise our boys to be soldiers. England's coming into the war was as great a surprise to our government as it was to the Germans. We had, with one or two exceptions, a pacifist administration.

But so soon as Germany entered Belgium, the common people rose as one man to insist upon an attempt of defence for the little nation and its king.

Parallel Positions

The outburst of rage that followed in Germany was the rage of the tiger baulked of its prey. The German tiger consoled itself by the thought that John Bull was an effete old plutocrat whose sons and daughters were given up to sport and amusement. Our army was little larger than that of the United States. The Kaiser in his famous order issued at Aix-La-Chapelle, referred to it as "Sir John French's contemptible little army."

Since then by voluntary enlistment of free men we already possess one of the world's largest armed forces.

The United States' position to-day is not at all unlike ours before the war. The United States is eaten up with commercialism and pacifism as we were, and is not in such a good position for fighting as we are, by reason of the lack of unity of the races that now compose the United States. On the other hand, the United States offers the same temptation to any hungry and aggressive enemy that we did. You have lots of money, few soldiers, and comparatively few sailors. Troops can be moved to American shores from hostile countries in little more than the time it took to move bodies from New York to Boston two hundred years ago. The fact that we have been able to transport at least a million soldiers across the sea, shows that any European or Oriental nation could, if the United States is unprepared (as she is) ship them to America.

Thanks For Sympathy

Britain, France and other allies are grateful for the sympathy they have received from large numbers of Americans. Some ten thousand United Statesers have shown their loyalty to the cause of democracy, freedom, and individualism by enlisiting in our army either through Canada or direct. One of these, an extremely able young artillery officer, said to me yesterday: "We Americans are not fighting with you for King and country. We are fighting with you for the liberty of the world and because it is our duty."

The Germans have their ideal. It is not ours; it is not that of France, nor is it that of the United States. Their ideal is the subordination of the mass of people to discipline.

No Racial Likeness

To one who has mixed much, as I have, with Americans, Canadians and Australians (I except my own people for obvious reasons), the suggestion that the North American, the Australasian or the British branches of our race belong to the same racial grade, as these socalled Prussian supermen is preposterous. The squareheads with no back to them and and the outstanding ears, the over-eating and drinking, the coarseness, the cruelty, the bullying of inferiors and the cringing to superiors that make up the Prussian, mark him out for what he is—a man who has to be ruled and regulated by the miltary and the police.

As far as England is concerned, we have never attempted to interfere with his system of government so long as it was confined to his own country, but directly the attempt was made to apply it to Belgium and France, we leaped into the ring and do not propose to listen to any of the German peace squealing, of which we get an almost daily chorus, until militarism and policeism have been taken home to where they belong.

If they like to treat their women like squawks and drudges, if they prefer to elevate the policeman to the dignity of a ruler, if goose-stepping and cringing suit them, let them have these things. That is their own business.

But the foot riots and the peace riots show that there is a limit to what even a Berliner can stand,

U. S. Won't Prepare

The point of view of practically every Briton I know, and one which is shared by Canadans, Australians, New Zealanders and South Africans, is that the English-speaking end of the war is a matter for the British Empire, and that, despite our lack of preparation, we do not need any help from the United States. Another section of British thought, and this also applies to almost all French thought, is that the intervention of United States would be calamity to the Allies.

Personally, I do no think the United States will prepare for war. There will be an immense amount of talk as there was with us; you will have people like our Lord Roberts preaching wisdom, but his views will be drowned in such melodies as "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier."

We have the German tiger where we want him; and we mean to put him back in his own cage, well tamed, and with his fangs drawn.

Finally, the main policy of Great Britain is first, to keep German ships off the sea so long as a single German soldier remains in Allies' territory, and so long as an indemnity to Belgium, France and Russia is unpaid; and, secondly, as I mentioned in a previous statement to the United Press, to enlist every available man by voluntary recruiting and compulsion.

My statement regarding compulsion was received with a bow both here and by United States, but our people have adopted it even more quickly than I expected.

FIRE PREVENTION VS. FIRE PROTECTION

"Locking the barn-door after the horse has been stolen," is a time-honoured expression; but it applies with peculiar emphasis to many of our supposedly modern municipal governments. Especially is this true in the matter of the fire loss.

While enormous sums are spent annually in the equipment and upkeep of fire departments for the purpose of controlling and extinguishing fires, it is almost a novelty to find a municipality with a department charged with the inspection, and with authority to enforce the correction, of conditions favorable to fires. In some of our larger cities some progress has been made by the fire departments, which have set apart small details of their staffs, charged with inspection work. The result of their work is minimized, however, by the fact that the inspectors have not sufficient authority.

The fire chiefs have it in their power to advance the fire prevention campaign and secure results. If a fire chief's record depended upon his keeping down the number of fires, instead of his ability to handle fires after they have broken out, there would be greater effort at inspection. Fire chiefs should insist upon sufficient men for inspection work; these men should be held responsible for the inspection and correction of dangerous conditions, and, to make their work effective, the inspectors should be clothed with fire marshal authority, in order that any fire breaking out in their inspection districts might be thoroughly investigated and the cause definitely assigned. In this way an inspector's reputation for thoroughness would be at stake, and, with the knowledge that a fire would be investigated by one familiar with the conditions, there would be fewer fires of a suspicious character or due to carelessness.

Municipalities can well afford to make generous appropriations for fire-preventive inspection work. It is an investment which will yield large returns, not only in reduced fire loss but in reduction in the cost of upkeep of fire departments and equipment.—Conservation.

Generous.

A negro truck driver backed his wagon into the space allotted to a rival transfer concern at a railway freight depot in Dallas, Tex. "Hey, dar, niggah!" yelled the driver on whose territory the other had transgressed. "I'll knock yo' outa yo' house an' home ef yo' don't back up!"

"I's got no home," retorted the offending driver. "Now, whut yo' gonno do 'bout dat?"

"I'll dig yo' one, niggah—I'll dig yo' one!"—Argonaut.

Marriage Not a Profession.

Marriage cannot be classed with anything but itself. It is [illegible]age and nothing else—a wonder[illegible]ture of experiences and duties on [illegible]y different planes. So far as its spiritual demands go, it may ask of a woman, as of a man, all she has in her, or it may not. So far as its material demands go, it may require everything or nothing. It may of necessity fill her life or leave it empty. To call it a profession is to blur its meaning, for it is much more than this and much less.—Elizabeth Woodbridge in Atlantic Monthly.

Honored.

Clayborn, an old negro coachman of a southern physician, was talking to another negro one day about the price of a ticket to Jacksonville. "Ah don't know nothin' 'bout tickets," said Clayborn. "My boss never has no tickets for his travelin'." "Is dat so?" asked his friend. "Why don't he have no tickets?" "'Cause de railroad is jes' proud ter tote him!" exclaimed the loyal Clayborn.

Coal Enough For Thousands of Years.

The results of the investigation of the world's coal resources by the international geological congress show that there is a reserve of unmined coal estimated at 7,398,561,000,000 tons, of which two-thirds are situated in North America between the Rocky mountains and the Appalachians. As the present annual consumption is about 1,300,000,000 tons, there is enough coal in sight to last nearly 6,000 years at the present rate of consumption, and it must be remembered that South America and Africa are still largely unexplored.

A Hibernating Fish.

A remarkable fish known as Protopterus annectens is found throughout the whole of tropical Africa, but is most common near the West Coast, where it sometimes attains a length of six feet. During the dry season, when many of the ponds dry up, the fish descends some distance into the mud and forms a rounded hollow form nest, which is lined by a capsule of hardened mucus secreted by the glands of the skin. It hibernates thus for nearly six months, drawing its sustenance from the fat secreted when it is active.

Lightning Strategy.

"Too many strategists," said a military officer, "jump to conclusions. They are too hasty. They begin a new movement before the old one is finished; hence all manner of errors.

"These strategists are like the floorwalker whom a married man, having got separated from his wife in the crowd, approached and said:

"'Excuse me, but I've lost my wife'—

"'Coffins,' said the floorwalker, 'ninth floor, back. Gents' mourning, eleventh floor, front.'"

Embarrassing.

The Squire's Pretty Daughter (examining the village school)—Now, children, can you tell me what a miracle is?

The children looked at one another, but remained silent.

"Can no one answer this question?" the new curate asked, who was standing behind the squire's daughter.

A little girl was suddenly struck with a brilliant idea. She held up her hand excitedly.

"Well, Nellie?" the squire's daughter asked, smiling approvingly.

"Please, miss," the small child replied breathlessly, "mother says 'twill be a miracle if you don't marry the new curate."—London Globe.

A House in the Air.

In 1863 a balloon of 200,000 cubic feet capacity was constructed at Paris. It was named the Giant and was intended to show the great possibilities of the air. The car attached consisted of a small two story house fitted with every modern comfort, lavatories, dining room, bedroom, kitchen, parlor, etc. Thirteen passengers made the first ascent, but the journey was of only four hours' duration. The last ascent was for seventeen hours and was abruptly terminated by a high wind, which, when the balloon descended, dragged the little house bumping over the ground. The remains of this giant of the air was for a long time exhibited in the Cyrstal palace in London.

GOOD DEEDS.

In man's mad strife for wealth and luxury it were well to remember these words from the Koran: "When a man dies they who survive him ask what property he has left behind. The angel who bends over the dying man asks what good deeds he has sent before him."

Tops of furnaces being near the floor above them or the pipes too near the wood of the building, constitute one of the worst and commonest fire dangers common in cellars.

Fighting the Arabs

THE British Official Press Bureau has just given out a picturesque account of the campaign for Bagdad by Sir Mark Sykes. He describes the victory of Kut-el-Amara in September, and deals with events before the British reverse at Ctesiphon, farther up the Tigris, resulting in the retreat to Kut-el-Amara, where the British force under General Townshend is itself besieged.

The campaign in Mesopotamia differs beyond all words from every other operation taking place in the world in this year of war. It may be called the Cinderella of Campaigns, for indeed, if past history and modern engineers tell a tale to be believed, the swamps and wastes of Irak will be changed within the life of the present generation into something as different from themselves as were the mice and pumpkin of the fairy story.

The approach to south Mesopotamia lies through the Persian Gulf, and the gulf itself is a part of this campaign.

The lawless and ignorant tribesmen of Persia are being urged and organized to plunder Bushire, Bander Abbas and Jask by the erstwhile commercial travelers and consuls of Germany; the half-witted Persian fanatic is deliberately encouraged to assassinate British and Russian consular officials in the provincial capitals. To meet and check this policy Great Britain must need detachs small bodies of troops at Charbar, Jask, and Bushire. In each of these places a small handful of Indian troops under a few British officers give peace and security to traders, foreigners, and Persians alike. Inland the tribesmen roam in anarchy under their German leaders; on the shore peaceful commerce is protected from their onslaught by these little bands of exiles.

On the southern side of the gulf at Muscat and Bahrein again we find similar isolated groups, in each place holding in check those forces of disorder and violence which the enemy's agents seek to provoke, but on the Arabian shore the star of Germany is on the wane, the Arab sailor folk know that on the Sea "Allemani" are no more. These Arabs, who cruise as far afield as Zanzibar and find their way to Malabar across the open sea without sextant or master's certificate, have learned that the flag of Germany cannot be shown upon the waters of the earth so long as war lasts, and the word has gone through the Arabian coasts that he who would trade abroad must be the friend of the Ingliz, who spoiled the slave trade in years gone by and lately stayed the traffic in arms.

A winding river, which is restless in its bed, capricious in its fall, uncertain in its rise, and sown with shifting shoals and sands, is the sole means of communication between Bagdad and the sea; it is the inevitable line of supply, advance, or retreat for Turks and British. On either hand stretches limitless plain, but its faint depressions are swamps of unknown shape with bays and inlets, while at right angles to the river banks run dried canals and cuttings with hard ridges on either hand.

As for the population, it is base, semi-nomadic Arab, cruel, treacherous, and rascally as the town influence can make it, yet predatory with primitive Bedawi instinct.

To those people, Turkish corruption, smugglers, and a year's war have brought a wealth of arms and munitions; without any cohesion or policy they are neither for British nor Turk; on the day of battle they haunt the outskirts of the fight, plunder the wounded and stragglers impartially, harass the retreat of the defeated side, hoist white flags over their tents, and make professions of unswerving fidelity to whosoever seems to be in the ascendant.

Kut the day after its occupation was as Kut of the day before, yet with a difference—the Turks had gone and the British had come. The British soldier, the first gentleman in Europe or Asia, and his brother, the Sepoy, were in possession. Now neither Briton nor Indian owe any debt of gratitude to the Arab tribesmen, who have plundered wounded, mutilated the dead, sniped, pilfered, spied and betrayed. There is no reason why our fighting men should distinguish between the inhabitants of the towns and the encampments; rough dress, language, habits, and appearance are one, and in war the soldier has no time for nice ethnological differences and the historical influences. He does not know that the tribesmen of the inverted double Deltas of Mesopotamia are the descendants of Khariji Anarchists of the 9th century and of the Carmathian outlaws of the 10th, that among them smoulders the sub-conscious fire of the lost and persecuted cause of Ali, that to them all organized government has been for above eighteen generations the emblem of cruelty, oppression, and robbery, that their chiefs have of a set purpose been encouraged and schooled in treachery by generations of perfidious Turkish Beys and Persian Governors.

The British or Indian soldier does not know that since Ja'afer the Barmecide was executed by the despairing Harun-al-Rashid no man south of Bagdad has stood for justice and right-doing; that all has been wrongdoing from the age when Ma'amun fought Amin for Bagdad to the day when Hulagu, the monster, pierced the canals and annihilated by famine a population of eleven millions, and thence to the coming of the Committee of Union and Progress and the German concessionaires, who have thrived on intrigue and wickedness in these later days.

THE THEATRE GOER.

The crowds that attend the theatres are composed of practically four classes. There are the real "play-lovers"—those who enjoy a good play and follow every word and act with close attention and go home after the show feeling that they have been repaid for the time and money spent.

Then there are the "time-killers"—those who go to the play house for the sake of something to do. They take no particular interest in the play or the players and are seldom satisfied when the play ends.

A third class might be termed the "nuisance"—the fellow who sits near by and talks about anything and everything and makes it impossible for those around him to hear anything that is being said on the stage.

And then there is the "pest"—that distracting individual who insists upon explaining the play as it goes along and is eternally commenting upon the ability of the different actors when all in the world you want to do is to listen to the words of the actors themselves. The "nuisance" is an abomination to all around him but the "pest" is your own private thorn in the flesh.

THE DEADLY PARALLEL.

"In the reign of Attila," says Gibbon, the historian, "the Huns became the terror of the world." In view of the outrages by which the modern Huns have led the civilized world to combine against them it is interesting to pursue the parallel. The Kaiser, as is well known, altogether approved of Etzel (Attila) and when German troops were starting in 1900 to assist in quelling the Boxer rising in China, he told them: "Quarter will not be given; whoever falls into your hands is forfeit to you, just as 1000 years ago the Huns under King Etzel made a name for themselves which is still mighty in tradition and song."

Attila crucified his captives just as the Huns of today crucified Canadian soldiers. Attila, by right of the sword and that alone, swore for "World Dominion or Downfall," just as the governors of Germany have done. Attila, like Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, broke treaties whenever he considered it in his interest to do so. Once in a fortified town on the Danube Attila's followers in defiance of a solemn treaty sacked the place, killed or dispersed the citizens, and when taxed with their bad faith, said their act was one of reprisal! The parallel to Belgium's plight to-day could hardly be closer.

When Attila invaded France, neither woman nor child nor priest escaped outrage or massacre. He burned cities and committed excesses of all kinds, so that he came to be known as the "Scourge of God" of whom it was often said that the grass never grew on the spot where his horse had trod. Anyone who has seen the ruined villages of northern France to-day, the ravaged country scored with trenches and littered with wreckage of war, can easily realize how close is the resemblance between the Hun of a thousand years ago and the Hun who at this moment pollutes the soil of our ally.

But as the plunderers, and murderers of Attila's horde met a just vengeance, so will those of the Kaiser's armies. As the Allied Romans and Goths under Theodoric and Thorismund overthrew Attila's army of 700,000 leaving 300,000 dead on the battlefield at Chalons-sur-Marne, so will the Allied Belgians, French and British hurl to overwhelming disaster the armies of William the Hun.

Then the deadly parallel will be complete.

BRITISH INDUSTRIES FAIR.

In view of the great success of the British Industries Fair, held at the Agricultural Hall, London, England, from May 10th to 21st, 1914, the Imperial Board of Trade have decided to hold the second British Industries Fair at the Victoria and Albert Museum, Kensington, London, on February 21st, 1916. The Fair will be open for twelve days.

The Fair will be conducted on the same lines as that of 1915, and is intended to extend to British manufacturers the same advantages as have been derived by continental manufacturers from the trade fairs held in their respective countries. Buyers from the United Kingdom and from all parts of the world are invited to the Fair, and, as it is intended for the trade only (the general public not being admitted), buyers will have an exceptional opportunity of transacting their business in a minimum of time.

Manufacturers only will be allowed to exhibit, and their exhibits will be strictly confined to goods of their own make. The trades exhibiting will be toys, glassware, fancy goods, earthenware and china, printing and stationery.

Admission to the Fair will be by invitation of His Majesty's Board of Trade only, and will be restricted to bona fide buyers for United Kingdom and Overseas markets. Buyers from the Dominion of Canada visiting the United Kingdom during the course of the Fair, i.e., February 21st to March 4th, and interested in the above mentioned trades, should not fail to communicate immediately on arrival in the United Kingdom with, The Director, British Industries Fair, 32 Cheapside, London, E.C., Eng.

Any further information may be obtained from C. R. Woods, Assistant to H. M. Trade Commissioner in Canada and Newfoundland.

January started out mostly all thaw, but caught cold last night.

Mexico is now troubled with a greater trouble than that well-known trouble-maker, Villa. Typhus is sweeping over the country.

The Serbians now have an army of a hundred thousand men ready to advance. The whole trouble with the Allies seems to be that they don't know when they are beaten and keep coming back.

It is reported now that the Kaiser can't speak. There are a lot of his friends that ought to be in the same predicament.

One of the immediate results of the present war has been to encourage the smelting and refining of ores in Canada. While certain metallic minerals have, in the past, received preliminary treatment in Canada, the ordinary metals of commerce, excepting lead, have been exported for refining. Recent reports announce the establishment in Canada of plants for refining both zinc and copper.

GLIMPSES INTO THE PAST

From The Daily Intelligencer, Jan. 6, 1868.

A very disastrous explosion of fire damp occurred in a coal pit at Blanzy, and eighty bodies have so far been recovered.

W. Cunard, Esq., has entered into a contract with the British Government for the conveyance of mails between Halifax, Bermuda and St. Thomas.

The military asylum at Augusta, Me., was destroyed by fire, the total loss being estimated at $150,000. One of the patients froze to death while being removed from the building.

The business portion of Indianola, Texas, was destroyed by fire with a total loss of $100,000.

Current Comment

No Optimist He.

A member of the first Canadian contingent, writing to friends, says: "I guess the first seven years of this war are going to be the worst." Could doggedness go farther?—London Advertiser.

Political Patronage.

There is much academic piffle written in condemnation of political patronage; but, with worthy restrictions, it is likely to continue an active factor, whichever party is in power. It is hardly a human attribute to go out of one's way to further the interests of those who have done their utmost to injure those appealed to, and, all things being equal, why should not the friend receive the preference?—Hamilton Spectator.

Credit.

John Stuart Thompson, a well-known publicist of the United States, would have his country lend Britain any amount up to $20,000,000,000 at five per cent. interest. To Germany, for the restoration of trade and exchange after the war, he does not think it safe for the United States to lend at less than 30 per cent. interest a very small experimental sum. That is the conclusion Mr. Thomson reaches in a highly interesting article in the annual number of The Monetary Times. He compares British and German credit, commerce, investments, earnings, shipping, banking, labor and other important factors, showing how Great Britain's financial triumph over Germany is complete.

He shows that Germany's earnings, to pay the cost of the war, have already been pledged for a generation, and he adds that Germany has committed national suicide, financially. Among the many interesting comparisons which Mr. Thomson makes is the following: Britain has loaned her seafronting allies to sustain war, commerce and industry during the last two years, the dependable security of four and a half billions of dollars. These debtor nations are solvent, because their trade and governmental functions are assured in continuity by the triumph of Britain's navy. Germany has loaned her allies five billions of debts, whose only future is to look into the face of democratic revolutions, which will come as surely as the gods of tyranny are found to be hollow. For instance, what is the prospect of the recovery of Germany's loans to Turkey, Bulgaria and Hungary, and the imperial fund of $50,000,000 spent in fomenting strikes and sedition, respectively, in America, Malaya, India, the Levant and Mexico?

The Poets' Corner

A Well Ruled State.

"Where spades grow bright and idle swords grow dull;
Where jails are empty and where barns are full;
Where field-paths are with frequent feet outworn,
Law court yards weedy, silent and forlorn;
Where doctors foot it, and where farmers ride;
Where age abounds, and youth is multiplied;
Where poisonous drinks are chased from every place;
Where opium's curse no longer leaves a trace;
Where these signs are they clearly indicate
A happy people and a well-ruled state."

AVIATORS RESCUED SICK AND WOUNDED

PARIS, Jan. 4.—Aeroplanes were used for ambulance work for the first time on record during the retreat from Serbia by the French Military Mission, says Henri Barbey, a war correspondent of the Journal.

The Balkan mission was at Prisrend. There were a number of sick persons. It was impossible to carry them on stretchers, but it was determined not to abandon them. The French still had six aeroplanes. They had been exposed to rain and snow for two months, but were still in working order. Col. Fournier placed on these aeroplanes the sick whose condition was most grave and sent them by air to Scutari.

AL. RINGLING DEAD

BARABOO, Wis., Jan. 4.—Another break was made Sunday in the famous quintet of veteran circus men by the death of Al. Ringling, of Ringling Brothers. Mr. Ringling, while a sufferer from Bright's disease, had never been seriously ill until several weeks ago, when his condition became critical and he grew steadily worse until he died today at the age of sixty-six years.

He is survived by a widow and four brothers, Charles R. of Evanston, Ill.; Henry of Baraboo; John of Los Angeles, and Alf. of New York. His brother Otto died two years ago. A $100,000 theatre was a gift to the city of Baraboo from Al. Ringling in 1914

TO DEVELOP OIL FIELD.

D. A. Thomas Has His Eye on Great North-western Fields.

That shrewd fellow-countryman of his whom Lloyd George sent over to Canada, to represent him in the buying of munitions of war, has other interests here that will mean a good deal for the Dominion, and, if everything goes well, for the Empire. D. A. Thomas, known in the business world long before the war as the coal king of Wales, has had his business eye upon Western Canada for several years past, and to such good purpose that developments are even now afoot from which much is expected.

The part of Canada in which D. A. Thomas is specially interested is the coal and oil belt of the Peace River and Athabasca countries. Some time ago he bought up a large block of land along the Peace River, comprising some of the best oil prospects in the whole north country, and the developments now under way are the second chapter of the story of which the skillfully-conducted negotiations for purchase of the areas were the first. Careful investigation had previously been made, of course, as to the nature of the lands and the probability of finding oil in them in paying quantities.

Five carloads of drilling machinery went to Peace River Crossing last August, and as soon as it was put together the drilling of three test holes was begun near the chutes on the north bank of the river. The plant has a drilling capacity of 2,000 feet, and well within that distance, it is expected, a good flow will be struck. As far back as 1875 Prof. Macoun, of Ottawa, made a favorable report on the oil riches of this district, and at various times since, in different parts of the adjacent country, promising discoveries of oil have been made.

It would be good business for the Thomas interests to develop their holdings in this oil belt of the north purely for the commercial possibilities in them; but there is another motive behind it all. Naturally enough, D. A. Thomas has not taken the general public very much into his confidence as to what he intends doing up there, but the general public knows several important facts, to begin with, and is free to draw its inferences.

For instance, it is known that Coal King Thomas has a contract with the British Admiralty to supply Britain's warships in the North Sea with coal. It is also known, as a matter of modern science, that the substitution of fuel oil for coal as the motive power on warships is being seriously considered nowadays, and that the new fighting ships will probably be built with oil tanks instead of coal bunkers. When this change is made it is reasonable to assume Mr. Thomas, as a good business man, will be desirous of holding his contract, and will wish to be ready to supply the new fuel when the demand for his coal has ceased. Therefore his present interest is the Peace River country, in and around which is one of the richest oil fields in the world.

MUST LIMIT PARCELS.

Packages for Overseas Soldiers Must Not Exceed Seven Pounds.

The number of parcels for overseas troops is so many, and the strain on the transport system is so great at the present time, that the British Government has notified the Post office Department of Canada that, temporarily, no parcels over seven pounds in weight will be carried.

The British War Office states that it has been necessary to limit the amount of parcel traffic for the troops during the Christmas and New Year's season in the interest of military efficiency. The War Office points out that the great bulk of mail matter dealt with in normal times is already a severe tax on the transport service, that the amount which the roads will carry without breaking up is limited, that ammunition, food, and stores for the army must, necessarily, have preference over the mails; that any increase in the volume of mail traffic must cause delay in the forwarding of these necessary equipments for war.

The public are, therefore, appealed to, in the interest of military efficiency, to limit the use of parcel post to articles of real utility.

Fruit, perishable articles of all descriptions, bottles, and earthenware jars and like articles are prohibited, and will not be accepted for transmission; and, until further notice, no parcel exceeding seven pounds can or will be accepted for transmission to the forces in France or Flanders.

All parcels must be strongly and securely packed in covers of canvas, linen, or other strong material. Parcels which do not comply with these requirements are unlikely to reach their destination safely, and if observed in course of post will be returned to the senders. The name and address of the sender must be written on the outside, and parcels which do not comply with this condition will be refused.

A trial consignment of Canadian fish, shipped frozen, has just been sold for fancy prices on the London market. The Government is said to regard the experiment as exceedingly important, in view of the Ottawa assertion that, with proper facilities, two million pounds of fish per week can be supplied for English markets.

Those who believe that such a trade on a permanent basis would prove beneficial to both Canada and the Mother Country are urging that a small guarantee per pound be placed on consignments for a time for the benefit of shippers.

Eskimo Suits for Children.

Eskimo suits may be supplied to the children in Orde Street School, Toronto, as the result of a discussion regarding the heating of the open-air classrooms. Dr. A. MacKay gave it as his opinion that if the rooms were not heated the children would have to be provided with these suits. Dr. Hopkins said that pure, cold air would be better for pupils inclined to be tubercular, and that he would favor the supplying of suits rather than installing a heating system.

Plenty of Room.

The young man who writes verses was standing out in the night gazing at the sky when a friend ran across him.

"What are you doing—studying astronomy?"

"Go away and don't disturb me. I am gazing into infinite distance."

"I don't see what satisfaction you find in that."

"That's because you never had any experience with editors. You don't know what a comfort it is to find some place where nothing is crowded out for lack of space."—London Tit Bits.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

How to Get Sick.

Here are a few simple, certain, dead easy ways of getting sick. They are guaranteed to produce results:

By hurrying through your meals and gulping down a lot of poorly cooked, unchewed "brickbats and mortar" by way of soggy biscuits and fat meat that would defy a goat's stomach.

By never smiling at meals, but by wearing a grouch and trying to make the rest of the family miserable.

By overeating and underexercising; by constipation, intemperance and excesses; by everlastingly hurrying, worrying, fretting, stewing and straining to keep up appearances.

By sleeping with the windows closed and by staying indoors all the time.

By drawing more out of your physical and nervous bank account every day than you restore.

By always reading medical books, medical ads, and trying to diagnose your own case, especially if you didn't have any case to start with.

By taking every old medicine recommended by your friends and neighbors.

By telling everybody else how bad you feel and trying to outpoint him in his petty ailments.

By enjoying poor health—yes, just that. There are a few people one occasionally meets who really enjoy poor health. They feel miserable when they feel good because they are just sure they are going to feel worse afterward. Are you one of them?

Her Idea.

"Ma, your bank account is overdrawn."

"What does that mean, pa?"

"Simply this. You've written checks for $13 more money than was in the bank."

"The idea! If $13 will break the bank I'd find another one to do business with. I supposed they had thousands of dollars on hand all the time."

Outlawed.

"How about paying me for that suit I made for you two years ago?" asked the tailor.

"You surely can't expect me to pay for that suit," said the impecunious young man. "Why, it's all out of style."

Utilizing Niagara.

A scheme has been submitted to the New York State authorities to construct a 90ft. dam across the Niagara Gorge, so that the present whirlpool rapids would be replaced by a fall at the lower end of the gorge, from which about 2,000,000 horsepower would be available, half for New York State and half for Ontario.

JAPANESE BANKER VISITING THE WEST

Baron Shibusawa Is Head of Japan's Business World.

IS INTERESTED IN RELIGION

Aged Banker is President of a Society With the Object of Making a New Religion From the Best of the Older Bibles—His Daily Business Routine Said to be Very Severe.

BARON EI-ICHI SHIBUSAWA, who is now in America, is the recognized leader of Japan's business world. Primarily a banker, he has assisted in many ways the development of Japan's commerce. He has also distinguished himself as a philanthropist. His elevation to the peerage was in recognition of his public services. Always a sincere friend of the occidental world, he has sought by his writings and his public addresses to clear away any misunderstandings which may exist between the Eastern and Western peoples. He has twice before visited America, in 1902 and 1909. Baron Shibusawa is 76 years old. The following account of his interesting personality is translated from Jitsugyono-Nihon (Business of Japan), a semi-monthly magazine of Tokyo:

BARON SHIBUSAWA.

His wonderful energy surpasses even that of young men. For fifteen hours each day he works strenuously. Even in winter he arises at 6 each morning, takes a bath, and prepares for the day's work.

As early as 7 o'clock visitors begin to arrive at his residence in Asukayama, a suburb of Tokio, and it is not an unusual sight to see those anxious to be first to greet him waiting outside the gate until it is opened. Every day before 10 o'clock he has seven or eight callers, and it is said that very frequently his interviews last so long that he misses his breakfast.

At 10 o'clock all interviews are discontinued and he steps into his automobile bound for the city. He usually drops in at three or four places where he has engagements to fill; he then goes to the First National Bank, the only business institution in which he is now actively interested, and disposes of all business matters while lunching with the directors. The Baron is president of this bank.

After luncheon, about 1.30, he appears in his office at Kabutocho (the Wall Street of Japan) wearing his usual bright and happy smile. He usually finds anxious callers awaiting him—never less than twenty. The kind hearted Baron seldom refuses himself to any caller. It is said that he is so very sincere in his arguments and so anxious to convince his visitor that he often walks all the way to the door with him, discussing the matter meanwhile. This great sincerity has made him the most esteemed business man in Japan.

His interests are so broad and varied that hardly an evening passes without his having to attend two meetings. He makes it a rule never to appear at more than two in one evening because he is interested in many philanthropic and charitable works and the demands upon his time are very great. About 10 o'clock he returns to his home in Asukayama.

Only on Sunday does Baron Shibusawa enjoy the society of his family, so strenuous is his work during the week. On Sunday he receives no visitors. His time is spent with his family, reading his favorite books and sometimes in writing his autograph, endeavoring to catch up with the unfilled requisition of one thousand.

Notwithstanding the fact that his time is almost entirely taken up with business affairs he devotes one day of each month to the affairs of the spirit, listening to Mr. Uno on the Rongo (one of the four books of theories and teachings of Confucius and the one into which, it is generally considered, the main ethics of Confucianism are condensed) and the Rev. Dr. Ebina, the most distinguished Christian in Japan to-day, on the Bible. It is a well known fact that Baron Shibusawa always carries with him a copy of the Rongo and one of the Bible, and whoever listens to one of his speeches cannot escape quotations from both these books. He is president of the Kiichi-kyokai (Concordia Association), which aims at the founding of a new religious belief embracing all that is best in the older religions and ethics.

"Truth Dexter"

By

CHAPTER XXVI—Continued

Immediately after the Colonel's death, Truth's marriage, and the removal of "Miss Dolly" to the seashore, the old negro had settled into a state of dejection that bordered on melancholia. He would go about his duties in a dazed, mechanical way, and when at leisure would sit for hours by the hearth, scarcely knowing whether the fire burned or died. As Aunt Mary expressed it:—

"Dare's poh ole Unk Norah settin' humped up by de hyearth, warmin' hisself by a cold soot-hole, an' don't know de diffunce! I don't b'leeve he even 'feed dem crickits no mo', and dey all is dyin' togedder,—Unk' Norah fer grief, an' de crickits fer vittals. Ef I didn't drap a corn-pone roun' dare neighborhood onst in a while, I don't know what would happen, no how!"

But when Miss Dolly returned, the old man rallied. Here was a definite responsibilty, to look after the beloved mistress, to take, so far as lay in his humble power, the dear Colonel's cares upon himself. Then the large sums that Van began to send him for expenditure upon the homesteads, often without Mrs. Dexter's knowledge, aroused a great ambition in his honest heart.

He now sat in a latticed summer-house in the front garden, listening somewhat contemptuously to the clamor of the younger negroes who surged about Miss Troof in the quarter, and peeping now and again through the crevices of lattice-work and rose-vines, to see whether his hour of triumph was not about to dawn.

At last it came,—Truth and Mrs. Dexter arm in arm, each adorned with an old garden hat, and both peering about for the promised cicerone.

In an instant Norah was at the foot of the steps. "Walk down, ladies! Ole Norah's bin on de lookout fer you. You needn't be surgiverous 'bout dat bottom step,—now, Miss Troof. A team o' mules could come down hit now, let er lone you an' Miss Dolly! Dis way, pleeze! We'll go roun' de gyardin fust, an' den out throo de back yard."

"We are in your hands, Norah," smiled Mrs. Dexter. "Miss Truth and I haven't dared look at a thing,—have we, Truth?"

"I should say not! Why, I even shut my eyes this morning as I went down the lane, and might have broken my neck in that old trash-hole by the gate."

"Now jes' listen at dat!" exclaimed the old man, in great delight,—"when dat hole's been chugged up to de brim for lo, dese many days,—an' a Blue Gum growin' lak it done sprouted dare!"

As they walked on through the neat pathways Uncle Norah said, with obvious hypocrisy. "I ain't sayin' as how I'se done much, Miss Dolly; an' self-praise is half-scan'lous to de world. But I'se wrastled 'round considderbul."

"The improvement is nothing short of magical," protested Mrs. Dexter, with a merry glance at her companion. "I have been quite restless to come out all the morning, but wasn't willing to do so without Miss Truth."

"Dat's right,—dat's right! Miss Troof she know ebbery plant an' vine an' flowerin' onion (he meant bulb) on dis place better'n ole Norah hisself. She uster follow me 'roun' when she wasn't mo' dan dis high" (he measured off a trembling two feet from the ground). "She used ter say dat de flower-beds was places fer de flowers to sleep in durin' de winter, an' wake up bright an' yearly in de spring."

"I believe I do know them all," laughed Truth. "Look over there, at the bunch of hyacinths,—by the beehouse, just where they belong!" She broke from her companions to kneel beside the flowers. "Precious little darlings! Only a few are open yet, but the rest are crowding up like baby-teeth."

"Jes' lissen at dat! Whot I tell you?" said Norah, turning in great solemnity and implied protest to his mistress. "Miss Troof hasn't growed a bit. She allers has talked to dem yerbs an' flowers lak she thinks dem folks God made."

"And so I do," said Truth, shortly.

Uncle Norah paused for an exaggerated stare. "You thinks so yit!" he murmured. "An' you er rich lady, married to a Yankee gen'l'man!"

Truth laughed, but a tiny cloud flecked her face. They walked on in silence until the arched gateway of the "back yard" was reached. This enclosure was at once a transition and a separation between the front garden proper and a large vegetable field behind. In it fruits, berries, and flowers had once striven madly for supremacy. Strawberry plants had crep, like gaunt red spiders, over the ill-defined walks, unpruned fruit trees, quinces, pears, pomegranate, orange, and fig, had carried the battle high in air, and from the blackberry hedges, long, sword-like "suckers" had menaced the eyesight of the passer-by. At the gate of this garden the two ladies uttered a simultaneous cry of surprise. Instead of the ancient panel of rotting wood, they beheld a surface of shining green paint; in place of the well-remembered peg and string that had once served for fastening, Uncle Norah now rattled meaningly a latch of the newest invention. The old negro was one wrinkled mass of smiles.

"Walk in, ladies! Don't be afraid! Dey's somethin' to come yit."

"Why, where are we at!" cried Truth, and Mrs. Dexter could only hold up her hands in corroborative amazement. "I've never been in this Paradise before. The old fruit trees look like they had just come from the barber. Uncle Norah, you're a magician!"

"And the strawberry beds!" added Mrs. Dexter. "I never saw such beautiful rows. There ought to be some berries very soon, now."

"Dey is! Dey will be!" squeaked Uncle Uorah, almost speechless with pride. "No later'n yistiddy I seen a mocking-bird struttin' up an' down dem rows wid his hands in his pockits, lik he had rone hoe'd an' planted de whole shebang. Da't a sho' sign."

"Well, judging from the number of flowers there will be enough for us and Brother Mockin' Bird too," remarked Truth. Even as she spoke she paused, and her eyes began to dilate, "I do believe that all the hot-houses are mended," she said breathlessly, and began running. "Do I—can I believe my eyes? Here are all my old gerananiums and plants inside. Mummie, come quick! I thought they were all dead long ago."

"No, man!" cried the old man, as he flew over the ground to keep pace with Truth. "Not a one on 'em is dead! All ob dem is safe,—der gerangimums, an' de lumbago (plumbago), an' de bee-gonias, an' de night blomin' serious, down to de Christiananthems (chrysanthemums), all on 'em is ez chipper ez fleas on er fat poodle. I nussed de myse'f, cause I seen Miss Troof cryin' when she tole 'em good-bye."

Truth was on the point of crying now.

"But how did you manage to get the houses repaired so neatly, way off here in the woods?" asked Mrs. Dexter, with some curiosity. The question was like honey on the tongue of the old man. "Well," he began importantly, "I ain't a sayin' dat it wus as easy as rollin' off a log—or aven stayin' on one. De wood-work didn't amount to shucks, but de glass was sho' survigerous! We hadter git it fum Mungummery by mejjermint,—an' I nebber did had no use fer dem tape-worm lines! De fuss lot,—hit was too big. De secon' lot,—hit wuz to little. But de third, hit com right enuff, an' a man, wid puty in a pail." It was a peculiarity of Uncle Norah, that he always sunpplemented his narratives with pantomine. During stages of the present recital the misfitting glass had been indicated by planes of air between two horny palms,—his disgust at the stupidity of glass-dealers in general by a protruding under lip, and Frenchy shrugs of the shoulders;—now he went through the motions of a man carying a heavy pail. Truth had to cover her mouth now and again to laugh in the wrong place. Mrs. Dexter's face had remained sweet and grave, though deeply interested.

"Well," Uncle Norah continued, "Jes' as we wus puttin' in de las' piece ob glass, an' de chewin'-gum not dry around de aidges, dat fool Sam Turner—you know Sam Turner, Miss Troof," Truth put her head on one side, and looked puzzled. "Dat long-bodied, yaller nigger ob Aunt Big Mary's half-sister Bricie Coon's"

"Oh, Bricie's Sam! Of course I know him!"

"Well, dat same fool nigger,—jes' as we wus liftin' on de las' window-frame, smilin' careful, an' stoopin' over slow (every gesture was faithfully reproduced), what should come up behin' dat nigger but er was'-ne' (wasp), an' set down on his thinnest patch. 'Sted ob composin' himself, lak de Bible says, Sam up an' screech till you could a heered him de length ob de Pombigbee, dropped the whole window, and went down throo hit, head fust, infer de pit!" Here the narrator stopped to wipe his brow. "I was dat mad!"—Words failed him.

"Truth broke into peals of laughter. "Poor Sam!"

"Po' Sam!" echoed Uncle Norah indignantly. "S'psonin' yo' gerangimums had er bin in dare. Fool Sam., I sez!"

"But he might have cracked his skull."

"Crack Sam Turner's skull, Miss Troof! Now you oughter knew better'n dat. Nothin' dis side ob a mule's hind leg gwineter crack Sam Turner's skull. An'," he added reflectively, "I ain't sayin' dat I would be willin' to put up my Sunday pants even on dat. Sence Sam's bin wukkin' in de stable I'se noticed dat both mules has in-growin' toe-nails."

LOOKING FOR WORK

Everywhere men complain about work; even boys and girls in school or business find work tedious and irksome, but it isn't the work half so much as their own lack of physical strength that makes it hard.

Rich blood, strong lungs and healthful digestion make work pleasurable in business, in school or even housework, and if those who are easily tired —who are not sick, but weak and nervous—would just take Scott's Emulsion for one month and let its pure concentrated food create richer blood to pulsate through every artery and vein—let it build a structure of healthy tissue and give you vigorous strength —you would find work easy and would look for more. Insist on Scott's.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Preemption patent my be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

WHISPERING GALLERIES.

Old World Churches With Remarkable Acoustic Properties.

The most celebrated whispering gallery is that which surrounds the base of the interior of the dome of St. Paul's cathedral, London. A person speaking near its surface can be heard distinctly by one listening near the smooth wall at the other extremity of the diameter, but not elsewhere.

In the cathedral of Gloucester a whispering passage leads from one aisle to the opposite behind the east window of the choir. It is seventy-five feet long, six and a half feet high and three feet wide in the form of half an irregular octagon. The walls and ceilings are of freestone, and the slightest whisper travels from end to end.

The cathedral of the Taj Mahal in Agra, India, has most marvelous echoes and reverberating qualities, but is scarcely a whispering gallery. The whole cathedral of Girgenti, in Sicily, has this character owing to the peculiar structure of its walls. These remarkable properties also belonged to the "Ear of Dionysius," cut in the rock at Syracuse in the shape of a parabolic curve, ending in an elliptical arch. It is said that the tyrant seated in a small chamber over a hundred feet from the spot occupied by his captives by this means could hear every word spoken by his prisoners.—London Answers.

If Animals Could Speak.

It is a startling fact that if some animals could tell their life history they would be able to recall events which happened hundreds of years ago. A Russian eagle, for instance, would be able to remember watching with greedy eyes as one by one the French soldiers under Napoleon fell exhausted out of the ranks in their awful retreat from Moscow in 1812. There are crocodiles alive in India today which saw the first English traveler set foot there, while there are whales in the sea which may have skirted the coast of France when it was invaded in 1415. A great many elephants could recall historical events of a hundred years ago, while there are ravens still living whose memory could go back twice that period.—London Answers.

The Amethyst.

A good example of one of the ways in which magical properties became attributed to natural objects is the stone known as amethyst. The ancient Indian name of this stone had the sound represented by its present name. In Greek this sound happens to mean "anti-wine;" hence, without more ado, the ancients declared that the amethyst was a preventive of and a cure for drunkenness!—London Mail.

EARTH'S BETTER DAY IS DRAWING NEAR

The Divinely Appointed Remedy for Unrest of the World.

The Opening of the Year Suggests the Dawning of the New Age—The Change of Dispensation Manifest to All, but Understood by Few—The King of Glory Soon to Come In—The Great Struggle in the Spiritual Heavens — "The Strong Man" About to Be Bound—The Lord Is Judging His People—The Faithful Soon to Be Rewarded.

PASTOR RUSSELL

New York City Jan. 2.—Pastor Russell gave a very impressive discourse tonight at the New York City Temple, W. 63rd St., near Broadway. His text was, "He that sat upon the Throne said, Behold, I make all things new." (Revelation 21:5.) He spoke as follows:

The opening of a New Year is like the opening of a new ledger. It is a favorable time for determining what should be disposed of in the profit and loss account, for putting into effect good resolutions governing the New Year. Those who make no resolutions make very little progress in character-building. Poor fallen human nature needs all the braces and supports which a well-directed will can give it. We are not advocating hasty, and sometimes unreasonable vows, resolutions, and pledges, thoughtlessly taken and soon broken. What we have in mind is a thoughtful, rational consideration of the matter, a full determination to pursue the way which deliberate judgment tells one is the proper course. In general, the New Year is a time of preparation for a fresh start in life.

On the other hand, the close of the old year is the time for taking stock and for estimating the profits and losses of the year. In other words, it is a time of judgment, or decision. It is a time for issuing dividends, or wise investments. It is a time for the meeting of directors and for the election of officers and servants for the incoming year. So at the close of this Gospel Age, its affairs are being wound up. The Lord is judging His people, and is about to reward the faithful in glory. Meantime, the world must be set in order for the inauguration of the New Order, the Messianic Kingdom.

The Real Cause of Present Conditions

According to the Bible, earth is the one province of the Universe which is in rebellion against the Creator and at variance with His wise and beneficent Laws. Man, the King of the earth, was created in the image and likeness of God, with the Divine Law written in his heart, and only "a little lower than the angels." (Psalm 8:5.) But this earthly king, Adam, rebelled against his Over-Lord, Jehovah, disobeyed His Laws and brought himself under a sentence of death—"Dying, thou shalt die."—Genesis 2:17; Romans 5:12.

The laws of heredity have so operated that to-day the children of Adam find the average of life only 35 years, and but few individuals pass the century mark. But Adam in his perfection, although less favorably circumstanced, was nine hundred and thirty years in dying. The dying experiences of the race are manifested in mental and moral degradation, as well as in physical degeneracy. With all our knowledge and medical skill the race continue to weaken and the ratio of the insane to increase.

Once Bible students would have stated that God is upon the throne of earth and delights in the present order, which the Bible declares to be a reign of Sin and Death. Once Bible students would have declared that, not satisfied with present conditions, appalling as they are, the Creator has arranged that at death all humanity except the Elect Church shall be turned over fully to the control of demons, who by Divine foreordination will be empowered to torture everlastingly the poor unfortunates of Adam's family beyond the power of human tongue to tell.

These same Bible students would have resented the suggestion that God is NOT reigning over the earth; and that, instead, the world is under the domination of Satan, "the Prince of this world." (John 14:30.) But with facilities for Bible study far superior to anything which our forefathers enjoyed, Bible students are finding that Christian people have overlooked many features of the Divine Record. As the eyes of their understanding gradually open wider and wider, they are seeing lengths, breadths, heights, and depths of God's Wisdom, Love, Justice, and Power of which they never before dreamed.

We are finding that the horrible teachings of the past, which have caused so generally a spiritual nausea, came not from the Bible, but are "doctrines of demons," promulgated during the Dark Ages. St. Paul tells us that the present blindness and ignorance, which hinder mankind from seeing and appreciating the real character of God and the Divine Plan for human salvation, are deceptions Satan, "the god of this world."—[illegible] Timothy 4:1; 2 Corinthians 4:4.

A Pertinent Query.

Now, properly enough, comes the query, "If Satan is ruling amongst mankind as the god of this world, where did he get his authority and power? Did God turn the control of mankind over to demons?"

The Bible answers all our queries. God did not give the dominion of earth to Satan, but to man, in proportion as man lost his perfection and became weak in mind and in body, he became the slave of Satan and Sin. Satan and the fallen angels have exercised—especially during the last forty centuries—all their power and ingenuity for the ensnarement and degradation of man. Their influence would have been all powerful for man's overthrow, had not the Almighty provided humanity with will power and to a large extent forced the evil spirits to respect it.

As a result, we see that human depravity has made much less rapid progress than it might have done. To some extent man still possesses the image of God, in which he was created. Many still possess a natural appreciation of truth and righteousness, which under God's arrangement the fallen angels are not able to overcome. If mankind realized the true situation, undoubtedly the human will would be more persistently than ever exercised in opposition to the wiles of the Devil. As it is, these evil spirits hide their identity, and through spirit mediums personate the dead, who according to the Bible, "know not anything," being asleep in death until the Resurrection Morning.—Ecclesiastes 9:5,6,10; Psalm 146:4; Job 14:20-22; Genesis 3:19; John 5:28,29.

"I Make All Things New."

By the Heavenly Father's appointment, the Redeemer of men is to be the great King of Glory, who will reign for a thousand years and "make all things new." Repeatedly He tells us that the first work of the New Dispensation will be the binding of Satan. Not only is this referred to in Revelation 20:1-3, but also in our Lord's parables.

Jesus declared that when the appointed time should come His Second Advent would take place. He likened it to the coming of a thief in the night, when men in general would be off guard, not expectant of a change in the rulership of earth. He intimated that His loyal saints will first be taken, while mankind will be in ignorance of the fact that the time has come for the Reign of Righteousness. Next the Son of Man will "bind the strong man, and then He will spoil his house"—overthrow present arrangements. (Matthew 12:22-29; 24:42-44.) This picture implies a struggle; for the strong man, Satan, has had a great host serving him, ignorant of the fact that he is a usurper and that many of his laws are unjust.

Many of them have never understood that He who redeemed the world by the sacrifice of Himself holds a Divine appointment to be the King of Earth, to quell the rebellion and to bring back into harmony with God all the willing and obedient. Many do not know that this Messianic Kingdom will be God's answer to the Redeemer's prayer, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth, even as it is done in Heaven." Many therefore do not know that all things are to be made new; and that the time appointed by the Father for this great work is a period of one thousand years, now chronologically due to begin.

Not knowing these things, many will be found fighting against God, thinking that in supporting the institutions of the Prince of this world they are doing God service. The Redeemer intimated most distinctly that some of these ignorant ones will be prominent in the ministry of His own Church. They will be surprised, when the honors of the Kingdom are distributed, that they will receive none, but will suffer humiliation and tribulation as unfaithful servants. The Masters words respecting this class are, "Many will say unto Me in that Day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied [preached] in Thy name? in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works?"

But the new King will say to them, "Depart from Me"—come not near to share in My Kingdom. Instead of working righteousness, you have been workers of iniquity. Instead of serving Me as ambassadors for My Kingdom and properly representing Me before men, you have done the reverse. You have upheld unrighteousness. You have promulgated doctrines of demons, and have been My adversaries, not My servants. Depart with weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, expressive of your disappointment, to be sharers with the world in its great Time of Trouble, from which My faithful Bride class shall be delivered.

Whatever reformation your share in that tribulation shall effect will determine what I may do for you or with you in the future, in harmony with the Divine arrangements. But I cannot recognize you as in any sense worthy of the glory, honor, and immortality which shall be accorded to the Bride class.—Paraphrase on Matthew 7:22,23; 13:40-43; 25:30; Luke 13:25-28; 12:45-48.

Two Parallel Ages.

Looking at the time of the change from the Jewish Age to the Gospel Age, we perceive that during a period of forty years God dealt especially with Fleshly Israel—from the beginning of the ministry of Jesus until the destruction of Jerusalem by the army of Titus. That forty-year period the Master styled the Harvest of that Age. The gathering of the wheat class progressed close down to the consummation of that Harvest—the separating of the chaff class meanwhile taking place.—John 4:35-38; Matthew 3:11,12.

Finally, when the wheat had all been gathered into the garner of the New Dispensation, by the begetting of the Holy Spirit, the chaff was consumed in a time of trouble which utterly destroyed the Jewish polity. The destruction of the chaff did not signify the annihilation of unbelieving Jews nor the eternal torture. It represented parabolically the complete destruction of their Jewish hopes. Those hopes have lain buried for eighteen centuries, and are only now reviving—in the form of Zionism.

The parable of the Wheat and the Tares (Matthew 13:24-30) pictures the Lord's work during the Gospel Age. The Master and His Apostles sowed only good seed, the pure Message of the Messianic Kingdom, to which a saintly few would attain and which ultimately would bless all the families of the earth. But Satan, through his various agencies—many of whom wore the livery of Christ), oversowed the wheat-field with tare seed—false doctrines, "doctrines of demons."

From this unauthorized sowing by the Adversary—as a result of these false doctrines which he caused to be promulgated throughout Christendom—many nominally came into the Church of Christ. These never really professed to be wheat, never had the begetting of the Holy Spirit, never were disciples in the only sense that Christ acknowledges any to be His followers.

As tares resemble wheat, so these deceived people, the progeny of false doctrines, think themselves to be Christians. They greatly outnumber the true Christians, just as the chaff of the Jewish nation outnumbered the "Israelites indeed." As God then gathered the wheat, the "Israelites indeed," in the spiritual House of Sons by the begetting of the Holy Spirit, so now He will gather the faithful ones of this Gospel Age into the Heavenly Garner by the change of the First Resurrection. As the prospects and the hopes of the nominal Israelites, the chaff class, were consumed in the great time of trouble which closed that Age, so the hopes and the prospects of the tare class will perish in the great fire, or Time of Trouble, with which this Gospel Age is closing.

"The Old Order Passeth."

The dispensational change near at hand will be much greater than that of eighteen centuries ago. There, our Lord Jesus merely sent forth the Message for calling out of His Church. But here, the Church, having been completed, is to be glorified; and the Kingdom of Messiah is to overthrow completely the kingdom of Satan. In illustrating the radical change which is to take place in the near future, the Scriptures refer to the Deluge, which completely overthrew the systems of wickedness and unrighteousness then prevailing.—Matthew 24:37-39; Luke 17:26-30.

The Apostle Peter tells us that in the end of this Age the overthrow of present institutions will be as complete as in the days of the Deluge. He declares that the present earthly elements—Capital and Labor, aristocracy and common people, plutocracy and socialists—will be engaged in a terrible strife, which can be properly symbolized only by a consuming fire. More than this, St. Peter declares that the heavens also will take fire—ecclesiasticism will become involved in the strife and will pass away with a great commotion.—2 Peter 3:1-13.

But let us remember that it is neither the physical earth nor the Heaven of God's habitation that will burn up. It will be merely the social and religious institutions which, under the supervision of the Prince of this world, are styled "the present evil world," or imperfect arrangement.

As St. Peter also points out, the present order will be superseded by a New Order, which the Apostle calls "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The new heavens will be the Church in glory, in Kingdom power. The new earth will be the new social arrangements instituted, guided, directed by the new heavens—Messiah's Kingdom. The New Kingdom will enforce its laws as with a rod of iron—inflexibly. No longer will it be true that whosoever will live godly shall suffer persecution, and have all manner of evil said against him falsely, as a reward of faithfulness to Christ and the Truth. On the contrary, in the Day of Messiah's Kingdom, the righteous shall flourish, and all wilful evil-doers shall be cut off in the Second Death.—Psalm 72:7; 37:9.

The Work of the Kingdom.

Through the Prophet the Lord calls attention to this new condition, saying, "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." (Isaiah 65:17.) Our context tells us of this same "new heavens and new earth" condition as taking the place of the present order of things. Then it describes the Church under the symbolism of "the New Jerusalem," the capital of Messiah's Kingdom, and the centre from which authority will go forth for mankind's assistance out of the fallen conditions of sin and death.

We also read that through those blessed provisions, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things [the present evil world] are passed away." The work of renewing will require the entire thousand years of Messiah's Kingdom, and will be successful to the highest degree.

Let all whose eyes of understanding have been opened to see these things rejoice, and tell abroad the glorious story that the period of the reign of Sin and Death is expiring; and that the new period of the Reign of Righteousness is near at hand, bringing life everlasting to every one who will be obedient. With this thought before our minds, the New Year before us will bring us joyful suggestions, helpful in all the experiences of life—especially to those who have become followers of Jesus. Those who are seeking to walk in His steps, willing to suffer with Him for the sake of the Truth, shall in due time be glorified together with Him, as members of His Elect Bride class.

The conversation of the lives and health of employers is an investment that produces large returns in efficiency and contentment.

Great care should be exercised when thawing frozen water pipes with a naked flame. Hot water is more effective and is absolutely safe.

NEW DEPARTURE IN EARLY CLOSING
During the Months of
January, February, March

SINCLAIR'S STORE Will Close
Saturday Nights at 7:00

After carefully considering the question of Early Closing, we have decided that for the Winter Months of January, February and March we will close our Store every Saturday Night at 7 o'clock.

This early closing means much to our Staff, many of whom live a long distance from our Store, and will thus be saved a long walk to and from their homes during these stormy winter months.

But in this movement for Early Closing we must ask the co-operation of all our customers, as well as the many friends of such a forward movement, for we want to serve the public just as well for the future as we have tried to do in the past.

Instead of our staff going home to tea, one half at 5 o'clock and one half at 6 o'clock as heretofore, they will now all remain until 7 o'clock, and the hours from 5 to 7 will, we hope, be busy hours in our store, and our complete staff will be at your service.

This Early Closing will begin Saturday, January 8th
Store Closes at 7 p.m.

QUEEN CONDEMNS FERDINAND'S MOVE

Bitter Quarrel Reported in Bulgarian Royal Family.

CROWN PRINCE A PRISONER

Correspondent of Figaro Says Queen Eleonora Told Expelled Nun That Czar Ferdinand Had Imperilled His Throne — Prince Boris Reported to Have Attacked Father.

A VIOLENT quarrel has occurred between King Ferdinand of Bulgaria and Queen Eleonora because the former is fighting with the Teutons, according to a Balkan correspondent of The Figaro. When the King expelled the French nuns from Bulgaria and the Queen helped them to reach Roumania, so the story runs, she told the Mother Superior that Ferdinand had imperilled the Throne and placed himself beyond the pale of Europe.

QUEEN ELEONORA.

According to the same source of information, Crown Prince Boris also attacked his father, accusing him of treachery, and refused to accept the appointment of Commander-in-chief of the Bulgarian army. The King, it is further alleged, is keeping the Crown Prince a prisoner in the palace.

The Nerve of Him.

Young Alfred had been reading the evening paper and paused contemplatively for a few moments.

"Father," said he, "what is 'inertia?'"

"Well, if I have it, it's pure laziness, but if your mother has it it is nervous prostration," responded father, with a yawn.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Like Our Own Moon.

Observations made at the Lowell observatory on the varying brightness of two satellites of Saturn, viz., Mimas and Enceladus, indicate that these bodies rotate on their axes in periods identical with those of their revolution around the primary, i. e., they behave like our own moon, and probably like satellites generally.

Real Hunger.

Little Willie's mother sent him to bed without any supper.

At 8 o'clock, as Willie lay dismally in his little bed in the dark, his father appeared at the door and whispered:

"Son, could you eat some honey in the comb?"

"Jiminy, dad!" Willie answered. "I could eat it in the brush!"—Exchange.

A Burst of Eloquence.

This is from Australia: "Gentlemen, a member of this house has taken advantage of my absence to tweak my nose behind my back. I hope that the next time he abuses me behind my back like a coward he will do it to my face like a man and not go skulking into the thicket to assail a gentleman who isn't present to defend himself."—Exchange.

Queer.

"That young doctor is queer."

"In what way?"

"He admitted that he didn't know anything about my case."

"A lot of doctors do that nowadays."

"I know, but this fellow also admitted that he didn't know another doctor he could turn me over to."—Detroit Free Press.

Sunken Bark.

"They tell me that Smith was arrested today because he drowned his dog in the river," said Jones.

"How could they arrest him for drowning a dog in the river?" demanded Brown.

"Why, they claimed that a sunken bark obstructed navigation," replied Jones.—Spokane Spokesman Review.

Her Example.

"The hen is at once a model and a rebuke to human beings of overweening ambitions."

"How so?"

"Although the rival of the American eagle himself as a great national institution, her highest ambition is to keep on scratching for a living."—Baltimore American.

Lessening the Trouble.

"These are the smallest sandwiches I ever saw for the money," complained a tourist in a seaside restaurant.

"Yes," replied the waitress; "there was so much complaint of the quality of them that I thought I would make them smaller, so that there would not be so much to grumble about."—London Globe.

A Matter of Improvement.

Mr. Henry Clay Pinckney, an Afro American of deepest ebon hue, lay very ill. The mistress of the plantation called to ascertain his condition. "How is your husband this morning, Marin da?" she asked.

"Mis' Jane," was the reply, "dey hain't no imp'ovement one way or de yudder."—Argonaut.

DISREGARDS RED TAPE.

Lieut.-Col. Marlow an Indefatigable Worker in Army Medical Service

They say this is a war of young men, and a striking example of that truth is Lieut.-Col. F. W. Marlow, the head of the medical service in Toronto military division, who has not only the charge of all the medical matters in this immense business of gathering and sending forth troops, but who has undertaken, and has won widespread respect through, the still greater work of providing for the returned soldier. Lieut.-Col. Marlow is only 38 years of age. Yet it is very doubtful whether any administrator in the whole military machine has so many serious and undelegateable duties.

But, for all his youth, this is Lt.-Col. Marlow's name in full, giving him all his titles and degrees: Lieut.-Colonel Frederick William Marlow, A.D.M.S., M.D., C.M., F.T.M.C., M.C. P.S., L.R.C.P. (London), F.R.C.S. (England), F.A.C.S., associate professor of gynaecology at the University of Toronto!

The letters A.D.M.S. mean Assistant Director of Medical Service, which is the title of the head of the medical department of a military division. All the other letters are titles he has won in the sphere of medical science.

Lieut.-Colonel Marlow succeeded to the post of A.D.M.S. when Dr. J. T. Fotheringham went overseas. To-day he has not only to see to the general welfare of the Army Medical Corps, but his duties cover the medical care and examination of every soldier in the bigger part of Ontario. When the troops marched from Niagara it was Lieut.-Colonel Marlow who had to go over the route and supervise all camps. He had to make all arrangements for the care of road casualties. All permanent camps, such as the Exhibition, the old General Hospital, camps at Oshawa, Brantford, and all over the division, have to be inspected by him and seen to be kept in good condition.

It was in connection with this returned soldier problem that Colonel Marlow earned public esteem. He took the plan for a system of convalescent homes, which he and his associates had evolved, and saw it through to its logical application. When the muddle at the Discharge Depot was uncovered, Col. Marlow was one of the men called to Quebec to help handle the big rush of returned men; and while there, he took the opportunity of lending his wits to the untanglement of the muddle. For months Colonel Marlow has argued that returned soldiers should not, except in simple cases, be dealt with at Quebec, but should be sent on to their home division, there to be held and examined and finally disposed of. It was the simplest and most effective way, and it permitted also of the exercise of personal consideration for the returned soldier.

Personal consideration is one of Col. Marlow's unique points. He is accessible. It is so hard to reach the heads of departments. But possibly on account of his youth, which gives him an inexhaustible well of energy, Colonel Marlow is to be seen any day giving a hearing to the plainest soldier, while gold braid waits its turn. He is no flunkey. And he doesn't do any tagging after anyone.

Canadian Wheat Saves Belgium.

It is interesting to note in connection with the study of the war from an economic point that to-day the price of bread in Belgium is the same as it is in England. Bread of the best quality made from flour, ground from Canadian wheat, has been kept at the level price and unaffected by war, through the good offices of the Belgian Relief Committee.

This committee received a large share of its wheat and flour from Canada through the generosity of the Canadian people, shipped from the Canadian committee's headquarters in Montreal, and its allotment is so regulated that there could be no advance in the price to the people. Of course, a large part of the bread is actually distributed free to those who have no money—for the committee sees that all have sustenance—but in such cases the commune either pays, or gives an obligation to pay, for the bread at the standard price.

This has been accomplished as a small part of the wonderful and almost incomprehensible work of the Relief Committee. The committee has seen to it that rich and poor are treated alike in the distribution of bread. No matter what a man's resources may be, he can receive only his allotment of bread each day and through the same channels that the poor man receives his.

Canada's Noble Response.

A quarter of a million men have been Canada's contribution to the war to date, and thousands of these have long been mouldering in the mud of Flanders.

But, first and last, it is about 250,000 troops that the Dominion has raised or is raising for the glory of her British Empire.

The announcement has just been made at Ottawa that 145 Canadian infantry battalions, with a total war strength of 160,000 men, exclusive of artillery, engineers, and other branches of the service, had been authorized up to date. Of this number, 55 battalions have already been sent to England or France, and the other 90 are either now in training or organizing in Canada.

Including artillery, engineers, and the various branches with each infantry battalion, the total number of men in the 145 battalions will be more than 250,000.

To Treat Zinc Ore.

The zinc industry in British Columbia will receive a big impetus in the establishment at the Trail smelter of a large plant for treating zinc ore, to be operated by the Canadian Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co. The plant is almost completed, and is costing in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

Just Rebuke.

About a thousand years ago Sadi wrote:

"A man had sore eyes. He went to a horse doctor, who applied to his eyes what he used for his horses. The man became blind. He took the case before the judge, who said: 'No damages. If this fellow were not an ass he would not have gone to a farrier.'"

Not That Kind.

Weary Walker—Lady, could yer help a poor fellow a little? I've got a hackin' cough an' a headache. Mrs. Kindling—Well, I've got a little wood outside you could hack, and it might cure your headache. Weary Walker—Much obliged, mum, but, yer see, my headache ain't of the splittin' kind.—London Scraps.

CHEERFULNESS.

Cheerfulness is a great help along all the walks of life. Cheerfulness is so very salutary that it might well be called the nectar of health. A cheerful frame of mind greatly assists recovery from illness. So do cheerful doctors, cheerful nurses and cheerful surroundings.

BACK FLASH CAUSES LOSS OF $500,000

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 4.—While an employee of the Texas Oil Company storage plant here was stocking the boiler of the plant late this afternoon his oil-soaked clothing became ignited from a back flash from the boilers and immediately the flames were communicated to other parts of the plant, causing a total loss of $500,000.

Several containers of lubricating oil were released and within a few minutes fire had spread all over the plant. Seven huge containers of gasoline exploded, and this and the lubricating oil ran into a creek, which blazed for miles.

No lives were lost, although two employees of the oil company are seriously injured, one thought to be fatally.

HOW DANIEL FELT

The occason was a dinner to a well-known motor manager who was off to the front, and one of his trade friends was called upon to propose his health. "This," he said, "is quite unexpected; in fact, when I came into this room I felt much like Daniel n the lion's den. When Daniel got into that place and looked around he thought to himself, 'Whoever's got to do the after-dinner speaking, it won't be me!"

WEDDING BELLS

COLLIP—RALPH

At three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, December 28th, the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Ralph, Dundas, was the scene of a pretty wedding, when their youngest daughter, May Vivian, was married to James Bertram Collip, M.A., Ph.D., of Edmonton University, son of J. D. Collip, of this city, the Rev. Caleb Harris officiating. There were present only the immediate relatives. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore white satin with pearls and rose point lace, veil and orange blossoms; also carrying white roses and lily of the valley. She was attended by her sister, Miss Maude, who wore old rose habutal silk and pink roses. The groom was attended by Mr. R. D. Turnbull of Toronto. The bride's mother wore grey satin trimmed with mauve and lace; the groom's mother, brown satin with fur and lace. The wedding march was played by Miss Kathleen Suter. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl and amethyst necklace; to the bridesmaid, a gold broach; to the groomsman a set of cuff links. After dejeuner the bride and groom left for Edmonton.

KIERMAN—LOTT

A very pretty home wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Lott, Six Conession of Sidney, on Wednesday, January 5th, when Mr. Lott's sister, Miss Lena Lott of Toronto, was joined in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. John Kierman of Wallbridge. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. L. M. Sharpe of Sidney Circuit, at high noon, in the presence of about sixty guests. The home was beautifully decorated for the occasion with owers and evergreens, which was in keeping with the happy event.

The bride looked charming in her beautiful gown of embroidered net, trimmed with satin and roses, and she wore a beautiful bouquet of cream roses and maiden-hair fern, which was held by a very costly pearl brooch, the gift of the groom. The many beautiful and costly presents, which were given the bride shows her popularity with her many friends of Sidney and city, as there were several from Belleville, including Mr. and Mrs. George Thompson and daughter, Marjorie, Mr. and Mrs. Herb Barragar, and others. After the ceremony the guests sat down to a sumptuous repast, which the hostess, Mrs. Lott, received much praise as being an ideal hostess, as the tables were laden with all the good things that could be provided for such an occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Kierman, after receiving the congratulations of their many friends, left amid showers of rice and good wishes for their honeymoon. On their return they will reside at Wallbridge. The bride's going away dress was blue serge, with black velvet hat to match, trimmed with a white feather bandeau. Mr. and Mrs. Kierman's many friends join with The Intelligencer in wishing them a long and prosperous wedded life.

"What won't they do next to push that machine!" he said. "I understand that with every new car purchased they now actually give away a squirrel."

"To run behind the car," said Mr. Davis, "and pick up the nuts."

MUSIC & DRAMA

MAY BELL MARKS CO.

In the presentation of "The Girl Thief" at Scott's Theatre last night, the May Bell Marks' Company ably lived up to the reputation they gained the previous evening.

The company is all this paper said it was yesterday and a little bit more. Miss Marks is in a class by herself as far as repertoire work is concerned, and the company that supports her is of the highest praise.

While on Tuesday night Miss Marks and Mr. Hubbard overshone the remainder of the company, last night in addition to Miss Marks should be mentioned Aruthur Hebert in the heavy character Robert Ames, "The Man", and Mildred Bell as Ruth Day, although the popular selection might be F. H. Willard as Jim Blake.

The story of reforming a young girl thief and returning her to the better life was one full of pathos, yet abounding in good clean humor.

The specialties were again of the highest quality and were again appreciated by all present.

Speech From The Throne to be Brief

OTTAWA, Jan. 5.—There will be several Cabinet council meetings this week to put the finishing touches on the speech from the throne and make the final arrangements for the opening.

The speech from the throne will be very brief. The chief and about the only legislation to which any reference will be made will be the bill to extend the life of Parliament a year. There will, of course be reference to the general military situation as far as it concerns Canada and a repetition of the announcement of Canada's determination to see the war through to the end.

It is understood that after the debate on the speech from the throne, the Government will introduce the bill to extend Parliament. Nothing will be done until this is enacted.

Liberal Caucus Likely

The attitude of the Liberals is not certain and a caucus will likely be called soon after the opening to make a decision. From unofficial views expressed by Liberal members at the capital the bill will be allowed to pass although not without some debate and cross-firing. The Liberals may ask for an undertaking that no railway legislation or acrimonious party legislation be introduced in the meantime. It has been intimated that the Government is prepared to give this undertaking.

Outside this bill, the session will be devoted as far as the Government is concerned, almost entirely to war measures. Chief interest will centre in the Budget and the war appropriation rates. At one time the Liberals were preparing an onslaught on the financial policy of the Government, but the conspicuous success of Sir Thomas White's war revenue Budget of a year ago, the growing revenue and decreasing expenditures outside of the war, has brought about a collapse of the Liberal plans. The Budget, it is believed, will meet with only very mild criticism.

To Present Splendid Budget

The Finance Minister will be in a position to present a splendid Budget, and will show the House and the country that Canada, despite the drain of the war, is in an exceedingly strong financial position. The revenues will be a record. The revenues for the nine months ending Dec 31 were $122,000,000, and for the 12 months will likely reach $165,000,000, or fifteen millions more than the Finance Minister anticipated a year ago.

It is not believed that there will be any drastic new war taxes, although there has been under consideration the question of taxing war profits and other sources of revenue. With the present increasing revenues and decreasing expenditures Canada will be able to meet the interest on war loans and pay off some twenty-five million war capital expenditure.

The general belief is that the session will not last much past Easter.

How Much Rye Do You Eat?

Most people eat little, if any, rye. Yet rye is one of the most healthful and nutritious cereals.

Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal, the most nutritious cereal food known to science, contains 35 per cent. whole berries of rye.

In addition it contains whole wheat, deodorized flax seer, and bran. It distinctly differs in composition from any other food on the market. It will positively relieve constipation or "money back."

Roman Meal looks different and requires a simpler way of preparation. So be absolutely certain to follow directions on package and do not stir while cooking porridge or you spoil it.

Sold by grocers at 10c. and 25c.

Canadian Car Stocks Broke

MONTREAL, Jan 5.—A headlong slump in Canadian Car stocks, the common breaking 16¼ points, to 16 3-4, while the preferred, started apparently on a like course, was halted at 98 by the minimum, after a fall of three points, exerted a disturbing influence on the local market to-day. Outside of Car common, the liquidation was light. Steel of Canada fell 3, to 37; Iron 7 7-8, to 47; Scotia 1¼, to 100½; Locomotive, 2½ to 60½, and General Electric 1½ to 112. Bridge was about the steadiest of this war group, holding between 231½ and 231, with last sale at the latter price, but stocks were offering at 230 at the close.

Car's break in the morning session was a particularly drastic affair. Between 72 and 65, the only transactions reported were a couple of lots, forced selling, resulting from weakened marginal accounts, appeared to cease, and a little buying came on the market, which rallied the price to 63½. The rally was continued in the afternoon session to 69, and last sale went out at 68, leaving the net loss for the day 10¼, and for the past two days 18 points. The preferred remained in the committee room offered at the 98 minimum at the end of the day. Dealings in Car common footed up 2052 shares out of a total of 5585 for the day, while 150 shares of the preferred changed hands. C.P.R. was weaker, with New York, selling at 182¼; Power was offered fractionally down to 233, and Laurentide sold 1 lower, at 191.

DANGER THREATENS OUR NATIVE BIRDS

Embargo on Foreign Plumage Encourage Domestic Slaughter —Supplementary Legislation Needed

The skins of two chickadees were noticed on a lady's hat the other day by an official of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa. The chickadee is one of our most beautiful and widely distributed birds, 70 per cent of whose food consists of injurious insects. To all lovers of the Canadian woods, it is a general favourite. There is every reason, humane, aesthetic and economic, for preserving it; yet thoughtless, fashion-crazy women persist in wantonly sacrificing it and others of man's feathered friends to decorate their millinery.

Not all women are included in this indictment, but the law should be amended to reach those who will not refrain from patronizing the slaughter of innocent and useful birds. Already, our legislators have forbidden the importation of foreign plumage, but this must be supplemented by an act to suppress the traffic in native birds. It should be made illegal, not only to kill useful, rare and insectivorous birds, but the vendors and wearers of the plumes of such birds should be punished likewise.—Conservation.

SPORTING NEWS

Enter "Runt"—Exit "Runt"

Jimmy ("Runt") Walsh once aspired to be a pitcher, realized his ambition, immediately established a world's record, and right then and there the pitching hopes died a sudden and violent death.

"Runt," who now is a third-sacker for the St. Louis Feds, was doing infielding chores for the Phillies two or three years ago. Ever and anon he used to approach "Red" Dooin, the managerial person, with a plea to try his arm in the box.

"I've got speed and control, and I can surely curve that pellet," argued "Runt."

"I'll give you a chance some day," answered "Red"—and the chance came during a Boston series. The Braves had hammered a brace of Phillie pitchers out of the box, two more were unfit because of duty the day before, the game was hopelessly lost anyway and so Dooin yelled to Walsh:

"Hey, you Runt, get in that box and let's see watcha kin do."

Proudly, almost haughtily, "Runt" strode to the mound. Three men were on bases. "Runt" uncorked the usual "warming" up benders, then hitched up his belt, nodded in affirmation of his catcher's signal, wound up and pitched.

The batter reached out his war club, caught the ball squarely and fairly and sent it crashing up against the fence for a three-bagger, which of course sent three runs pattering over the plate.

"Runt" was surprised, but not disheartened. He hitched his trousers once again, gave the next batter a careful once over, nodded to his signalling catcher—and let loose.

The batter hooked Walsh's curve as it broke—and the ball sailed over the fence for a home run.

"Hey, you get outa there—get outa there before I assassinate you," yelled "Red" Dooin, and "Runt" Walsh's career as a major league pitcher ended there—ended after Walsh had hung up the unenviable record of yielding a triple, a homer and five runs on two pitched balls—a record without parallel in the long history of baseball.

HOCKEY NOTES

Paris O.H.A. intermediates have three brothers on the team, C., J. and E. Wooden.

The Brantford rink is very poorly lighted, and unless there is a marked improvement O.H.A. games may be forbidden there.

Masters, star defence player of the Berlin Union Jacks, junior O.H.A., has enlisted with the 118th Battalion at Berlin. He is a famous ball player in those parts, being a first baseman of unusual ability.

The Toronto N.H.A. team lost their fifth straight game at Montreal last night, being defeated by the Canadians by a score of 6 to 1.

Boston has been inquiring as to the status of Frank Heffernan, who was suspended with the defunct Victorias, and is now in New York, hoping to play with the Crescents. The O.H.A. has already replied to an inquiry from New York that Hefferman was under suspension on a matter of discipline, and no question had been therefore optional with the New York club to include him in their line-up against another American team.

HOCKEY

Before a large crowd at Lindsay the Belleville Juniors were defeated by the Lindsay team in their first O.H.A. junior game by 6 to 1, the winners leading 2 to 0 at the end of the first and 6 to 0 at the end of the second period, Belleville scoring their only goal in the last period.

The ice was covered with slush and water and combination play was almost impossible, the game consisting of one and two men rushes in which the defence men of the Lindsay team excelled. Had the ice been harder the local boys would have made a far better showing. The game throughout was very clean only two of Lindsay men being put off while the eBlleville team did not have a man in the box during the whole game. The line up:

Belleville—Nurse, goal; J. Green and Holloway, defence; G. Arnott, rover; L. Arnott, centre; Green and Whalen, wings. Lindsay—Mitchell, goal; Haugh and Flavelle, defence; Reid, rover; Mills, centre; Griffis and Carew, wings.

Referee—Lou Marsh.

It has been figured that the average cost of apprenticeship, including the cost of bringing a man to the working efficiency necessary to profit, is approximately $1,000. If this man is disabled from any cause, the employer must immediately recognize a charge for the cost of training another workman, in addition to whatever damage he may be called upon to pay as a result of the accident.

The Crippled Bird.

A very remarkable instance of the sympathetic kindness of one bird to another is given by a lady who witnessed the incident in her garden. Upon the lawn there was a basin, which was kept supplied with water for the birds to drink. Among the birds coming to the garden was a crippled rook, which had lost one leg altogether and had no foot upon the other, so that it was very helpless when it rested on the ground. One day when this cripple was upon the lawn three other rooks came and drank. Two of them flew away at once, but the third, seeing the cripple, became interested and went up to have a look at him. The inquisitive rook gazed at the cripple for a little while, put his head down to the ground several times, as if he were trying to make out what was wrong, and walked round the helpless bird, puzzled perhaps for a moment what to do. Then suddenly he made up his mind, and, putting his wing under the cripple's wing, he partly dragged and partly supported him to the water, giving him an extra tug to lift his head to the edge of the basin. Then his friend in need was seen to fill his beak with water and drop some of it into the cripple's mouth. After being shown in this kindly way where the water was the maimed rook was able to help himself to it.

Silent Water.

Three or more can play the game called "silent water." First one is chosen to be "it." He or she is then blindfolded and made to stand in a corner. He then counts from one to ten and says, "Silent water no more moving." The rest of the players, having run to some place, stand still at the command. The first one found and named by the blindfolded person is "it."

Vol. 81 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, FRIDAY, JANUARY 7, 1916. No. 7

Conscription Law Not Necessary

Order-in-Council Would Force all of Military Age to Join

While the citizens of Belleville are reading of the Lord Derby bill in England, and guessing at the possibilities of conscription in Canada, few, perhaps, realize that it would not be necessary to pass conscription law to force all the men of military age in this city to enlist. If the present units are not recruited within the time desired by the military authorities that all that would be needed to make every man eligible to enlist, come out, would be an order in council. After this was passed, it would simply be a case of balloting for the men, and they would be drafted. There are four classes for the draft, according to the Canadian Militia act, first single men or widowers without children, between the ages of 18 and 30; second single men or widowers without children, between the ages of 30 and 45; third, married men, with children, between the ages of 18 and 45; and fourth, all men physically fit, between the ages of 45 and 60. Of course the regular exemptions are made from these classes.

The statement made at Ottawa by someone in the militia department there, to the effect that the Canadian militia might be called out to go overseas, was the cause of the officer making his statement. He pointed out that the militia of Canada meant all men of military age. He said that because some men did the militia duty while others equally eligible to train for their country's defense neglected to do theirs, it did not make them say different regarding their eligibility to serve in war time.

"Why, even in peace time, when we are having a summer time, when we cannot get sufficient men from the military units to go down for the work we can draft from the eligible men, providing an order in council is passed," he stated.

While speaking on the subject he said that of all the military officers who attended a conference in Toronto, at least half of them were over the military age. They had come back to service because the men of the military age had failed the country.

Lindsay Store Broken Open

The liquor store of J. O'Reilly, Kent St., Lindsay, was broken into early Thursday morning by thieves for a reason only known to themselves as the proprietor could not say that any goods were removed.

On the same day at the G. T. R. freight sheds a car was broken into and the contents of a 26 gallon whiskey barrel were stolen, which was in transit to O'Reilly's liquor store.

Various theories are advanced as to who the likely parties are and the police are working on the case.

Late reports say that the contents of the barrel of whiskey were taken from the car down near Campbellford, and the barrel shipped on to Lindsay.

Hughes to Speak In Victoria County

OTTAWA, Jan. 6—Special—Gen. Sir Sam Hughes left to-night for his own county of Victoria, where he will deliver some twenty recruiting speeches in various parts of the county on Friday and Saturday. He says that 3,000 men have enlisted from that county. Later he will speak at a number of meetings in Quebec.

BLAMES GEN. STOPFORD FOR SULVA BAY FAILURE

Sir Ian Hamilton in His Report on Gallipoli Operations Blames Relieved General For Failing to Advance at Critical Moment

PRAISES BRAVERY OF OFFICERS AND MEN

Suffered Untold Agonies For Lack of Water Yet Fought Valiantly in Face of Desperate Odds—Opposed Evacuation of Peninsula—Lack of Troops Another Cause

Historical Report

LONDON, Jan. 6.—General Hamilton"s report on the British operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula was published to-night. It tells the story of the fighting on the peninsula from the beginning of May to the middle of October.

Probably no more important contribution to the history of the present war has yet been made. The report throws light upon the great landing at Anzac Cove and Suvla Bay August 7, which has been the subject of strong attacks upon the military administration of the Government, the whole operations requiring the combined action of the army and the navy.

Names General Responsible

General Hamilton names General Stopford as the man whose orders resulted in delay and the nullifying of the chance to take advantage of the surprise landing. General Stopford was later relieved.

The landing of the masses of troops within a limited area probably was the most complicated ever undertaken, and military men are not surprised that some important details failed to work as planned.

Praises Men's Bravery

The Suvla Bay landing failed to accomplish its object, the report shows, largely because the force consisted largely of untried troops under Generals inexperienced in the new warfare, and partly through the failure of the water supply. The sufferings of the troops for lack of water make painful reading.

General Hamilton bestows the highest possible praise upon the bravery of the men. He believes that after the middle of August the Turks outnumbered the British and had plenty of fresh soldiers and munitions, while the British Government was unable to furnish him with the reinforcements he wanted, the reason being one which prevented him from further insistence.

The General strongly opposed the abandonment of any of the bases held by the British troops.

Opposes Evacuation

Gen. Hamilton's report, which was submitted to Field Marshal Earl Kitchener, Secretary of State for War, carries the story of the Dardanelles operations up to Mid-October, when he relinquished his command. Concerning his retirements, General Hamilton reports:

"On the 11th of October your Lordship cabled asking me for an estimate of the losses which would be involved in the evacuation of the peninsula. I replied in terms showing that such a step was to me unthinkable. On the 16th of October I received a cable recalling me to London for the reason as I was informed by your Lordship on my arrival that his Majestey's' Government desired fresh, unbiased opinion from a responsible Commander upon the question of early evacuation."

The Ill-Fated Landing

The most stirring passages of the document describe the ill-fated landing at Suvla Bay and Anzac early in August, for securing command of the heights on the middle of the peninsula and cutting off from their base the Turkish forces at the lower extremity, where the allied armier made their first landing.

This operation began on August 6. The climax was reached at daybreak on the 10th, when the Turks made a grand attack from the summit of Chunnuk Bair Hill upon a short front held by two battalons of the 6th North Lancashire and the 5th Wiltshire Regiments, which General Hamilton describes as weakened in numbers, though not in spirit.

"First our men were shelled by every enemy gun," he says, "then assaulted by a huge column consisting of no less than a full division plus three battalions. The North Lancashire men were simply overwhelmed in their shallow trenches by sheer weight of numbers, while the Wiltshires, who were caught out in the open, were literally almost annihilated.

"The ponderous mass of the enemy swept over the crest and swarmed round the Hampshires and General Baldwin's brigade, which had to give ground, and were only extricated with great difficulty and very heavy losses.

Iron Rain Sweeps Turks

"Now it was our turn. The warships and the New Zealand and Australian artillery brigade, and the 69th Brigade Royal Field Artillery, were getting the chance of a lifetime. As successive solid lines of Turks topped the crest of the ridge gaps were torn through their formation and an iron rain fell on them as they tried to reform in the gullies.

"Not here only did the Turks pay dearly for their recapture of the vital crest. Enemy reinforcements continued to move up under a heavy and accurate fire from our guns. Still they kept topping the ridges and pouring down the western slopes of Chamnuk Bair, as if determined to gain everything they had lost. But once they were over the crest they became exposed not only to the full blast of the guns, naval and military, but to a battery of ten New Zealand machine guns, which played upon their serried ranks at close range until the barrels of their weapons were red hot.

"Enormous losses were inflicted, and of the swarms which had once fairly crossed the crest line only a handful ever struggled back to their own side of Chunnuk Bair.

Battle's Bloody Climax

"At the same time, strong forces of the enemy were hurled against the spurs to the northwest, where there arose a conflict so deadly that it may be considered the climax of four days' fighting for the ridge. Portions of our line were pierced and the troops were driven clean down the hill. At the foot of the hill the men who were supervising the transport of food and water were rallied by Staff Captain Street. Unhesitatingly they followed him back, where they plunged again into the midst of that series of struggles in which Generals fought in the ranks and men dropped their scientific weapons and caught one another by the throat.

"The Turks came on again and again, fighting magnificently and calling upon the name of God. Our men stood to it and maintained by many a deed of daring the old traditions of their race. There was no flinching; they died in the ranks where they stood..

"Toward this supreme struggle the absolute last two battalions from the general reserve were now hurried, but

Calls France Chief of Allies

MILAN, Jan. 6.—In a brief note to the Secolo, Gugliemo Ferero says that France is now the chief factor in the coalition of the Allies. He continues:

"At the outbreak of the war everyone thought France owed her salvation to England and Russia. To-day the world knows that if France had not made herself the Allies' shield against the furious hammer strokes of Thor, Europe would not have escaped German hegemony.

"Thanks to France, who broke the first German drive, the Triple Entente was given time to prepare its armies, blockade Germany, and win Italy over.

"Her terrible sacrifices, heroically supported, give France precedence in authority in the councils of the Allies."

THEFT OF JEWELS FROM BROCKVILLE HOME

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 6.—(Special)—It is said that the local police are seeking the whereabouts of Lieut. J. E. H. Nolan, C. Battery, Kingston, on a charge of theft of jewels of over $3,000 from Mrs. S. Flint. Nolan came here last week as usher at a fashionable wedding. He was accepted as a guest by Mrs. Flint, and had since been entertained at different homes, his bright and soldierly appearance making him a social hero. Yesterday he left Mrs. Flint's, saying he was going out for luncheon. The jewels, which consisted of pendants and rings, were not missed for some hours. It is said that he bought a ticket here for Kingston, leaving on the Limited, and that when the train was at Kingston he purchased a ticket from the conductor for Toronto, and when last seen was passing through the Union Station.

Austrian Consulate Concealed Arms

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 7.—Havas despatches from Athens dated Wednesday says that newspaper men were invited to visit Austrian Consulate at Caloniki to inspect one dozen dynamite cartridges and a parcel of unknown explosives and fuses for electric detonators found in the trunk of one of the vervant's of the Consulate. In the same place was previously discovered 180 mauser rifles, 150 revolvers, two thousand Turkish flags, two thousand arm band ornaments with a crescent, fifty Turkish uniform and fifty filled cartridge cases.

Capt. Von Papen Talks Nonsense

(Canadian Press Special)

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 7.—Captain von Papen, formerly military attache to the German Embassy at Washington and whose recall was demanded by the American Government, landed here to-day from the steamer "Noordam." Speaking about the sinking of the British steamer "Persia" he suggested that it might be due to a boiler explosion.

French General Dies From Shock

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 7.—General Serret, who commanded a French division in the Vosges and who was recently wounded, died yesterday from the shock following the amputation of his leg.

C hinese Rebels Loct Customs House

(Caandian Press Special)

CANTON, China, Jan. 7—One hundred men to-day attacked and looted the Chinese customs house on the boundary of Kowloon. Further trouble is expected any time as it is believed the rebels have corrupted the government troops. Christian missionaries have been withdrawn from the interior stations in Chuen province on the borders of Tibet.

ALLIES' POSITION SAFE ON BALKAN PENINSULA

Sir Edward Grey Says Situation in Greece is Quite Satisfactory—150,000 Turks Massed on Greek Frontier in Anticipation of Allied Advance

RUSSIANS KEEP PUSHING TEUTONS BACK

Russian Offensive Gathers Strength—Cut Railway Line—Zone of Operations Extends Northward — Occupy Advantageous Positions—Austrian Defence More Stubborn

Situaton Satisfactory

LONDON, Jan. 6.—"I do not think the Allies have any reason to regard the situation other than satisfactory," was the reply of Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, to a question in the House of Commons to-day regarding the present dplomatic situation in Greece.

Asked if the seizure of Col. H. D. Napier, former British Military Attache at Sofia(and Captain Arthur Wilson from a Greek vessel by a German submarine in the Mediterranean was a breach of neutrality, Sir Edward said that such action was not contrary to the generlly accepted rules of internationl law.

150,000 Turks Massed

Paris, Jan. 6.—9 Turkish army estimated at 150,000 men, under the German Commander, Pertef Pasha, has appeared on the Greek frontier, says a Saloniki despatch to The Paris Temps.

The despatch adds that the report prevails at Saloniki that in the advance on the allies these Turks will attack from the northeast, while the Bulgarians and Germans will march respectively from the north and west.

No direct information has been received that the Central Powers or their allies are contemplating an immediate offensive in Macedonia, but having learned some lessons of preparedness, the British allies have hurriedly completed the fortification of their positions around Saloniki.

Russians Advancing

Petrograd, Jan. 6.—It appears not improbable, according to advices from the front, that the Austro-German forces at the southern extremity of the fighting will be forced back to the line running through Stanislau and of the in the near future, as the result of the advance of the Russians between the upper reaches of the River Stripa and the Roumanian frontier. Already the Austrians are reported to have their base towards Kolomea.

Stubborn Defense

Notwithstanding the fact that the Austrians are fighting more courageously, the Russians, it is declared, have succeeded in taking by storm fortifications around Czernowitz that were recently described in the German press as impregnable. Having cut the railway line from Russians are threatening communication between Czernowitz and Kolomea.

Zone Extends Northward

The zone of the Russian offensive is extending northward, bringing into action the left flank of the central front. From Olitza they have pushed out on the railway line 25 miles to Kevertzi and are reported advancing along the roads in the direction of and close to Lutsk and also between Podeherevitchi and Kostuhova, three miles north of the Kovel-Sarny railway west of the River Styr. These positions are regarded as especially advantageous, being flanked on the right by the Pinsk marshes, precluding a serious menace from that direction.

Recruiting at Rate Of Thousand a Day

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—(Special)—Recruiting returns from all parts of the Dominion continue to show that the extra spurt which began in November is being well maintained. Recruits are now being reported at the rate of about one thousand per day, and new battalions are being authorized almost daily. To-day the Minister of Militia received a letter from a responsible officer offering to raise a battalion from the Assyrian citizens of Canada. The offer is receiving favorable consideration.

W. H. Sharpe, ex-M.P. for Lisgar, Man., has offered to raise a battalion for overseas service. An offer to raise a new battalion has also been received from W. G. Edgecomb, Grand Master of the Orange Grand Lodge of Manitoba.

Capt. Wilfrid Gascon of the Translators' Staff, House of Commons, has offered to raise an Ontario French-Canadian battalion with headquarters at Ottawa. A new French-Canadian battalion is being organized between Ottawa and Montreal by Major Girouard, who has recently returned from the front.

Guelph Hotel in Hands of Bailiff

GUELPH, Jan. 6.—(Special)—The King Edward Hotel, one of the largest hostelries in Guelph, is in the hands of the bailiff to-day, and Mr. Reynolds, the tenant of the premises, alleges that the hours cut off from the bar by reason of the early closing is responsible for the present state of affairs. He states that he has been losing money every day since the new order went into effect a few months ago. Failing to get a reduction in rent, he decided to abandon the premises. At present Bailiff Wm. Young is in possession, but License Inspector James O'Brien, acting on advice received from the Department in Toronto, ordered the bar to be closed.

Ottawa School Trouble Continues

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, Jan. 7.—The trouble continued and reached a crisis at the Guigutes school this morning. The school commission had placed six policemen at the school door to prevent the Misses Desloges and their sympathizers from entering, but with orders not to hurt anybody. While the crowd assailed the policemen at the main door with clubs, lengths of hose, etc., others got in from the basement and attacked the police from the rear. Then when the police on the side doors went to the assistance of their comrades the crowd poured into the deserted entrance and completely filled the school rooms. The police went back to the station and it was announced that the Misses Desloges would be left in charge of their classes until further orders were received from Toronto.

Mr. Charbonneau, the French member of the commission, announced that as there was no prospect of an amicable settlement he would resign, which he did at a meeting later.

Local Doctors to Examine Recruits

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—Special—Instructions have been sent to all recruiting centres to secure the services of local doctors for the examinations of recruits instead of depending upon the services of one doctor for a whole recruiting district. These doctors will be appointed on the recommendation of the Minister of Militia.

Derby Scheme Not For Canada

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, Jan. 7.—General Hughes stated last night that there seemed to be no possibility of the Earl of Derby's recruiting scheme being introduced into Canada.

Canadian Doctor With the Serbs

Describes the Journey From the Interior to Salonica

LONDON, Jan. 5.—How a journey from the interior of Serbia to Salonica, only 200 miles as the crow flies, occupied 45 days, with terrible privations as regards food and shelter, was told to-day by a French-Canadian doctor, Armand Perras, of 542 Dorchester street west, Montreal.

Perras was the fist among the group of Canadian physicians who volunteered for civilian service in Serbia at the request of the Serbian Legation here through the Quebec provincial agency. Reaching Serbia in May, he was appointed medical officer at Sokobania, north of Nish. Being an inland Sea, the town was exempt from the great plague of typhus prevalent elsewhere, but he spent six months vaccinating children and attending wounded soldiers. When the Bulgars attacked Serbia Sokobania was menaced, but Dr. Perras only left the town when the prefect departed. At that time the roar of cannon was heard, only 35 miles away, and daily coming nearer.

40-Mile Walk

Dr. Perras put his little baggage on a military transport, then set out to walk 40 miles to the rail head. The roads were destroyed by the Serbs to prevent the advance of the enemy. A short distance was covered by rail with members of the French Medical Mission, but an encircling movement by the Austrian troops made a detour by road necessary. Dr. Perras started out again alone, and penetrated Albania in order to avoid Uskub when the latter was taken. Then followed days of riding or walking alongside his horse, fording rivers and often walking waist deep in water. All meals or shelter were obtained at premium prices only, the food being mostly bread, raw, onions and even cabbages.

When Dr. Perras finally reached a town on Greek soil, the sight of a restaurant table caused a nervous collapse as a result of his prolonged fast.

Awful Sights

En route Dr. Perras saw many awful sights, such as crowds of famished refugees with families, Austrian prisoners barefooted and ragged, and many fights for food among the peasants. He secured a ship for Marseilles, and thence came overland to London. He reports that of six Canadian doctors who volunteered to go to Serbia, Dr. Brault, of Montreal, went to Egypt, and the others were in Rome, with the exception of Miss Levasseur, of whom he had no news. He had not heard of Dr. Ella Scarlett-Syne, of Vancouver, who sailed for Serbia in August, Dr. Perras has now obtained a commission with the Canadian Medical Servce here.

Father and Five Boys at Front

GUELPH, Jan. 5.—The men of the Wellington battalion are out working on the "catch-my-pa!" scheme, a wrist watch being presented by the Recruiting League at the end of the week to the man securing the most recruits for the 153rd Battalion or the 43rd Battery. Among the thirteen who signed on yesterday is Charles Vince, of Guelph. This makes six recruits from that family, including the father of the boys. Quartermaster Boyd, who has just completed his term as Warden of Wellington county, reported to his headquarters here to-day.

Bedouins Remain Loyal to Britain

CAIRO, Dec. 23.—Bedouins continue to worry the Egyptian Government. Though their actions are not really dangerous, yet they are sufficient to keep alert forces which might be employed elsewhere. Emboldened by the success against the Italians in Tripoli and Cyrenaica, and by foreign gold and Turkish emissaries, the Bedouins have been making frequent raids into Egypt from the Libyan desert.

Great numbers of Bedouins remain indifferent ,even hostile to these attacks, as proved by declarations of several of their chiefs made to "El Abram," an Arab journal. They said: "What our present needs, if not peace, is justice, liberty, and prosperity of the country. What interest have we to help the assailants of Egypt, and the doors of prosperity, formerly open, are now closed through, their own acts? We demand that our Government have confidence in us, that it be convinced that our intentions are good and we codemn our neighbors' acts."

WOMAN'S INSTITUTE SEMI-ANNUAL REPORT

East Belleville Organization Reports Progress During Past Six Months

July 1st, 1915, saw the beginning of a movement which has proved not only a success but has been the means of helping the community of Belleville.

The East Belleville Women's Institute met in May to discuss not only playground work, which has been their charge for the past few years, but also the wisdom of procuring a social service worker covering various sides of community work.

Miss Florence Bradley was the one chosen to carry on this work, and a report of her work, as well as the playground work, follows:

Social Service Work

From July 1st, 1915, to January 1st, 1916, under the supervision of Miss Florence Bradley. Calls made—600 investigation, 90 sick, 100 business, 110 relief.

Young Women's Department

Industrial Night School—Domestic Science, Sewing, Elocution, Millinery, Home Nursing, Physical Culture, Folk Dancing.

Employment secured, 15; Relief work, 200 hours; personal interviews, 110; Prison work, 8 hours; Court work, 15 hours.

Children's Department

250 calls, 50 physically helped, 20 sent to school.

Clothing Department

50 new articles, 25 second hand.

Christmas Relief Department

Assisted in packing 70 baskets. Christmas work centralized and instituted under a united meeting of charities and organizations. This does not cover Miss Bradley's work entirely, as she gave time to Local Option and various other movements.

Playground Work

From July 1st to Sept. 1st, under the supervision of Miss Helena Lynch:

Average morning attendance, 42 children; afternoon attendance, 81 children.

Classes held in pavilion—basketry, weaving, braiding, winding raffia, weaving reeds, picture cards (perforated), preparing budgets weekly for soldiers.

Games on grounds and in pavilion—Boys: football, baseball. Girls: basket ball, captain ball, medicine ball, dodge ball, number ball.

Mixed Exercises: Story telling, folk dancing, singing games, active games, jumping games, quiet games, marching for the little folk.

Playground Picnic (July)—100 children, miscellaneous games and races.

Closing (August)—200 children, bazaar and concert.

The East Belleville Women's Institute officers, under whose auspices the above work is carried on are as follows:

Mrs. R. J. Graham	President
Mrs. W. B. Deacon	Vice President
Mrs. (Dr.) Marshall	Vice-President
Mrs. A. M. Chapman	Secretary
Miss Edith Anning	Treasurer

Miss Florence Bradley was officially appointed Police Officer at the request of the East Belleville Women's Institute. She is the second officially appointed police constable in Canada.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

A NEW FLAG

A new flag has been secured for the flag staff upon the city building, and was this afternoon flung to the breeze.

A CAUCUS HELD

The newly elected aldermen of the city met last night in caucus and it is stated that a satisfactory arrangement as to chairmanships of committees was arranged.

QUIET WEDDING

Albert F. Crippen and Jenny Bridge were quietly married at Moodie Cottage, Belleville, on Thursday by Rev. A. L. Geen.

LOCAL LAWYERS ENGAGED

In the case of Ridley vs. Bly in the trial court, Toronto, before Justice Britton yesterday, a report of which was given in last night's Intelligencer, Messrs. Porter and Carnew appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., appeared for the defendant.

INQUEST RESUMED

At the Police Court room in this city, this evening the inquest to inquire into the circumstances of the death of Mr. Thomas Curry, the G. T. R. section man, who was killed in the railway yard here, will be resumed before coroner Dr. Boyce.

POLICEMAN'S COUSIN DEAD

At Forest Mills, Lennox County, Mr. Patrick Killoran died yesterday, aged 45 years. Deceased recently underwent an operation of a serious nature and was unable to survive, owing to his weakened condition. A year ago he was married. Mr. Killoran was a cousin of police officer Donovan of this city.

A COINCIDENCE

Pte. Frank Houston while in the Hospital at Hastings, England, was playing the piano one day. There were two Red Cross nurses standing near when one of them asked Frank where he came from, and when he answered Tweed, she said why we were from Tweed, and it was the Misses Fern, who lived in Tweed about six year ago. Doubtless many of Tweed people will remember both of these young ladies and we are pleased to see that Frank is being well taken care of. —Tweed News.

SISTER OF CHIEF DEAD

Chief Newton of the Belleville Police Force, last evening received a telegram announcing the death of his sister, Mrs. G. L. Minbinnick, which occurred yesterday afternon at London, Ont. No word of her illness had been received, and the cause of her death is not known. Deceased was about 70 years of age, and was born at Tavistock, Devonshire County, Eng. Upwards of half a century ago in company with her husband, she came to Canada and located in London, where she had since resided. She was a lady esteemed by all who knew her. In addition to the husband 2 sons, J. R., and George Minbinnick of London, survive.

MUSIC & DRAMA

REESE BROS. MINSTRELS

At Griffin's Opera House last evening the Reese Bros. Africander Minstrels gave a performance before a fair and appreciative audience. The musical numbers rendered by the mebers of the company were received with favor, as was the dancing by Lena and George McCoy. The juggling and gun-manipulation by the two Reese brothers was excellent and well merited the applause which was bestowed upon them. The orchestra in connection with the company rendered selections which the audience were not slow to appreciate. Some motion pictures were shown to much advantage. Ralph Tompkins, the one-legged globe trotter, in songs and dancing, was good. The company will repeat the performance this evening.

MARKS BROS.

At Scott's Palace Theatre last night, under the auspices of the XVth Band, R. W. Marks presented May Bell Marks in the title role of "The Marriage of Elizabeth" to a well filled house, and, to put it mildly, gave entire satisfaction. "Lizabeth" Botts was a charming character with a heart that was true to a friend, brave yet tender, and withall a bright and vivacious young lady who easily captivated the audience.

Mildred Bell as Virginia Torrington, ably represented the beautiful character of this misguided girl and quickly won the sympathies of the entire house.

Arthur Hebert, as Hank Torrington, the father of Virginia, deserves special mention, as does also Ed. Hubbard, playing the villian's part of Ted Lloyd.

Arnold Baldwin was the lucky man of the play, and carried his part with honor to himself and to the company.

The entire company fit into their places well and present excellent plays in a first-class manner.

The specialties have been good every night they have played in this city, and there has been no repetitions or stale, worn-out jokes. The company is one that deserves the support of the theatre-going public.

Hotel Fire In Edmonton

(Canadian Press Special)

EDMONTON, Jan. 7.—Firemen last night fought a blaze in the St. Regis Hotel, a three storey wooden building, with the thermometer at 15 below zero. Many of the lodgers escaped in their night clothes, and eight year old Evelyn Johnson, a daughter of a soldier in the 6th Battalion, was suffocated by smoke.

Death of a Former Resident

The death took place at her late residence, West Tiffany street, Guelph, in Tuesday evening of Pheba Denyes, beloved wife of Mr. Wade Britton, in her 85th year. Deceased had been in poor health for some time and her death was not unexpected. She was a former resident of Belleville, but had resided in Guelph with her husband for many years, and was highly respected by all who knew her. Mrs. Britton was born in Thurlow Township, being a daughter of the late Mr. P. Denyes. Deceased was twice married, her first husband being Mr. Barragar. Mrs. W.m Stock of Belleville is a sister of the deceased, and Mr. Philip Denyes of Sidney, a brother.

Embarrassing Hairs Can Be Quickly Removed

(Beauty Culture)

Hairs can be easily banished from the skin by this quick, painless method: Mix into a stiff paste some powdered delatone and water, spread on hairy surface and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and it will be free from hair or blemish. Excepting in very stubborn growths, one application is sufficient. To avoid disappointment, buy the delatone in an original package.

CIVIC IMPROVEMENT LEAGUE FOR CANADA

At a conference held at Ottawa on the 19th November last, under the joint chairmanship of Sir John Willison (Toronto) and the Hon. J. J. Guerin (Montreal), a resolution was passed to the effect that a Civic Imporvement League be formed for Canada.

It was decided to hold a conference for the purpose of launching the League and deciding upon its constitution. This conference will be held at Ottawa, on Thursday, January 20th, following the annual meeting of the Commission of Conservation,. which will be held on January 18 and 19. This conference will be addressed by prominent public men and important matters relating to civic government and future municipal developments in Canada will be discussed. In view of the present and probable after-effects of the war on Canadian municipal life, and on social conditions generally, there are many questions on which it is important to have an interchange of views between representatives of all provnces in the Dominion. These questions affect rural municipalities, as well as cities and towns, and will naturally include those which relate to the apportionment of responsibility between provincial governments and local authorities in regard to such matters as public health, town planning, immigration, unemployment and the expenditure of public funds.

Arrangements are being made to secure for those attending the conference transportation at reduced rates.

IF YOU CAN'T ENLIST

and are anxious to "do your bit," you can relieve the sufferings of the men who are spending this winter in the trenches by sending them Zam-Buk for which they are asking.

Numerous letters from soldiers at the front prove their need of it. In a letter from one of the men to his people he says: "If it is a choice between tobacco and Zam-Buk—send Zam-Buk."

Constant exposure to damp and cold, inevitable in trench life, causes rheumatism, chapped hands, cold cracks, and frost bites. Zam-Buk heals these, and a box of Zam-Buk, which can be easily carried in the pocket, will save a man much unnecessary suffering. Zam-Buk is equally effective for sore hands, caused by trench digging; and an application of Zam-Buk to the feet will prevent foot-soreness and blistering on long marches.

Sold by All druggists, 50c. 3 for $1.25, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Russ Dominate Bukowina City

Captured 1,043 Men Northeast of Czernowitz—Kovel Now Menaced

(Canadian Press Despatches)

PETROGRAD, Jan. 6.—The enormous Russian southern armies are now close to Kovel, Volhynia, an important city by reason of its railway system.

The Austro-Germans, have concentrated in great force to oppose the Russian offensive. Their losses, it is said, have been enormous.

The small number of prisoners taken by the Russians is explained by the ferocious stubbornness of the Hungarian Honvels, who are bearing the brunt of the defence.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—While the fate of Czernowitz is obscured in conflicting reports, it appears evident that the Russians dominate the Bukowina capital. Unofficial despatches from Petrograd state that the Austrians have evacuated the town under pressure from the Russians holding the heights above it, while from Austrian sources the information has been received that Austrian troops have been withdrawn from a portion of the city.

Take 1,043 Prisoners.

The following Russian official communication was issued to-day:

"Northeast of Czerowitz sharp fighting continues. We have taken further hostile positions. The enemy counter-attacks were repulsed by a fire which inflicted huge losses.

"One of our units in this region captured eighteen officers and 1,043 men and four machine guns.

"Western front—South of the Pripet, in the region of Kouksotzkavolia, we repulsed the Germans.

"In the region of the Middle Stripa we have consolidated the positions won. Attempts by the enemy to retake the works he previously lost were repulsed with great enemy losses."

Czernowitz lies in a deep valley. The town itself is not of great strategical value, except for its railroads. Its fall is likely to have greater political than military significance, as an outstanding success by the Russians at this time would be likely to have a far-reaching effect on Roumania.

CONSERVATIVE WINS; SON SUCCEEDS FATHER

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., Jan. 5—The Conservative party's control of the Provincial Government was maintained to-day by the success of Henry D. McLean in a bye-election in the first district of Kings County "Legislative). He was chosen to succeed his father, John McLean, recently appointed to the Senate, by a margin of 216 votes over Lauchlan MacDonald Liberal. Had the Liberal candidate triumphed the Conservative Government would have been reduced to a majority of a single vote, exclusive of the Speaker. The Conservative majority in the last election for this seat was 204.

U. S. Government Buildings Fired

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—A fire was discovered to-night in the State, War and Navy Building, within a stone's throw of the White House. The blaze was checked in time to save papers of untold value.

There were several suspicious circumstances in connection with the fire that has prompted the authorities to authorize a careful enquiry as to the origin. In this building the Secretary of State, the Secretary for War and the Secretary of the Navy make their headquarters, and in it are housed the state and military secrets of the Government.

To-night's fire started in a repair shop in the basement, Navy Department. When smoke was discovered issuing from the repair shop one of the watchmen on duty made an ineffectual attempt to turn in an alarm. He found the fire alarm system was out of order. Entering the repair shop one of the watchmen found two large containers full of gasoline right in the pathway of the flames. The gasoline was removed just in time to prevent ignition.

The Easiest Way To End Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and tace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

VERDICT OF $800,000 AGAINST THE C.P.R.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 5.—J. A. McIlwee & Sons, engineers and tunnel contractors of Denver, to-day received word that the Court of Appeals of the Dominion of Canada has awarded the engineering firm a verdict of $800,000 against the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company. The award was for bonuses earned by McIlwee & Sons in driving a five-mile railroad tunnel through the Selkirk Mountains in British Columbia. It is claimed that the engineering firm was making so much money through the contract that the railroad company cancelled the contract. The engineers sued in the British Columbia Supreme Court for breach of contract and for the bonuses then due. They were awarded $527,000. The Canadian Pacific then appealed the decision, but the Court of Appeals not only upheld the award in favor of McIlwee & Sons, but increased it to $800,000.

The Canadian Pacific has now appealed that award to the British Privy Council.

LINER THESSALONIKI IS NOW A DERELICT

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—The Greek liner Thessaloniki, which has been for more than a week puzzling the nautical world by messages appealing for aid, is now a derelict probably about 360 miles east-south-east of Sandy Hook, and her skipper, Captain Goulandis, and 90 men, the larger part of his crew, are coming this way aboard the Anchor liner Perugia, from Mediterranean ports.

The news of the rescue of the Greek liner's crew came through the Scandinavian-American liner United States, which had sailed far out of her course and lost more than two days trying to succor the Greek skipper and his crew.

Mme. Helene Paderewski Godmothers Polish Dolls For Relief.

MME. HELENE PADEREWSKI.

Of all the relief movements arising out of the war none is more touching than that instituted by the Polish refugees in Paris, who are selling quaint little dolls in behalf of their stricken countrymen. Already many of the quaint little figures have made their appearance in Canada.

Godmothered by Mme. Helene Paderewski, wife of the pianist, these waifs are undoubtedly doing the greatest service to mankind of all the inhabitants of dolldom. Designed by refugee Polish artists and sculptors and dressed by Polish seamstresses who are paid for their work by the fund, these dolls actually incorporate the characteristics and even the expressions of Polish peasants, while their raiment, fashioned of bits of silk, ribbon, satin, and real lace, charmingly typify the quaint costumes worn in every province of Poland. These interesting, droll, wistful little people of all toyland now laid waste in Europe are the only dolls that promise to cross the Atlantic in time for Christmas. The tariff on each one is $5, and they are delighting the hearts of children everywhere while giving food to thousands of hungry Polish children.

This is the 522nd day that the British Empire has been at war with Germany

CONSCRIPTION, BUT NOT FOR IRELAND.

Every loyal British subject, while devoted to the Empire, and desirous of its power and influence among the nations of the world being continued, will regret that conscription has been deemed necessary in Great Britain, and what will be of greater regret is that political exigencies have compelled the Government to exempt Ireland from the operations of the Conscription Act. Why, it may fairly be asked, should there be this exemption? The answer is to be found in the fact that Redmond, the leader of the Home Rule party, has demanded it. It is another victory for Redmond in the line of absolute home rule, proving that Ireland is no longer to be considered and treated as heretofore—one of the trio, England, Ireland and Scotland, acting together in the interests of the Empire.

While home rulers are showing their allegiance to the Empire in volunteering and entering the fight against German, Austrian and Turkish rule, they evidently desire, in doing so, that it is as a unit in the Empire and not otherwise.

That the men of Ulster, and many others should resent this concession, at the demand of Redmond and others of his followers, as an insult and reflection on their loyalty, is no wonder; it was but what was expected, yet at a time like this when the continued existence of the Empire is at stake, the greater are the sacrifices that will have to be made in the curbing of a resentment that under other circumstances would not be tolerated.

Mr. Asquith, when introducing the Conscription Bill, addressed himself to "an analysis of the figures of the Derby report. He "emphasized the fact that during "the Derby campaign nearly 3,000,- "000 men had offered their services. "Even deducting those rejected on "the ground of physical disability, "the total was still in excess of 2,- "500,000. These are wonderful, en- "couraging figures," the Premier "continued. "They ought to con- "vince both our Allies and our en- "emies that the people of this "country have their hearts in the "war." And then made the humiliating confession that the Government took the step of exempting Ireland from the operation of the provisions of the Bill "to avoid opposition from the Irish party leaders."

Mr. Asquith may possibly encounter an opposition to the adoption of the exemption scheme for Ireland much more effective than he contemplated. The prospects are, says the cable, that

> "The Irish sectional issue is considered as likely to prove a troublesome point in carrying the compulsion measure. The Ulster members have adopted a resolution, framed by Sir Edward Carson, denouncing the proposal to omit Ireland as "an insult and humiliation to the loyal and patriotic population and the abandonment of the principle of equality of sacrifice in time of war on the part of all His Majesty's subjects in the United Kingdom."
>
> "The Archbishop of Armagh has written a letter saying that the exclusion of Ireland would be a disgrace to the country and disastrous to Irish regiments.

All this, at a time like the present, is to be regretted. The Government never should have yielded to threats from such men as Dillon et al.

There was one of the Home Rulers who supported the Bill and justified the exemption of Ireland from its provisions on the ground that Ireland is not a part of Great Britain, but only an ally. His language was:

> "I would not consent to strike a "blow at this country, France or Rus- "sia by doing anything which would "wreck this bill."
>
> Mr. O'Brien considered Ireland had a claim for exemption, "because she is "a distinct although necessarily allied "nation."

This is further evidence that Home Rule means an independent Ireland.

THE BI-LINGUAL AGITATION.

This question is still agitating the people—no, not the people of Quebec, but the political mountebanks and others who do not understand the question or deliberately misrepresent it, expecting to profit politically thereby, by stirring up ill feeling between the two races in Ontario. A contemporary puts the question fairly when it says:

> The Government and the people of Ontario have done justly in their dealings with the French people in this Province, and are not to be moved by unreasoning clamor.
>
> Our French fellow citizens have not been persecuted, crushed under the iron heel of a vicious Prussianism, or contemptuously ignored. Their religious opinions have not been the occasion of Governmental oppression. They have the full rights of any English-speaking Roman Catholic. They have all the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the country.
>
> There is no lack of sympathy in Ontario for French people or for the French language. There is a pronounced lack of sympathy for a company of reckless mischief-makers, whose lips drop deceit, and whose capacity for sustained and malevolent mendacity has rarely been approached. These methods are not likely to influence the Ontario Government. If there had been any real grievance on the part of French-Canadians—and that we deny—there could not have been a more opportune time of settling it than at the moment when France and Great Britain were fighting side by side, with a bi-lingual Canada to aid. The public feeling in Ontario towards France was sympathetic and warm.

HOT HEART—COOL TONGUE.

The nearer the crisis the less is said as a general rule. People's feelings are taut and a grim determination to do or die sweeps over them. The American press is saying but little these days. The following short note was the leading editorial in the New York Sun on Tuesday:

> Keep a level head and lock up the vocabulary laboratory. The more serious the situation the less need of impressing its gravity on any mind worth troubling about. The more general the perception of the gravity of events the less occasion for inflammatory parts of speech. These may be platitudes, but they are axioms of common sense. They have worked well in every previous crisis, real or apparent. They have not lost their value now. Nothing is easier than to sizzle in the rhetorical way in advance of twelve of the clock. Therefore, keep the tongue cool, however hot the heart, and shut up the unofficial vocabulary-laboratory. At present let Lansing do the talking.

ANOTHER AMERICAN LOST.

The American Embassy at London has received a report saying that the Rev. Homer R. Salisbury, an American, was a passenger on the Peninsular and Oriental liner Persia, which was sunk in the Mediterranean, but that he was not included among the survivors.

By the time a few more United States citizens are murdered by German and Austrian pirates on the high seas, President Wilson and his Cabinet may wake up to the fact and pronounce in favor of the freedom of the seas to neutrals and act in compliance therewith.

William Jennings Bryan has protested vigorously against the New York state law which compelled him to give testimony in a libel suit in New York in order to avoid contempt proceedings. The habit of being remunerated for his addresses is playing havoc with William.

In the hands of the administration at Washington the case of the Persia is, apparently, going the old stereotyped round of other submarine cases. The President says that he will act as soon as sufficient information has been obtained.

Value of Products.

The value of the production in Canada last year from field crops, forests, mines and fisheries is given in the annual number of The Monetary Times at approximately $1,123,169,535 as compared with $975,390,006 in 1914. The details for the two years are as follows, the figures for 1915 being necessarily to some extent an estimate, but well within the mark:

	1914	1915
Field crops	$638,580,300	$ 788,919,535
Forests	176,672,000	175,000,000
Mines	128,863,075	128,000,000
Fisheries	31,264,631	31,250,000

Villa Will Stay.

Reports of all kinds come in regarding the conduct and policies of Pancho Villa. One day he is pictured as leaving Mexico; the next day we find him fighting on merrily with a large army at his back.

Villa has been under a cloud of late because Carranza has been receiving the recognition of many foreign governments as President of Mexico. On the head of this a goodly part of Villa's army, showing what seemed to be keen political sagacity, deserted Villa and joined the forces of his prospering rival. Shortly afterwards came those reports of Villa's departure from his native land, with tears in his eyes and a heart embittered by an unsuccessful fight for the people against the trusts.

Villa has not left Mexico, and he is not likely to do any such thing. His profession is robbery, and there is still a good living for an expert bandit in that unhappy country.

The plains and hills are wide, and Mexico's growth in education has not been so rapid that a smooth talker with guns in both hands cannot convince the peons that an army led by himself will not turn Mexico City over to them in about a month's time.

Democratic Government in Mexico still demands its Villas. One army more or less makes no difference.—Montreal Mail.

The Poets' Corner

The Hair-Cut Man.

A long way off there came in sight
A pole with stripes of red and white.
So like a candy-stick it stood,
You'd almost think it tasted good.
We walked inside and found him there:
The barber-man who cut my hair.

And there are bottles on a shelf,
And chairs so big you lose yourself,
And picture-papers hung on poles,
And painted cups in cubbyholes,
And lots of looking-glasses, too,
That show you different kinds of you.

The shiny shears went "peck-a-peck,"
As cold as ice about my neck.
When Mother told him "That's enough,"
He fizzed my head with smelly stuff,
And helped me down; and everywhere
About me lay my old dead hair.

And oh, when everything was through,
I felt so clean, and cool, and new!
And I was bought a red balloon,
And smelled so fine all afternoon.
If I could only have my way,
I'd get my hair cut every day!

A WONDROUS LAND

The Yellowstone Region as James Bridger Saw It.

AND HE WAS A TRUTHFUL MAN

His Adventure With an Elk at the Famous Obsidian Cliff and the Effect of a Ride Through Alum Creek—Story of the Mountain That Was Cursed.

As a teller of tales Munchausen had a worthy rival in James Bridger, the celebrated hunter, trader and guide, whose name and career are part of the pioneer history of the west. Bridger was thoroughly familiar with the region now comprised in the Yellowstone park as far back as 1830.

In his book, "The Yellowstone Park," the author, Hiram Martin Chittenden, brigadier general United States army, retired, sets down some of the yarns Bridger told about that land of wonders. Many of the Yellowstone country tales ascribed to Bridger have survived to this day, probably because they have never been capped. The first story General Chittenden tells relates to the celebrated Obsidian cliff, a mass of black volcanic glass with which all the tourists are familiar. Its discovery by Bridger was the result of a hunting trip, and it happened in this way:

"Coming one day in sight of a magnificent elk, he took careful aim at the unsuspecting animal and fired. To his amazement the elk not only was not wounded, but seemed not to have heard the noise of the rifle. Bridger drew considerably nearer and gave the elk the benefit of his most deliberate aim, but with the same result as before. A third and fourth effort met with similar fate. Utterly exasperated, he seized his rifle by the barrel, resolved to use it as a club, since it had failed as a firearm. Rushing madly toward the elk, he suddenly crashed into an immovable vertical wall which proved to be a mountain of perfectly transparent glass, on the farther side of which, still in peaceful security, the elk was quietly grazing.

"Stranger still, the mountain was not only of pure glass, but was a perfect telescope lens, and, whereas the elk seemed but a few yards off, it was in reality twenty-five miles away."

Another of Bridger's discoveries was an ice cold spring near the summit of a lofty mountain, the water from which flowed down over a long, smooth slope, where it acquired such velocity that it was boiling hot when it reached the bottom. This, a later investigator of the Firehole river found, was a case in which a hot spring discharged into the river bed.

Alum creek, a tributary of the Yellowstone, received its name from an accidental discovery by Bridger. One day he forded the creek and rode out several miles and back. He noticed that the return journey was only a small fraction of the distance going and that his horse's feet had shrunk to mere points which sank into the solid ground so that the animal could scarcely hobble along. Seeking the cause, he found it to be in the astringent qualities of the water, which was saturated with alum to such an extent that it had power to pucker distance itself.

Bridger also found a fine place to fish: "Somewhere along the shore an immense boiling spring discharges its overflow directly into the lake. The specific gravity of the water is less than that of the lake, owing to the expansive action of heat, and it floats in a stratum of three or four feet thick upon the cold water underneath. When Bridger was in need of fish it was to this place that he went. Through the hot upper stratum he let fall his bait to the subjacent habitable zone and, having hooked his victim, cooked him on the way out!"

The visitor to the region of petrifications in the northeast corner of the park and to various points in the hot springs districts will have no difficulty in discovering the base material out of which Bridger contrived the following picturesque yarn:

"A mountain in the park was once cursed by a great medicine man of the Crow nation. Everything on the mountain at the time of this dire event became instantly petrified and has remained so ever since. All forms of life are standing about in stone where they were suddenly caught by the petrifying influences, even as the inhabitants of ancient Pompeii were surprised by the ashes of Vesuvius. Sagebrush, grass, prairie fowls, antelopes, elks and bears may there be seen as perfect as in actual life. Dashing torrents and the spray mist from them stand forth in arrested motion as if carved from rock by a sculptor's chisel. Even flowers are blooming in colors of crystal, and birds soar with wings spread in motionless flight, while the air floats with music and perfumes siliceous, and the sun and moon shine with petrified light!" It is denied, though, that Baidger was responsible for the story that even the laws of gravitation were petrified in the region.

Uncontrollable Curiosity.

"I don't see how it is that Mrs. Jorwag has so many friends. She gossips terribly."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "Everybody seems willing to take a chance on being talked about for the sake of hearing what she says about the others."

A negro truck driver backed his wagon into the space allotted to a rival transfer concern at a railway freight depot in Dallas, Tex. "Hey, dar, niggah!" yelled the driver on whose territory the other had transgressed. "I'll knock yo' outa yo' house an' home ef yo' don't back up!"

"I's got no home," retorted the offending driver. "Now, whut yo' gonno do 'bout dat?"

Marriage Not a Profession.

Marriage cannot be classed with anything but itself. It is [illegible] age and nothing else—a wonder[illegible]cture of experiences and duties on [illegible]y different planes. So far as its spiritual demands go, it may ask of a woman, as of a man, all she has in her, or it may not. So far as its material demands go, it may require everything or nothing. It may of necessity fill her life or leave it empty. To call it a profession is to blur its meaning, for it is much more than this and much less.—Elizabeth Woodbridge in Atlantic Monthly.

Honored.

Clayborn, an old negro coachman of a southern physician, was talking to another negro one day about the price of a ticket to Jacksonville. "Ah don't know nothin' 'bout tickets," said Clayborn. "My boss never has no tickets for his travelin'." "Is dat so?" asked his friend. "Why don't he have no tickets?" "'Cause de railroad is jes' proud ter tote him!" exclaimed the loyal Clayborn.

Coal Enough For Thousands of Years.

The results of the investigation of the world's coal resources by the international geological congress show that there is a reserve of unmined coal estimated at 7,398,561,000,000 tons, of which two-thirds are situated in North America between the Rocky mountains and the Appalachians. As the present annual consumption is about 1,300,000,000 tons, there is enough coal in sight to last nearly 6,000 years at the present rate of consumption, and it must be remembered that South America and Africa are still largely unexplored.

A Hibernating Fish.

A remarkable fish known as Protopterus annectens is found throughout the whole of tropical Africa, but is most common near the West Coast, where it sometimes attains a length of six feet. During the dry season, when many of the ponds dry up, the fish descends some distance into the mud and forms a rounded hollow for a nest, which is lined by a capsule of hardened mucus secreted by the glands of the skin. It hibernates thus for nearly six months, drawing its sustenance from the fat secreted when it is active.

Lightning Strategy.

"Too many strategists," said a military officer, "jump to conclusions. They are too hasty. They begin a new movement before the old one is finished; hence all manner of errors.

"These strategists are like the floorwalker whom a married man, having got separated from his wife in the crowd, approached and said:

"'Excuse me, but I've lost my wife'—

"'Coffins,' said the floorwalker, 'ninth floor, back. Gents' mourning, eleventh floor, front.'"

The Squire's Pretty Daughter (examining the village school)—Now, children, can you tell me what a miracle is?

The children looked at one another, but remained silent.

"Can no one answer this question?" the new curate asked, who was standing behind the squire's daughter.

A little girl was suddenly struck with a brilliant idea. She held up her hand excitedly.

"Well, Nellie?" the squire's daughter asked, smiling approvingly.

"Please, miss," the small child replied breathlessly, "mother says 'twill be a miracle if you don't marry the new curate."—London Globe.

A House In the Air.

In 1863 a balloon of 200,000 cubic feet capacity was constructed at Paris. It was named the Giant and was intended to show the great possibilities of the air. The car attached consisted of a small two story house fitted with every modern comfort, lavatories, dining room, bedroom, kitchen, parlor, etc. Thirteen passengers made the first ascent, but the journey was of only four hours' duration. The last ascent was for seventeen hours and was abruptly terminated by a high wind, which, when the balloon descended, dragged the little house bumping over the ground. The remains of this giant of the air was for a long time exhibited in the Crystal palace in London.

GOOD DEEDS.

In man's mad strife for wealth and luxury it were well to remember these words from the Koran: "When a man dies they who survive him ask 'what property he has left behind. The angel who bends over the dying man asks what good deeds he has sent before him."

A TRIM SUIT.

A Rather Striking Effect in Black and White Check.

A SMART TROTTEUR.

Except for the choker and cuffs of sealskin and a row of black novelty buttons, which stop at the waist line, this neat suit is devoid of trimming. The woolen is of the best quality, and both the skirt and the coat's peplum have a marked flare. Please note how patent leather boots and the black satin toque with its natty little brush accentuate the dark note of the sealskin.

ANOTHER PARTY FROCK.

THE TEN-YEAR-OLD.

Sage green crepe de chine is used for this pretty gown. The skirt is corded to simulate a miniature hoopskirt and finished around the bottom with walls of Troy instead of the conventional scallops. The blouse falls over more walls of Troy and is finished with a tasseled tie. Finest cream colored embroidery affords the turnover collar and V shaped chemisette, and the butterfly bow on the child's Dutch cut hair is wide cream satin ribbon.

Beware of Rust.

THE IRONICAL CABBY

The cabby regarded the broken-down taxi with a gleam of delight, but did not speak. The chauffeur began operations on his machine. He turned and twisted it, and banged it, and screwed it, but to no avail, and still the cabby spoke not. Then the chauffeur wiped his brow, and the cabby, still with the gleam in his eye, crossed over. "Ere!" he exclaimed grimly, holding out his whip. "'Ere yer are, mister, 'it 'im with this!"

Have The Intelligencer Sent to Your Home Address

My Convict

By JOHN Y. LARNED

I was running my auto leisurely along a road in the country and slowed up even from that pace to turn a sharp bend in the road when suddenly a heavy weight dropped from an overhanging branch into my car directly behind me. Turning, I saw a man in convict stripes rising to his feet.

"Put on full speed," he said in a tone to indicate that he would be obeyed.

I did not see that he possessed any weapon with which to enforce his demands, but it was evident that he was an escaped jailbird and as such was likely to be desperate. As soon as I had turned the bend I obeyed his order, my speed gauge registering forty miles an hour. The man climbed over the back of the seat and sat down beside me. The road before me needed all my attention, but I took time to glance aside at him. Now that he was fleeing at so rapid a gait his whole expression was changed. Despite his stripes, I saw in him a man of refinement. He met my gaze with an honest look and said:

"My friend, if you knew that instead of defeating justice you are trying to undo a frightful act of injustice you would be better satisfied. I have been the victim of a conspiracy to defraud a bank of which I was cashier and was sent to the penitentiary for ten years. My noble wife sent me surreptitiously saws, with which I effected my escape. My object is to get out of the country, send for her and our children and begin life anew."

While he was making this brief statement I kept one eye on the road and the other on him. I doubt if any man can lie to me and impress me that he is speaking the truth. I did not know that the man was sincere, but I felt his sincerity. Knowledge may be defective; intuition, at least with me, is perfect.

"There is nothing," I replied, "that would give me greater satisfaction than to enable you to carry out your purpose. Where shall I take you?"

"First you must throw my pursuers off my track. They are not far behind."

"Get back there and cover yourself up to the chin with the wraps."

He did so, and his stripes were concealed, but he was bareheaded. I gave him my cap. Seeing a man ahead of me wearing a common woolen hat, I stopped long enough to buy it, giving him three times its value. Then, entering upon a long stretch of comparatively straight and level road, I put on the balance of my power, making fifty miles an hour.

"Do you know anything of the pursuit?" I asked.

"Only that my flight must have been discovered long ago."

"We must have another suit of clothes," was my next remark. "We shall have to stop and buy one."

My passenger gave me some idea of the sizes he had worn before his incarceration, and at the first opportunity I bought him the necessary outfit. He spoke of paying me for them some day, but I told him what I would require would be his vindication or, at least, a surety that he was what he purported to be. He managed to change his clothes under the wraps and, crossing a bridge, threw his stripes into water flowing rapidly. After this I decreased my speed somewhat, for I believed that with the start and advantage we possessed my man would not be retaken, at least for some time.

Passing through a town where I had business acquaintances, I procured funds and supplied him with what he would require. Then, stopping at a railway station, I secured a time table showing trains for New York and, by taking a longer route than the rails, put him on a train without his being obliged to wait at a station.

Meanwhile he had given me the address of his wife and asked me to call upon her to receive confirmation of his story. When he parted from me his efforts to express his gratitude overcame him, and he could say nothing. All he could do was to look it.

As soon as he had left me I began to realize my position in having aided a convict to make good his escape, and it was then that doubts began to trouble me. I did not go to see his wife for a considerable time after he and I parted, fearing that she might be watched and my visit would put the authorities on to my infringement of the law. I saw in the newspapers notices of the escape from prison of a bank embezzler, and after the stir had quieted down I made the call.

Some time after my call I received a letter written with great caution from the convict, mailed at an inland city of South America. He was paving the way to send for his wife and children, which would be a difficult matter without putting the authorities on his track.

His plan was never carried out, for one of the conspirators who had ruined him was brought to trial for certain irregularities, and the facts of the other matter came out. The convict's wife applied for a new trial for her husband, but by this time the whole matter was patent. Instead of a new trial it was decided to apply for a pardon. This, after much delay, was granted, and the pardoned man returned to his home.

I had the satisfaction of giving the reunited family a ride in the very auto that had made good the father's escape.

NOT TO BLAME

"What do you mean by coming in here with that tyre all cut to ribbons?" shouted the enraged owner of the sixty-horse-power racing car.

"Truth Dexter"

By

CHAPTER XXVI—Continued

Mrs. Dexter was not listening. She was deliberately taking in the neat beauty of the grounds, and the air of well-being that now hung over everything. A heavy sigh burst from her lips, even while she smiled to see the trim fruit-trees, and the geometric rows of vegetables, with borders of rose-bushes and violets. A red-bird darted past the group, and perching himself on the very tip of a bare fig tree, began to sing. Moses, the mule, lifted his shaggy head over a fence, and neighed approvingly; the laughter of piccaninnies came from the direction of the kitchen. Mrs. Dexter turned to her old servant, with eyes that were bright and soft. "You have done well, Noah. I thank you!"

"I lubs de ole place, Miss Dolly."

"I know that, old friend. Only love gives care like this. But there is another place,—a plot of ground, not so large, but dearer"— Her voice broke, and she looked beyond the group, out to a farther hill where, in a little clearing of sentinel pines, the sunshine and the Colonel lay asleep.

Noah's old face began to twitch spasmodically; he made two husky efforts to speak before he broke out,—

"No nigger touched dat place! No nigger but ole Norah! De purtiest flowers, de whites' pebbles, de greenest gras,—dese ole hands toted dem one by one."

"I saw it all, Norah. I know what every pebble has meant to your stiff old limbs. Such works as this, only love can give, and love repay."

She held out her hand. Her face was very beautiful. The old negro took the frail fingers in his, and for a moment made as if he would bend his lips to it, as he had so often seen Old Marster do. But no! His lips were too coarse and thick for that! He laid the hand back gently, against Mrs. Dexter's sombre skirt.

"Oh, Misses! Misses!" he sobbed. "I ain't nothin' but a no'-count ole black nigger,—but I—loved him too!"

He shuffled away, giving now and again stentorian blasts of emotion on his red bandana pocket-handkerchief. Mrs. Dexter's lips were trembling, but Truth wept openly, with sweet unrestraint, like a little child.

"Dear old black—angel!" she sobbed. "I wouldn't give one strand of his woolly head for every Beacon street millionaire in Boston!"

CHAPTER XXVII.

Secrets Revealed

If Mrs. Dexter knew that Truth had been in the South for a week without writing to her husband or receiving a letter from him, she did not betray the knowledge. Boston papers had come regularly, various magazines addressed in Norton's hand, and one letter from Mrs. Adams, but none from Craighead.

The post-office of Dexterville was merely one corner of the general "store." The daily mail arrived about five; and it was noticeable how often Truth found occasion to pass, or to visit the store at that hour.

The first enchantment of home-coming was over. The old garden and the forest remained dear indeed, but, after all, there can be but one "first" to anything. Mrs. Dexter had returned to her old routine as a flower to its sheath. Truth began to realize how little Boston and its culture could mean to a soul whose very life sprang from another soil and another age.

"She'll never be happy up North long at a time," thought, and sighed deeply. In another moment she was taking herself to task. "Why am I sighing?" she demanded. "I'm never going back myself, in all probability. This is where I shall be all the rest of my life."

She looked around her as one who has waked in a new, strange place. The old home was the same as ever, but some intangible essence was gone from it,—or from her. The stiff, dark, old-fashioned furniture seemed to mock her,—it was a visible expression of that wornout past to which she and her grandmother belonged. She walked languidly to a window to see whether the rain might have stopped. No it was still coming down in tiny gray parallel strokes, relentless as the deep cut lines on an engraver's plate. She gave another great sigh.

Mrs. Dexter heard, smiled slyly to herself, and then asked kindly, "What's the matter, dearie?"

"Nothing!" was the comprehensive answer.

The old lady smiled again, and returned placidly to the darning of an embroidered pillow-sham that had made one of her own wedding outfit.

Both ladies had been sitting, most of the morning, in Mrs. Dexter's large, cheerful bedroom. A low fire of pine knots made a presence in the wide chimney-place, and served, as Mrs. Dexter would have expressed it, "to frighten off the chill." This was the room where Mrs. Dexter had lain so desperately ill, where Truth's marriage had taken place. The window through which the rooster had peered stood open now, as then. Truth had tried to occupy herself in a dozen different ways,—sewing, reading, playing on the jingling piano, helping Aunt Big Mary in the kitchen, beginning letters to Mrs. Adams,—but after each new failure to fix her own interest she would stroll back to where Mrs. Dexter sat. The placid content evident in the elder lady was, for some reason, distinctly irritating to the younger; but anything was better than being off to one's self, thinking. Mrs. Dexter's conversation ran, as usual, in the groves of long ago.

"Just look at this drawn-work!" she now remarked, holding a bit against the gray light that they both might gaze and admire. "You don't see this kind of work nowadays. Sewing-machines and factories have vulgarized everything."

Truth turned her sombre eyes from the window a moment, but said nothing.

"Yes," continued Mrs. Dexter as if a reply had been forthcoming, "I would as soon think of wearing a negro's head-handkerchief as a piece of imitation lace; yet everybody seemed to use it in Boston."

"There's the train!" said Truth, irrelevantly, but with more animation than she had yet shown. "I wonder if there's any mail!"

"They wouldn't be apt to send it up from the store such an afternoon," said Mrs. Dexter, tranquilly. "Norah can step down before breakfast in the morning."

"But I want the papers! I think I'll give Nickey two-bits to go after them."

"You will spoil that child. He is not used to tips," smiled Mrs. Dexter, then dismissed the subject from her mind and began to fold away, with elaborate care, the precious bits of mending.

The little negro was despatched, and came back with several magazines and papers.

"No letters?" asked Truth.

"None. Not er one!"

"Are you sure? Sometimes Mr. Calvert leaves them in the bottom of the bag."

"Sure!" protested Nickey. "I seen him shake de bag top-side down, myself."

"Well, I'm sorry, but it can't be helped, I reckon. Here's your two-bits."

"I don't want no pay, Miss Troof!" said Nickey, gallantly. "I don't, sho' nuff. Don't gib me dat two-bits!" His voice was sincere, but all the time his little black, claw-like hand was held palm-upward within easy reach of the coveted coin.

Truth laughed as she gave him the prize. "That's all right, Nickey! You earned it."

"No letters, mummie! But here are some Boston papers. Shall I read you the news?"

"Hadn't we better wait till after tea, when things are quieted down? It's on the table now."

"Yes, I s'pose we'd better," assented Truth, doubtfully, "though to me it seems that we never do anything down here but eat, and go to bed, and get up again."

Half an hour later tea was at an end, the Big House closed for the night, servants in their own quarters, and Truth was beginning, for the second time, to read the news.

She took up the "Sunday Herald" first. "Big Freeze in Boston. Damage to the Public Garden." She lowered the paper to address her grandmother. "Just listen at that!" she cried triumphantly; "and we about to eat strawberries off our own beds!"

She turned the pages swiftly, skimming as she went. "Fire in Dorchester." "Progress on the Subway. Great Charity Bazaar at Faneuil Hall. Sudden death of prominent Bostonian—Thomas Courtney Wiley!" The paper and Truth's hand fell together.

"Why, that was an acquaintance of Van's, wasn't he?" asked Mrs. Dexter amiably, but without lifting her eyes from her knitting.

Truth tried to reply, but her throat was paralyzed.

Then Mrs. Dexter looked up, gave a little cry, dropped yarn and needles, and hurried to Truth's side.

"Truth; Truth, dear! What is the matter? Are you sick? Did you see any bad news in the paper?"

The open sheet had slid to the floor. Truth's horror-stricken eyes were fastened upon it, and she pointed:—"That's what I saw. That! He'll marry her now! He loves her!"

"Who'll marry who? What do you mean,—are you crazy?"

"It's Van,—Van! Didn't you know he loved Mrs. Wiley? He never loved me! He hates me!"

Mrs. Dexter pressed her hand tightly against her heart. Truth went on wildly: "I was goin' to tell you everything,—I promised him I would,—but I hadn't got the courage yet. This changes everything! There is no hope. I've left him. He's goin' to give me up. And now he'll marry her!"

CANADIAN NORTHERN ALL THE WAY

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent my be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

Past Year Record One in Dairying

Eastern Ontario Association Convention at Renfrew—Keen Interest Shown

RENFREW, Jan. 6.—The thirty-ninth annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association opened here to-day, the President, Mr. J. A. Sanderson of Oxford Station, in the chair. Renfrew citizens, he said, were justly proud of the progressiveness of their town,, and of the distinction of being the creamery town of the Province. He predicted that in the near future this would be one of the leading dairying districts of eastern Ontario.

The past year Mr. Sanderson termed a record one in all branches of the dairying industry, this being especially true of the cheese business. A keener interest than ever before has been shown by all concerned in district dairy meetings, herd improvement work, the work of the district representatives and the annual factory meetings. The comparison carried on during the season between sound, well-cooled milk and ordinary milk was bound to produce the best results.

In the output of dairy products, as compared with 1914, there was a decrease in butter of 200,000 pounds, but the selling price was between 2 cents and 3 cents per pound higher, so the net returns would be about the same. The production of cheese showed an increase of about 15 per cent., while the average price was higher, being a fraction over 15 cents. This increase in production, together with the increase in value of about $3,250,000 for the six months from May 1 to November 1.

Mr. Sandersone congratulated th dairymen on the success of their efforts for greater production, and on the patriotism shown by dairymen throughout Ontario in their splendid response to the different patriotic funds.

Want Hydro in Eastern Ontario

Mayor-elect Rochester, in an address of welcome, expressed regret that Sir Sam Beck is not giving the farmers and others of eastern Ontario the same Hydro-electric advantages which are being secured in different parts of western Ontario.

About 100 dairymen were present at the opening session, there were more at the afternoon session, while at the evening meeting the attendance was 500, inclusive of several ladies.

Individual Merit the Watchwood

Mr. C. F. Whitelay of the Dairy missioner's staff, Ottawa, spoke on the importance of cow testing, and urged dairymen not to look for a high average of milk in their herds, but rather to make individual merit the watchword.

Importance of Crop Rotation

Prof. J. H. Grisdale, Director of the Experimental Farm, said he had lately travelled from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back, and had never before seen crops so good in all parts of Canada. This, he held, could be repeated every year in the Dominion by proper crop rotation. "We could guarantee to this eastern part of Canada," he declared, "such an era of property as it has never before seen in the whole Dominion if everyone would set to work to produce all he could raise by a proper rotation of crops and follow it up." Referring to the building up of herds, he thought that farmers could more safely buy a pure-bred bull and start to gradually work upward than jump at once into the pure-bred line.

An address on "Farm Management" was to have been given by Mr. A. Leitch, B.S.A., of Guelph, but Mr. Leitch sent a telegram saying that illness prevented his coming. A telegram of regret was also received from Hon. T. W. McGarry, who said pressure of public business held him in Toronto.

Hon. Senator Derbyshire was Chairman at the citizens' meeting in the evening, when Mr. A. A. Wright ex-M.P., a local authority on dairying, spoke upon the progress of dairying.

Mr. A. MacLaren of the O. A. C., Guelph, delivered an address on "Community Building and Community Builders," in which the principle of co-operation was extolled.

New Dairying Possibilities

"New Possibilities in Dairying" was the subject of an address by Mr. Wilfrid Sadler, B.S.A., of Macdonald College, who pointed out that in recent years, while Canada's population has been increasing and an increase in the amount of milk produced has taken place, there has been a decline in the export of butter and cheese. This he attributed to a growing home consumption, and he thought that an excellent opening now exists in Canada for the manufacture and sale of clotted cream and small cheeses.

WHY SUFFER WITH BACKACHE, KIDNEYS OR RHEUMATISM NOW?

Letter Tells of Long-looked-for Prescription.

Dear Readers—If I can do any good in the world for others, I wish to do it, and I feel that it is my duty to write about the wonderful results I received from the use of "Anuric." I was suffering from kidney and bladder troubles, scalding urine, backache and rheumatism, and feet and ankles swelled so that at times I could not walk without assistance. Had taken several different kinds of kidney remedies but all failed. I sent for a box of Dr. Pierce's newest discovery, "Anuric," which I received by mail in tablet form. I soon got better and am convinced that this popular new medicine is good. I wish to recommend it to my neighbors and everybody suffering from such troubles.

MRS. M. J. SARGENT.

NOTE: You've all undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. Pierce and his well-known medicines. Well, this prescription is one that has been successfully used for many years by the physicians and specialists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney complaints, and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine, and urinary troubles.

Up to this time, "Anuric" has not been on sale to the public, but by the persuasion of many patients and the increased demand for this wonderful healing Tablet, Doctor Pierce has finally decided to put it into the stores, or send 10 cents for large trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

Simply ask for Doctor Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic and reconstructor for any one, besides being the best blood-maker known.

Dr. Simpson is Not a Fugitive

Winnipeg Surgeon is Quite Ready to Meet Charge—Out on Bail

(Canadian Associated Cable)

LONDON, Jan. 6.—In Bow Street Police Court Robert Mills Simpson, aged 48, Surgeon Lieut.-Col. of the Canadian Medicals, appeared on a warrant under the fugitive offenders act, charged with stealing $100,000 belonging to "the King in the right of the Province of Manitoba." Accused was arrested at Folkestone upon his arrival from France last week, and when the warrant was read to him, remarked: "This is quite a political matter."

The Magistrate said that depositions had not yet been received from Canada and ordered a further remand of a week. Walter Frampton defended, and applied for bail, pointing out that although the accused had been proceeded against as a fugitive offender, he could not under any circumstances be considered a fugitive from justice. For twenty-five years he had held a very high position in Winnipeg where he practised in partnership with two well-known surgeons and was Chairman of the Provincial Board of Health and President of the Winnipeg Conservative Association. He had joined the Canadian forces in September, 1914, as a Medical Officer and came here in May, proceeding to France. He had been promoted from Lieutenant to Colonel, and had been performing as many as twenty or thirty operations daily on soldiers in France.

Scotland Yard Gets Him.

He was told on December 23 to return to this country. No suggestion of any charge was made against him, but upon landing at Folkestone he was arrested by Inspector Lawrence of Scotland Yard. He was at a loss to know how the charge of conspiring with a number of prominent citizens in Canada had arisen. He had no details of the charge, and could only assume it had some connection with his position in the Conservative party. There was no question of escaping if he was allowed bail, even if such a thing was possible at the present period. He was very anxious to meet the charge, and a number of Prominent Canadians were prepared to testify as to his public and military duties. A substantial sum would be deposited as bail.

The Magistrate questioned why the matter of the defendant's return to Canada had not been left with the military authorities, as he was still under their jurisdiction. He offered to allow bail in one surety of £500.

Dr. Ingilis, Wininpeg, of the Canadian forces, who was subsequently invalided, offered as surety this amount, but as he was not a householder here his bail was not accepted. It was stated that bail would be forthcoming hed this happened later in the day.

Manitoba House Is In Session

WINNIPEG, Jan. 6.—The first session of the 15th legislature of Manitoba was opened this afternoon by the Lieut.-Governor Sir Douglas Cameron, with the usual ceremonies. The Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne was moved by Colonel George Clingan, member for Virden, and seconded by George T. Armstrong, Manitou. It is expected that J. B. Baird, member for Mountain, will be the new Speaker.

Legislation to be proposed will include women suffrage, a prohibition plebiscite, school law amendments and other important matters.

The legislature will have to deal with a heavy programme of legislation, including measures for woman suffrage, prohibition, direct legislation, compulsory education, and the modification of the school law. Strong pressure, it is reported, has been brought to bear on the Government to abolish the bi-lingutl clause. In Government circles it is believed this will be done, a clause recognizing the special rights of the French language being substituted.

The famous Coldwell Amendments are to be repealed. There will be a bill appointing a Civil Service Commission, and it is thought likely the House will be asked to deal with the question of reorganizing the University of Manitoba. This and other important provincial questions will probably be referred to a select committee of the House.'

On the question of prohibition, the Government has pledged itself to pass the MacDonald Act of 1902, and submit it to a referendum vote of the people. The referendum bill, which has been printed, provides that a simple majority of the votes cast will carry prohibition.

Whether or not the women will vote on the prohibition referendum has not been decided. They are to be enfranchised at this session, in accordance with the Government's pledge; but the Government intends to take the referendum in March, and there would not be time to prepare a women's voters' list. It has been suggested that the women should be allowed to vote by declaration.

HARD COLDS

CAUSE WEAK LUNGS, BELLE..VILLE DRUGGIST SUGESTS A RELIABLE REMEDY,

We have a constitutional remedy for hard colds and weak lungs which we guarantee. Such letters as this prove its efficiency:—

Wickatunk, N.J., "I suffered from weak lungs, pains in my chest and very short of breath. I am an agent for the C. P. R. of New Jersey. I had a very bad cough and lost fifteen pounds in weight and my trouble interferred with my occupation so that I had to stop work last July. I had doctored for sometime without benefit, but when I learned of Vinol through a friend I decided to try it, and soon commenced to improve My cough has gone, the soreness from my chest disappeared, I am working again and have regained the fifteen pounds in flesh which I lost." Victor Walden, Wickatunk, N.J.

The reason Vinol is superior to any other remedy is because it contains in deliciously palatable form the healing, body-building and strengthening elements of fresh cod livers, tonic iron and beef peptone—the oldest and most famous tonics known to medicine. Try it on our guarantee.—J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

Self-Contained Empire.

In her next war Great Britain intends to be practically independent of the United States for food and munitions, says a Washington writer. Work has already been begun by experts of the British Government on plans for the building up in the various British colonies of munition works, and for the intensification and extension of farming.

It is understood that Great Britain is not overlooking the possibility of not being able to use the United States as a source of supplies. In addition, if she could purchase all her supplies and munitions at home and in her colonies, the ability to make loans from her own people would be greatly increased. The reported difficulty of disposing of the recent $500,000,000 Anglo-French loan in this country has shown England the necessity of being economically independent.

It is understood that plans are being prepared for the erection of extensive munition plants in Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. In addition several of the British Colonial Governments some time ago sent out agricultural experts to study European methods.

AS WE GROW OLDER

our minds are quite as active as in former years but our strength does not respond when we need it most; perhaps the kidneys are weak, the liver torpid, rheumatic pains or stiffened joints beset us, and we cannot easily throw off the colds that winter brings.

What we need is the rich cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion to renew the blood and carry strength to every organ of the boby, while its glycerine soothes the respiratory tract, and its hypophosphites strenghthen the excitable nerves.

Scott's Emulsion is a scientific oil-food, of unusual benefit to those past fifty years—particularly during the colder seasons, it imparts warmth and creates strength. One bottle will prove its worth. No harmful drugs.

LOST IN A GLACIER.

Fate of a Prospector Who Slipped Into a Crevasse In Alaska.

"In the winter of 1898-9," said Robert C. Losey, "I was one of a party of prospectors in Alaska. We were crossing the Rampart mountains, in central Alaska, on the way to Quail creek, from which locality had come reports of a great gold find. A member of another party near us, in going over the mountains, had broken through a crust of sand and gone down into the crevasse of a glacier.

"He had gone down a distance of thirty-eight or forty feet, where he had lodged. We could not see him, but we heard him and we talked with him. We tried to reach him with a rope and finally tied a pick to the end of the rope, hoping to bring him out. He asked us to quit pulling on the rope; that we were making his position worse. He finally pleaded with us, his voice growing fainter and fainter, to go away and leave him.

"He evidently was freezing, not, as we have heard, a painful death, and he did not want to be bothered. He gave us his name; said he was fifty-four years old and told us to notify his folks at some town in Missouri. We stayed there until we could hear his voice no longer.

"He certainly made a record of being the coolest man, and then he froze to death."

NAVAL ENGINEERS

Obscure Heroes of the Warships When a Battle Rages.

BOTTLED UP BELOW DECKS.

They Get None of the Glory and the Fine Thrill of Combat, but Just a Little Harder Work Than Usual. Perils of the Officers and Stokers.

There is a man in the navy who is too often forgotten, even by the authorities, when they are "dishing out" rewards and praise for successful operations at sea, and that man is the man who makes the wheels go round inside the ship.

If the wheels stop then the modern warship lies on the water like an armed tin can, waiting for some one to sail round it, plug it full of holes and sink it.

A fighting ship, to put up any sort of battle at all, must be able to get on with it at the rate of knots, as the sailors say when they mean at high speed, and the men who make that possible are the engineers and the stokers. The engineer officers are highly skilled scientists, with no use for the fear of death.

The stoker, far below the waterline, shovels coal, and he gathers there is a battle on, when there is, by the fact that he has to work twice as hard as he thought he could, and by the infernal racket made by the guns, and by the projectiles of the enemy, which have found a new home aboard the ship.

He has none of the glory and the fine thrill of battle—only an increase in his ordinary work.

He works by lamplight to keep steam up, and he knows there has been a victory when some one tells him, unless he happens to be working in his "spare" time at the ammunition hoists near the roaring guns.

Even now in many ships and once in all the engineer officers and their men are shut down in their working place, and they cannot get out, for it is necessary for them to so be closed up. It is not, of course, necessary to keep them there to make them do their work, but because the ships' engines run under forced draft, and the only way to get that is to batten down the stokeholds.

They become, in fact, part of the pipe, if one can call it that, along which the air is pumped to the fires to make them burn more fiercely, just as one bucks up the kitchen range with the bellows. If the hatches leading to the upper decks were open the air would be pumped out through them and would not pass through the white hot furnaces.

If she is torpedoed and sinks suddenly down go the engineers and the stokers without the chance of swimming for it as the others have when the order "Each man for himself!" is given by the executive officer in charge of the vessel.

In the case of the oil driven warships there is not, it need hardly be said, that added risk for the engine room staff. There is no need to shut them down, and in case of sinking they have no further risk than that entailed by the time taken for the order to get down to them and for them to get up on deck. They are, however, the people most likely to go to fragments when a torpedo comes knocking on the ship's side, or, rather, down among her foundations.

And there are steam pipes filled with scalding and sudden death, flooding the engine room in an instant with biting, blinding, searing fog, somewhere above boiling point, for high pressure steam is hotter stuff than comes out of the spout of a kettle. A shell through the main steam pipes, and goodby to those who are near the damage.

The engineer officer knows all this and often has seen some of the things that can happen taking place on a small but significant scale. While the gunners get the glory he watches the wheels go round, listens not to the scream of the shells or the hammer strokes of projectiles on armor plate, but to the telltale songs of the complex mechanisms over which he presides with the coolness of a naval officer, the skill of a man of science and the tenderness of a Red Cross nurse.

Every moment may be the last moment the life in his body has, but he must not think of that.

Down there in the bowels of the fighting ship he must keep his mind clear to think of a thousand details, and he must do it without any of the exhilaration that comes from watching the effect of the guns on the enemy's ships.

He never sees a shot go home; he never sees an enemy's flag pulled down in defeat.

He sees only his engines and the men tending them.

If all goes well and the enemy runs or strikes the engineer commander hears all about it at mess. If things go wrong he feels it quite unmistakably in his person.

Get one unlucky shot into the engine room and it is up to him, so long as volition is left to him, to put that thing right, and he must not draw fires until there is not another thing he can do first. In battle so long as there is a dog's chance to do so he must keep steam up, for steam is the breath of life to the ship, and he must take risks when he is making repairs that would give the landsman spasms.—London Answers.

GOLDEN WEDDING OF INTEREST TO MANY PEOPLE OF BELLEVILLE

Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Snell, of Toronto, Celebrate Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary—Belleville People Present

On the first day of January, 1916, about fifty relatives representing Belleville, Galt, Elora, Harriston, Ottawa, and Toronto, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Snell, Glendale avenue, Toronto, for the purpose of celebrating their golden wedding anniversary. Mr. Snell was born in Belleville and for some years was a resident of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Snell were residents of Galt for many years, the latter having spent her girlhood days there. Owing to a death in the near relationship the celebration was of a very quiet character. However, the congratulations extended were hearty and sincere, and letters were received from many friends too far away to make the trip to the home of the happy and honored couple.

Before partaking of a splendid repast, Mr. John Allison, of Galt, read an address, and Miss Florence Snell of Belleville, made the presentation of the purse of gold, and other gifts, suitable for the occasion, of a useful and valuable nature. Mr. Snell made a feeling reply and thanked his friends for their good wishes and kindness, wishing them all a happy and prosperous New Year. Following is the address:—

Dear Uncle and Auntie:—

Fifty years have come and gone since two young and very inexperienced people, on January 1st, 1866, took the very important matrimonial step for better or worse. That it proved for the better was soon shown for by being industrious and careful you soon acquired a substantial interest in the community. In church and social circles you were always very active, and in the family circle, a very present help in times of trouble.

We remember with pleasure how, for nearly forty years, on the first of January in every year, on the first of Januay in every year, you threw open your house to your friends and treated them with generous hospitality. There was nothing too good for them and when after your removal to Toronto your house seemed to be the mecca for all your friends from North, South, East and West, all were received with open arms.

Will you kindly accept this purse of gold to buy some comforts for your declining years. That you may be long spared to one another is the sincere wish of your many friends.

Signed on behalf of your friends,
John Snell, Belleville ....
Thos. Allison, Galt,
Mary Grills, Galt.

Among those present were: Thos. Grills, Harriston; Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Snell, Mrs. Brian Myers, Miss Florence Snell, Belleville; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Mighton, Mr. and Mrs. W. Richardson, Mrs. Walter Main, Elora; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Leslie, Mrs Gerrie, Capt and Mrs. W. M. Alderson, Miss Alderson, Mrs. N. L. Alderson, Mrs Holmes, Mr. Clark, Miss W. Warburton, Mrs. Warburton, Toronto; Mr. Lincoln Ingall, Mr. and Mrs. W. Grills, Mr. and Mrs. John Allison, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Allison, Mrs. John Grills, Mrs. Wm. Grills, Miss Audrey Grills, Mr. Thos. GERMAN WARSHIP CAPTURED IN 10 MINUTES

LONDON, Jan. 5—The German armed steamer Kingani surrendered on December 26 to the British naval expedition on Lake Tanganyika, in Central Africa, it was announced in an official statement to-night.

"The action lasted ten minutes," adds the statement. "All the German officers were killed and the steamer, despite its sinking condition, was brought into port."

REASONS TO AVOID RECRUITING OFFICER

Under the caption "Why Canadians Should Not Fight," Mr. Oliver Hezzelwood says:

There has been so much said lately about enlisting Canadians that I venture to offer o few suggestions why young men should avoid enlistment:

(1) Self-preservation is the first law of nature. Snakes, skunks, wolves, flies, toads and all kinds of animal life seem by instinct to avoid voluntarily exposing themselves in places of known danger. Why should not young Canadians follow their example and act upon this law?

(2) Is not the female of our species already superseding man in many avocations? Is it not necessary for the young men to hang right on to their jobs and if any one really should go and fight, and it looks as though they should, why not enlist a few battalions of young ladies, so as not to disturb the equilibrium? Could not a healthy young lady learn trench warfare as quickly as she could fit herself to run a lathe, work on a farm or take charge of a set of books? In the final analysis, is it not more logical to have an army of women than to have an army of sissy men?

(3) The United States are not fighting, but are making money out of the war. Why should they get the financial plums and we get only glory and self-respect? What young man would not rather stay in Canada and go to the "high kick" performance than to win a Victoria Cross and die, or, even if he win and live, he cannot eat a V.C.

(4) The world's liberties may be at stake, but why worry about it? Humanity soon gets used to slavery, so it is said. If the Germans come over and do all our organizing, governing, tax collecting, etc., we will be saved a lot of trouble and elections. We will not need to think for ourselves and serious thought is a great bore to many young men. Some of cur "Cigarette fiends" might collapse if they have to think seriously.

(5) Who would be left to go to hockey matches, Saturday afternoon matinees and tango trots if all the young men enlist?

(6) Why should a healthy, robust young man with a future full of glowing possibilities go and fight for the children, the aged and the unfit? Soldiers of former wars may have had the Calvary vision, but the German professors claim to have knocked that doctrine into a cocked hat.

Oliver Hazzelwood.

THE REAL ISSUE IN THE MANUFACTURERS--SUN LIFE DEAL

The One Point Before the Policyholders

The real question before the participating policyholders of the Manufacturers Life in the proposed deal with the Sun is quite clear and simple. Will it pay them to transfer their insurance to the Sun under the proposed arrangement?

The Facts of the Case

The answer is equally clear and simple. The change unquestionably will pay them. The average dividends paid to Manufacturers policies in the past have been only about 65 per cent. of those paid to similar policies in the Sun. Under the proposed arrangement the Sun guarantees that these dividends on Manufacturers policies will immediately be increased to 80 per cent. of Sun Life dividend and in three or four years will be the full 100 per cent. In addition the policyholders, both participating and non-participating, will have the financial protection of a company much larger and relatively more powerful than their own. That is the elementary and common-sense view of the deal.

Toronto's Civic Pride

In Toronto, however, the issue is being clouded by sentimental objections. Toronto business men do not like one of the city's leading financial institutions to disappear and its power transferred to Montreal. Toronto people are naturally proud of their city, as a financial centre, and rather jealous of Montreal's record. But that is clearly an objection which can have little weight with the great majority of Manufacturers policyholders. Only a small proportion of them live in Toronto. The majority of them live in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and the other provinces and in South Africa, England, the West Indies and the East. It does not matter to them whether the head office of their insurance company is Toronto, Montreal or Timbuctoo as long as their insurance is sound. Probably self interest and civic pride will clash in the case of those Manufacturers policyholders who do not reside in Toronto. But past experience of amalgamations rather suggests that even they will prefer the bigger dividends on their policies, for it is seldom wise to allow sentimental considerations to influence one's judgment of any financial proposition.

Not Manufacturers' Policyholders

As a matter of fact the leading people objecting to the deal, are not Manufacturers' policyholders at all. They are ordinary citizens very keenly interested in maintaining Toronto's position as a financial centre. But it is clear that they have no standing in this matter, which concerns the Manufacturers' policyholders alone.

The Argument of Undue Rivalry

Another argument which rather clouds the issue—and in no way affects Manufacturers' policyholders—is that if the deal goes through the Sun will possess assets of $95,000,000. Consequently it will have a preponderating and undue influence with the public compared to the other Canadian life companies. I think, however, that this is a misapprehension of what is likely to happen. If the merger goes through the results will be the same as in every other similar merger I know of. The Sun Life will not then obtain as much new business as both the Sun Life and the Manufacturers did before. The Manufacturers connection certainly will increase the Sun Life's new business considerably. But there must of necessity be a big reduction in the total new business of the two companies in pre-merger days. In other words there will be more business left for the other Canadian companies and that is, in my opinion, a considerable advantage to those companies.

The Rank and File do not Worry

Here again the objections of other companies to the deal are sentimental rather than practical. I can quite understand that some of the Big Canadian companies are naturally jealous of the growing power of the Sun. They naturally do not like to see the Sun Life which, a few years ago, was on a level with themselves, as regards size, suddenly shoot ahead and become a giant because of several amalgamations it has recently accomplished. But the excellent rank and file of our smaller Canadian life companies, which give the public terms second to none, and after all constitute the real strength of Canadian life insurance, are not worrying about the deal because they appreciate that it cannot affect them adversely. They always have had to compete with the big companies. I rather think they prefer one big competitor where two previously existed. It gives them a better chance.

by ten in the morning the force of the enemy was spent. Soon their shattered remnants began to trickle back, leaving a track of corpses behind them. By night, except for prisoners or wounded, no live Turk was left upon our side of the slope."

Turk Tricks New

The remainder of the story consists largely of misfortunes. General Hamilton states that the Turkish methods were new to the inexperienced commanders. On the 15th General Stopford was relieved of his command of his division corps. General De Lisle succeeded him.

The accounts of the suffering of the soldiers from lack of water are graphic. An enormous quantity was serelly collected at Anzac, where a huge reservoir was built. Oil tins with a capacity of 80,000 gallons were collected and fitted with handles, but an accident to a steamer delayed part of the supply at the time of landing.

Dificult Task

An important feature of the document is the description of the joint army and navy plans for probably the most difficult and complicated operations ever attempted on so large a scale. It was impossible to concentrate a third of the fresh troops to be launched in an attack on Suvla and Anzac withn the confines of the British-held grounc. Part of the forces were at Imbros, part at Mudrose, part at Mytelene, respectively 14 miles, 60 miles and 120 miles to appear simultaneously with munitions, stores, animals, vehicles, and(particularly water.

Farewell

In conclusion, General Hamilton bids an eloquent farewell to his comrades.

"PUTTING ONE OVER" WATERTOWN STANDARD

Cape Vincent Man "Strings" Watertown, N. Y., People on Aviation School Story

WATERTOWN, N.Y., Jan. 6.—The Standard says:

Activities of the aviators at the training school of the aeroplane corps of the Canadian army located at Kingston have been responsible for the scare which northern New Yorkers received from "hostile airships." R. J. J. Newman, a well-known resident of Cape Vincent, who was in the city today, explained that officers of the Canadian aeroplane corps admitted to him the other day that the scare had probably arisen from trial flights made by aviators in training at the school.

According to these officers, the pupils who are receiving instruction in the art of aviation at the Kingston school before being sent to the front in France, are required, as a part of their training, to make trial flights of many miles. Although the officers do not encourage their men to fly over American territory, several of the men have reported that in the darkness have lost their bearings and flew over into the United States.

For several weeks past Canadian military aeroplanes have hovered at high altitudes over Barriefield near Kingston. To residents of Cape Vincent, Mr. Newman explained, they appeared to be directly over that village so high were they in the air. This has occurred both during the day and night.

The Canadian aviators received several weeks' training in Kingston before being sent to the front. They are instructed in high altitude flying, flying over bodies of water, and in fact everything that they might be confronted with in Europe.

Surely Mr. Newman was "putting one over" on the Watertown scribes, for there is no aviation school at Kingston. No aeroplane has operated around here since the 3rd of June, 1914, when a celebration was held—Kingston Whig.

AUSTRIAN STRIKERS BURN EAST YOUNGSTOWN

Million Dollar Fire Destroys City—National Guard Arrive on Scene and Quell Riot

Million Dollar Fire

(Canadian Press Special)

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, Jan. 8.—With three regiments of Ohio national guard patrolling the smouldering ruins of East Youngstown, or encamped in the steel mills nearby, the authorities to-day expressed the belief that temporarily at least, an end has been put to the wild scenes of rioting and looting which marked last night, and left the thriving little city a mass of embers. One life is known to have been lost, ten blocks of the town, including the entire business section, were burned, and several thousand people were driven from their homes. The loss is placed at at least one million dollars.

Physicians estimate the number of wounded at one hundred, although only fifteen had been brought to the hospitals.

A Wild Mob

The troops did not arrive until daybreak, and the mob had full control, looting stores, pillaging saloons and drinking whiskey from barrels placed on the streets; setting fires at will and terrorizing the small police force. The citizens of Youngstown were fearful that the disorder would spread to the Main town and that nothing could save it from destruction. Later in the evening, however, a dozen citizens led by Oscar Disert, city solicitor of East Youngstown, gathered at the police station, and implored the police and other officials to attack the rioters. By midnight a force of forty armed men was collected, which immediately took control of the situation and drove the mob before them. By two o'clock one hundred rioters, all armed and mostly drunk, had been brought to the city prison; others were in Mahoning county jail and the East Youngstown station was filled. The remainder of the mob had fled out of sight. The streets thus cleared, the fire department had its opportunity, but all that was left for them to do was to turn the water on the burning ruins.

6,000 Strikers

(Canadian Press Despatch)

EAST YOUNGSTOWN, O., Jan. 7—Three persons are dead and 18 others wounded, three mortally, as the result of a riot here to-night. Six thousand striking steel workers, mostly Austrians, are pillaging and looting the city. Six entire blocks have been burned, with a loss estimated at $800,000, and the fire is now beyond control. The rioters have stolen 500 pounds of dynamite and have already blown up several buildings.

CANADA'S GREAT HALF BILLION WAR BUDGET

Sir Thomas White's Third War Budget Calls for Expenditure of $500,000,000—Increase of $200,000,000 Over Last Year's Budget—One Long to be Remembered

GERMANS AIM TO ISOLATE BRITAIN IN WAR

Plan to Sign Separate Treaties of Peace With France and Russia and Continue War with Britain—Practically Admit Defeat—Trying to Bluff

OTTAWA, Jan. 7.—The budget which Sir Thomas White will present at the approaching session will be his third war budget. In all probability it will call for an expenditure for the war and for the ordinary business of government of about $500,000,000. It will, therefore, be remembered for many years as the Dominion's great war budget of 1916. Last year's budget called for a total expenditure of $300,000,000, of which, however, only $100,000,000 was for the war. This year the proportions will be reversed and the greater patt of the budget will be for the prosecution of the war.

A year ago the authorized forced to be raised for overseas service totalled only 100,000. At present 220,000 are under arms and a total of 500,000 is authorized. The estimated expenditure for a force of 250,000 men had been put at $235,000,000. The prospect of a much larger force will necessitate the increasing of this sum to a very considerable extent. Although no official intimation has been given, the total of $500,000,000 for the war and domestic purposes seems likely to fall quite within the mark.

PARIS, Jan. 7.—A radical chance in the German strategy which has already begun to take effect in the Balkans, and which involves the first official admission of a breakdown in the campaign against France and Russia is foreshadowed by reports reaching Paris from Switzerland, which are credited in well-posted quarters here.

Western Deadlock Complete

Prince Hohenlohe recently told a Swiss friend that his Emperior's war plans were now bent in a direction totally different from that toward which he had looked in the beginning of the war. He believes that the deadlock on the western front is complete, and has finally acknowledged that what his army could not do in 1915 against France it is unlikely to do in 1916.

Useless to Fight Russians

As regards the eastern front his plans for a renewed anti-Russian offensive early in the spring have been dropped because, with the dwindling of effectives opposing Russia's swelling man-power, Germany's chances of a decisive triumph are not great enough to justify the carnage a new onslaught against the Muscovites would entail. Such an offensive was put beyond the range of possibility when the Franco-British expeditionary forces got safely within the Saloniki lines, and the French Premier, M. Briand, swung the British round to the policy of using the port as the starting point for an ultimate Balkan offensive.

Premier Briand's policy commits Germany to the eastern drive more completely than the Kaiser had hoped.

War Council in Berlin

A war council attended by the leading men of the Empire is reported to have been held in Berlin during the turn of the year, and is said to have weighed all the possibilities of the situation and to have decided in favor of the Kaiser's newest plan, which consists in a supreme attempt at bluffing France and Russia into the belief that Germany is the possessor of tremendous latent strength sufficient to intimidate them into an acceptance of a peace which would leave the impression that both countries had emerged honorably from the trial of arms.

Tear Up London Pact

"The pact of London would thus be torn up," says Prince Hohenlohe, who is now at Geneva, "and the Kaiser would be free to act with Turkey in the Balkans, in Asiatic Turkey, Persia and Egypt without danger of Roumanian intervention against him. The Teuton and Ottoman hordes would sweep over the Suez Canal, hurl the British from Mesopotamia and advance across Persia. This triple menace to India would force eluding the acceptance of the German pretension to free seas in war time."

COLOR STUDY BEFORE WOMEN'S CANADIAN CLUB

Prof. A. L. Clark, of Queens University, Kingston, Gives Excellent Address Before Local Organization on Colors and Color Photography

In the lecture room of the High school last evening the members of the members of the Women"s Canadian Club were given a highly interesting and instructed lecture on "Colour phenomena and photography in nature colours," accompanied by a number of illustrations, by Prof. A. L. Clark, of Queen's University, Kingston.

Prof. Clark dealt very lucidly on the subject, showing why we see the different colours and know the difference between red and blue. While we see only one colour, physiologists see many different colours but the light waves absorb the most particular colour and carries it to the nerves in the eyes, which in turn tell what that colour is to the mind. Colour is formed by subtraction and by addition. This was illustrated by lantern slides to which different colours were placed and it was shown that by the light rays substracting a little colour from the red, blue and yellow discs, other colours were formed.

Photography in natural colours, three different processes could be used First, by placing red, yellow and blue coloured plates between the lense of the camera and the negative, so that when the negative is exposed the light goes through the different coloured plates and each particular colour is absorbed by them and exposed on the negative in their natural colors. A second process is by placing a screen made up of a number of small indistinguishable red, blue, green and violet lines and placed before the negative as in the first process. A third process is by coloring fine particles of starch, three different colours—and red, green and blue. These are scattered over the glass plate and then shaken off so that only one layer of the coloured starch is on the plate, appears almost white. A layer of bromide silver is then spread over the starch. When the negative is exposed the light passes through the glass, through the coloured starch and then the colour of the object is exposed on the bromide silver.

In conclusion Prof. Clark stated that the color of the object is due to the light reflected from it.

A vote of thanks was moved by Miss McKay and seconded by Miss Libby and the meeting closed with the singing of the "National Anthem."

KAISER HAS CANCER; LARYNX REMOVED

BALTIMORE, Jan. 7.—Kaiser Wilhelm has a cancer. The exact nature of his illness, while well known to the Imperial physicians, has been made clear for the first time in this country by a prominent specialist of this city to-day. The specialist explained he had procured his information from Dr. James J. West, a former Baltimorean, and now eminent in Berlin medical circles.

Two years ago there was considerable talk of the Kaiser being in poor health, and that an operation would be necessary. The Imperial physicians then reported the Kaiser had improved and that an operation would not be necessary. It is now known that the Kaiser is having the entire larynx removed and this will mean loss of speech.

FARMER KILLED BY "THE RIDEAU" TRAIN

KEMPTVILLE, Ont., Jan. 7—Lawrence Johnson, a prosperous farmer, about forty-five years of age, of Oxford Mills, was instantly killed last night by the new C.P.R. train, "The Rideau," at 8.30, when driving home on the main road between here and Oxford Mills. The C.P.R. Toronto to Montreal tracks cross this road about two miles west of the town, but the approach is an exceedingly dangerous one, the road crossing with a slight bend and a small hill hiding any view of eastbound trains until one is actually on the track.

The horse was killed at once, the rig smashed to kindling wood and the deceased badly cut up. This is the fifth person killed at the crossing since the road was built.

British Sub's Daring Feat

LONDON, Jan. 8.—An Athens despatch to The Chronicle says: According to a telegram from Constantinople a British submarine succeeded in making its way from the Sea of Marmora into the Golden Horn and attacked the arsenal, which is situated on the Para (or European quarter) side of the Horn. The submarine caused considerable damage. It appearance created a panic among the workmen and the inhabitants of the arsenal quarter.

The above is the second feat of its kind during the war. It was officially announced some months ago that a British submarine had attacked ships at the wharves in Constantinople, and had also fired at a powder magazine in the city.

New Munitions Company Formed

OTTAWA, Jan. 7.—A new five million-dollar munitions company, with headquarters in Toronto, has been federally incorporated under the name of Canada Nitro Products, Limited. It is authorized to manufacture ammunition and explosives of all kinds. The incorporators are nominally given as clerks in a Toronto legal office.

The Wm. Wrigley, Jun., Company, of Toronto, chewing gum and confectionery manufacturers, has been federally incorporated with a capital stock of two million dollars.

Cobourg Girl Hangs Herself

Suspended to a rope, tied to a rafter, the lifeless body of Miss Lilly Quackenbush, was found in a barn on Mr. O. Johns' farm farm near the House of Refuge, Cobourg, on Friday about 12.30 noon. The deceased was last seen alive about 11 o'clock and was apparently in good spirits, according to her aunt, Mrs. Johns, with whom she made her home. She was about 27 years of age. Corner Ferris was immediately notified but did not consider an inquest necessary. The family are unable to account for the unfortunate girl's rash act.

PUNISHMENT FOR AVOIDING CONSCRIPTION

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The text of the Military Service Bill was made public today. The publication shows that the only provision of the measure not amply outlined in Premier Asquith's speech regarding it is one for a penalty of imprisonment not exceeding six months for persons making false statements in order to obtain exemption certificates, and a fine of £50 for failure to notify the authorities should there be a change in the circumstances upon which the certificate was granted.

CORRESPONDENT FLAYS GENERAL HAMILTON

Ashmead Bartlett, Officially Credited British War Correspondent at Dardanelles, Calls Expedition Monumental Fiasco

WHOLE BRITISH EMPIRE STANDS AGHAST

Fears That if Parents Become Aware of What Happened There Might be Trouble—Excuses General Stopford and Blames Sir Ian Hamilton

TERMINUS

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—"On the grave of Erasmus W. Basle is written the significant word 'Terminus.' Is it not time that the same word is written over the career and writings of Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton?"

This was the comment of Ellis Ashmead Bartlett, the noted war correspondent, who was the officially credited British correspondent in the Dardanelles, in summing up a critical analysis of Gen. Hamilton's report on the Dardanelles operations.

Foolhardy Expedition

"A foolhardy expedition headed by woefully weak officers—the monumental fiasco of history," was another comment used by Ashmead Bartlett. He was an eyewitness to practically all the principal operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

Britain Stands Aghast

"The British Empire stands aghast at what Gen. Hamilton's report reveals," he said. "I am unable to conceive the extent of public feeling should the mothers and fathers who sacrificed their sons become fully aware of what happened at Gallipoli."

"The Gallipoli campaign failed because it ought never to have been undertaken under such conditions and in such a country," said Ashmead Bertlett.

"Troops were sent to attack positions which no General acquainted with modern warfare would have attempted to attack. Sir Ian Hamilton's attempt to make out that his strategical plan almost succeeded is absolute nonsense.

Sir Ian to Blame

"Sir Ian Hamilton may hope to deceive the general public. But he cannot hope to deceive those who were on the spot and know.

"He may try and put the blame on Gen. Stopford, but the real burden of responsibility rests upon hs own shoulders and on those of his Chief of Staff.

Condemns Himself

"Sir Ian Hamilton stands condemned out of his own mouth. He states that in the middle of August the Turks had 110,000 bayonets available and that we had 95,000. He then claims that if Lord Kitchener had sent him 50,000 more men he would have brought the campaign to a successful conclusion.

"As a matter of fact all he could have done was to bring the 50,000 men to a successful conclusion.

PORT HOPE, Jan. 7.—Henry Sing, who for a number of years conducted a stationery business here and later filled the office of Bailiff, died very suddenly last night while talking to his wife and family. He had been down the street about an hour previously, and made no complaint of feeling unwell. He was 75 years of age and leaves a wife, three daughters and one son.

200 Drowned: Ship Hit Mine

PARIS, Jan 7.—(Special)—The Montenegrin Consulate tonight issued a statement to the effect that an Italian steamer Brindisi, with 425 Montenegrin recruits from the United States and several hundred tons of foodstuffs, ran on to a mine yesterday near San Juan de Medua and was sunk. Two hundred of the passengers perished.

ANOTHER PROOF OF BARBARIANISM

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, Jan. 8.—A fishing vessel has reached the Port of Anzio with a lifeboat from the sunken steamer Ancona. The boat has several shell holes which had been stopped with shawls and torn skirts. Hairpins were also found in the boat, bearing out the statement that the boat containing women passengers was shelled by the submarine.

16-Year-Old Girl Is Kidnapped

LEAMINGTON, Ont., Jan. 7.—The mysterious disappearance of Effie, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fox of Blytheswood, is creating a good deal of excitement throughout the country and around her home.

She came to Leamington the Thursday before New Year's to bring her grandmother, Mrs. John Jeffery, a New Year's gift, and pay her a visit. Not finding anyone at the Jeffery home, she went to the home of Mr. E. Judd, where she spent Thursday night.

The next afternoon she was seen on Talbot street by an acquaintance, and immediately disappeared, and she has not been seen since.

The first intimation of the girl's disappearance came to her father in the form of a note on Saturday, which had been posted at Windsor, and reads as follows: "I was forced into this position at the point of a revolver by a woman. We stay here for a few days and then sail for England. They are afraid of submarines, but they say I will be all right." The note bore her signature.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON CANIFTON ROAD CROSSING

Mr. Charles Wellman Killed and His Wife Seriously, if Not Fatally Injured—Struck by Fast East Bound Grand Trunk Train

An accident resulting in the death of a man and the possible fatal injuries to his wife occurred between the hours of 12 o'clock noon and 1 o'clock this afternoon at the Grand Trunk Railway crossing, Canifton Road, in this city.

The victim of the unfortunate affair was Mr. Charles Wellman, a yeoman, who resides upon Mr. George I. Thomas' farm in the Township of Thurlow, about two miles north of the limits of the City of Belleville.

It appears that Mr. Wellman and his wife were in the city this morning, and having transacted their business were proceeding to their home when the unfortunate affair occurred. Mr. Wellman was driving a team attached to a sleigh, and as he drove up to the Canifton Road crossing of the G.T.R. evidently did not hear or see the fast express approaching from the west, which is due at Belleville station at 12.10, but which was a few minutes late. The horses succeeded in clearing the rails of the approaching train, but the sleigh was struck by the engine, resulting in injuries to Mr. Wellman which caused his demise in a few minutes. He was frightfully injured about the head, the wound he received being such as to expose the brain. Mrs. Wellman was thrown from the vehicle and sustained injuries which may prove fatal. Her back was injured, her hips terribly bruised, and she was also hurt about the head and arms. The unfortunate woman was as soon as possible conveyed to the hospital, where at a later hour this afternoon she was reported to be resting as well as could be expected, but her condition is such that at present it is impossible to state what the result will be.

Mr. Wellman was conveyed to the G. T. R. station, but died enroute, and the body was subsequently taken to Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment.

The victim of the accident was a man between 45 and 50 years of age, and was much respected by all who knew him. A family survives.

An inquest to inquire into the circumstances of the accident will be held at 7.30 this evening before Coroner Dr. Boyce.

PROBATE GRANTED

In the Surrogate Court of the County of Hastings, a probate of the will of the late J. W. Young of the Township of Sidney has been granted to Selden Ketcheson as sole executor. Mikel, Stewart & Baalim, solicitors for executor.

DIED IN THE WEST

Last evening the remains of the late Mr. J. G. Allison, who died at Calgary, arrived here and were taken to the home of relatives at Deseronto. Deceased was about 70 years of age, and leaves a wife and five daughters. He was for many years a resident of Hasting's County, but of late years had resided in the West.

NURSES FOR EGYPT

Miss Grace Waters, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Waters of Belleville, and Miss Stella Jenkins, daughter of the late Mr. John Jenkins of this city, who are trained nurses and been for some time in Utica, N.Y., arrived here last evening. After passing their examinations at Kingston it is their intention of going to Cairo, Egypt, as nurses.

STOLE A WATCH

A young man named Arthur Patterson was yesterday before Judge Deroche charged with the theft of a watch from Mr. Roy Vancott of Ameliasburg, Prince Edward County, with whom he was working for some time. The accused pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 6 months in the Provincial Reformatory. The watch was disposed of by Patterson, but was subsequently recovered. The accused some time ago served 3 months in the county jail for the theft of a bicycle.

OBSEQUIES POSTPONED

Owing to the fact that a son of the late Mrs. Gillum, who died in this city, being unable to reach here today, the funeral of deceased has been postponed until Monday morning.

TAKEN TO KINGSTON

Frank Prentice, who was this morning sentenced to serve a term of 3 years in the penitentiary, was at noon to-day taken to that penal institution to serve out his sentence.

CALL FOR POLICE

Last evening the police answered a call to a place of amusement, where it was alleged some boys were making considerable noise. All was quiet when the officer arrived upon the scene.

THE MARKET

There was a fair attendance upon the market this morning and excellent prices were obtained for all produce offered for sale. Dressed poultry, whilst plentiful, sold readily at good prices. Chickens sold at from $1.25 to $1.75 per pair, according to size and quality; geese $2 each; ducks $1.50 and $2.00 per pair, and turkeys from $2.50 to $4. Butter sold readily at 33c. to 35c. per pound, and fresh eggs at 38c. and 40c. per dozen. Potatoes were scarce and realized a good price, namely $1.75 to $1.90 per bag.

FATHER, MOTHER AND BABE DEAD

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wright was broken up in a tragic manner by the death of Mrs. Wright and baby on Friday, Dec. 31st, and of Mr. Wright on Monday, January 2nd. Mr. and Mrs. Wright both died as a result of an attack of pneumonia, and the baby was only a few days old. A family of five young children survive and they will be taken care of by relatives of the deceased. Mrs. Wright and the baby were buried on Sunday morning, services being conducted by Rev. W. H. Clarke, who also conducted the service for Mr. Wright on Tuesday afternoon. All were interred in Marmora cemetery.—Marmora Herald.

MASONIC FUNERAL

Under the auspices of the Masonic Society, of which deceased was a prominent member, the funeral of the late Mr. Wm. Webster, ex-collector of customs, took place yesterday afternoon from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. J. T. Sargeant, Sidney Township. A number of the members of the craft and friends were present to pay the last tribute of respect to one who in life was esteemed by all who knew him. At the house services were conducted by Rev. A. S. Kerr, pastor of St. Andrew's church, Belleville, and Rev. Dr. Blagrave, rector of Christ Church, assisted. The burial services of the Masonic Order were conducted by Bro. H. W. Ackerman. A number of beautiful floral tributes were placed upon the casket. Interment took place at Belleville cemetery. The bearers were Masons, namely, Bros. A. R. Walker, F. D. Diamond, H. J. Clarke, Col. S. Stewart, Wm. Alford and C. J. Symons.

TRIO SENTENCED

William Clarke, Frank Prentice and George White, a trio who were arrested some days ago on a charge of breaking into and stealing a quantity of cigars from the Royal Hotel at Marmora village, this morning appeared before Judge Deroche. The culprits acknowledged their guilt and sentenced was imposed upon them. Prentice was sentenced to the penitentiary for 3 years, Clarke to two years less one day in the Provincial Reformatory, and White to one year in the Provincial Reformatory.

Prentice, who received the greater sentence is apparently an old offender. Some three years ago, under the name of Brady, he was convicted of burglarizing Mr. Shorey's store at Canifton, and at Belleville was sentenced to 3 years in the penitentiary. A few months ago he was liberated and evidently again reverted to his old crime of thieving. The trio are comparatively all young men.

LAID AT REST

THOMAS CURRY

Yesterday the remains of the late Mr. Thomas Curry, a sectionman, who met an untimely death in the G. T. R. yards here; were interred in the Belleville cemetery. At the family residence, Cemetery street, Rev. H. S. Osborne, pastor of Bridge street Methodist church, conducted services and officated at the interment. Many floral tributes were placed upon the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. G. Clarke, T. Logan, C. Smith, W. Mossman, S. Hill and H. Dougherty.

MRS. R. ROBLIN

A number were in attendance at the obsequies of the late Mrs. Phidelia Roblin, formerly of this city, who died at Toronto. At the residence of her daughter, Mrs. James Hodge, Jane street in Belleville, services were conducted by Rev. E. C. Currie, pastor of John Street Presbyterian Church of this city. Many beautiful floral designs were contributed by relatives and friends. The bearers were Messrs. O. Roblin, P. Mott, R. Vandervoort, Wm. Glenn, James Hodge and Geo. Babcock, all relatives of the deceased.

KINGSTON

The athletic meet, which was scheduled to take place on New Year's Day and was postponed because of so many soldiers being away on leave, will be held on January 22nd. A meeting of the committee was held in the Standard office yesterday when Major Starr, Captain Campbell, Mr. Newlands, Mr. Farmer and others were present, and a programme arranged. This will be printed, and the 59th, 80th, 100th and 93rd and other battalions will be asked to send teams to the city for each contest. The new band of the 146th will be available for this date, and there will be no admission fee to the armouries. The contests will be conducted in the afternoon and evening and several boxing bouts will take place at night. The meeting is promoted purely in the interests of entertaining the soldiers in the city.

Captain Driver of the A.S.C. will not leave for overseas until he has closed his work in Belleville, and cleaned up the work of No. 3 company, Kingston. It will be fully two weeks before this is done.

Captain Driver will be succeeded to the command of No. 3 company by Lieut. Cook, of Kingston.

The following will be the composition of the artillery brigade being formed here: Headquarters, 3 officers; 1 warrant officer; 2 artificers; 30 rank rank and file, making a total of 36 of all ranks, with 23 riding horses and 7 draught horses. Headquarters attached: 1 officer, 5 staff sergeants, 1 artificer, 6 rank and file, making a total of 13, with 7 riding horses. The four batteries will be composed of 16 officers, 4 warrant officers, 24 staff sergeants, 32 artificers, 476 rank and file, a total of 552 of all ranks. There will be 168 riding horses, and 332 draught horses, a total of 500 horses. The strength of the brigade, including attached, will be 729.

The Imperial Government are now manufacturing trench bombs, with a four seconds fuse attachment which can be ignited without the use of a match. The six seconds fuse was too dangerous, as it made it possible for the Germans to pick up the bomb and throw it back into the British trenches.

Bombs can be made in the trenches from empty cans of any kind or size. These are of two kinds: the black powder bomb, and the nitro-glycerine type, which is exploded with a detonator of fulminate of mercury. These improvised bombs are filled with pebbles, pieces of glass, nails or any hard substance convenient, which is scattered when the bomb explodes and does great damage.

A guard has been mounted on the Locomotive Works, Kingston, which has been designated the "Munitions Works Guard." The guard is composed of one officer, one sergeant and 27 men. The men are all furnished with a good supply of ball ammunition, and it will not be well for any intruder with evil intentions to show himself around the local munitions works. The guard is furnished until further orders by the 32nd, 33rd and 34th Batteries.

BIRTHS

BEARE—To Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Beare, Herchimer avenue, a son, on December 29th, 1915.

◆

IT WAS A TOUGH STEAK.

But the Restaurant Man Easily Fixed It When the Kick Came.

It happened in a downtown restaurant. A well dressed—as he always must be to make a good story—young man ordered a steak. The waitress, rather pretty—which qualification she must possess in writing a story of this kind—filled the order, and the young man started in to devour the feast which had been set before him.

The young man had no sooner started in on the steak than he discovered that he had a kick coming, and as the restaurant proprietor passed he stopped him by saying: "I can't eat this steak; entirely too tough. I wish you would see that I get better meats when I come in here."

"Too bad! That steak looks all right. But let me get you another." And the aforesaid proprietor took the steak, the silverware which had been served with it and departed. He soon returned with a steak which looked exactly like the first one. The young man picked up his knife and started at his second order. "Fine!" he said as his knife cut it apart without the least effort. The customer was pleased beyond words, and that he enjoyed the steak was evident, for he left only the plate.

As the reporter passed out he met the proprietor again, and this is what was said:

"That steak was all right, but the girl made a mistake in not giving him a sharper knife. All I did was to put the same steak on another plate and bring him a sharp knife. You have no idea what a difference a sharp knife makes with a steak from a beef of questionable age."

MAKING COFFEE.

There Are a Thousand Ways, but Only One Right Way, Says an Expert.

"The right way of a thousand ways to make coffee," says an expert, "is to take the fresh product and grind it very fine, but not pulverized. Then place it in an earthen jar in proportions of a heaping tablespoonful for every cupful required. After this pour on boiling, bubbling water, let it stand five minutes and then stir with a spoon. After five more minutes pour off carefully, and it will then possess all of the good that should be in coffee. It is then without the bitter which is incidental to boiling and without the metal taste which is incidental to its contact with the pot. The whole secret lies in the water—it must be bubbling, boiling because the oil will not fuse with water until it is bubbling, boiling.

"Here is where the cook most always fails 999 times out of 1,000. When the vapor is first observed coming from the spout of the pot the temperature of the water is about 130 degrees F., while at the bubbling point it should register 212. And always remember that in making coffee it is best always to let the spendthrift deal out the coffee, and in making tea let the miser deal out the tea."

The expert was asked why so many people who write for a living drink bad coffee. He simply replied that the secret in the making was the bubbling in the water.

Clean, pure and wholesome, a tea you will like.

PATRIOTIC CONCERT AT POINT ANN

A most enthusiastic rally and patriotic concert was held last night at Point Ann, for the 155th Overseas Batalion. Col. Adams presided as chairman, making a strong appeal to the audience. Lieut. Sandford in his inimitable manner kept the large audience in a constant state of delight and thrill with his experiences on the firing line and quaintly humorous stories of trench life. The musical programme was furnished by the Belleville Male Quartette, consisting of Messrs. Dulmage, Minns, Mouck, and Blaind, Miss Lillian Sharpe and Miss Helen Ketcheson, who gave the Point Anners as fine a concert as they will hear in many a day. In addition to Col. Adams and Lieut. Sandford the following officers were in attendance: Major Allan and Lieut Wills. Mr. J. Nevin Doyle acted as master of ceremonies. The following programme was delightfully carried out, with encores galore:

Opening Address—Col. Adams.

Quartette—"Fishing."

Recitation—"Friar Phillip"—Miss Ketcheson.

Address—"Trench Life"—Lieut. Sanford.

Song—"Somewhere in France"—Miss Sharpe.

Quartette—"Tipperary."

God Save The King.

At the close a great many recruits came forward to sign with the boys of the Quinte regiment.

HOW YOU MAY REDUCE YOU WEIGHT

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

Coroner's Verdict In G.T.R. Fatality

Accidental Death and No Blame Attached, is Decision of Coroner's Jury on Death of Thomas Curry

We find that Thomas Curry met his death in the G.T.R. yard in Belleville, on Tuesday, January 4th, by being struck by a light engine whilst in the discharge of his duties. We also find from the evidence that the engineer and fireman of the engine did everything in their power to avert an accident in accordance with the rules and regulation of the railway company.

Such was the verdict rendered last night by a coroner's jury empanelled to inquire when, how and by what means Thamos Curry, a G.T.R. section man, came to his death. The inquiry took place before Coroner Dr. Boyce, and was conducted by Mr. Wm. Carnew, Crown Prosecutor. The evidence adduced was as follows:

C. R. Cole, being sworn, testified that he was employed at Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment, and at the baggage room of the G. T. R. received the remains of the late Mr. T. Curry. Witness had no knowledge of how deceased met his death.

Alvin A. Johnson sworn, testified he was an employee of the G.T.R., being an engineer. Witness was an engineer and he came in from the west with engine 188, with a freight train. At the yard office he came to a stand still, and the engine he was charge of was cut off from the train in order to get to the coal chutes, near the cross-over switches in the east part of the yard. The engine was going tender backwards over the switch crossing. On going down he did not notice any person working on the line. When the engine backed over the east crossing a train was pulling out, going eastward. Witness inquired of the switchman which side of the coal chutes he had to take his engine. The bell of the engine was running continuously until he stopped to ask instructions from the switchman. The switchman told witness to take the north side of the coal chutes. His fireman, Mr. Taylor, turned the switch at this point. This was on what is called the north engine lead. Witness at this point tooted the whistle and his fireman rang the bell. Deceased, Curry, was working at the switch leading to the storage switch, but in close proximity to the line. Witness saw the deceased working at the storage switch at the time the bell of the engine was ringing. Curry started to walk northerly, and was then lost to view by the witness, owing to a curve of the track. Witness asked his fireman if he had seen the man and the fireman answered in the negative. The engine was stopped and witness saw Curry lying on the side of the track. The only account witness could give of the accident was that Curry in stepping away slipped and fell and was struck by the tender. The man was evidently carried some feet from where he was struck. Witness was unable to state how Cury met his death, other than that he slipped and fell against the tender. The engine was travelling about 4 miles an hour at the time of the accident, and could have been easily stopped the length of tender. Everything was done to avert any accident. This was witness' first accident. The time of the accident was about 3.15 in the afternoon.

Samuel Taylor sworn, said he was fireman on engine No. 188, with engineer Mr. Johnson and whilst turning a switch in the east G.T.R. yard, saw deceased Curry working at a switch near by. After witness boarded the engine he saw Curry still at the switch and did not see him again until after the accident occurred. The bell of the engine was ringing continuously. Not seeing the man pass the engine was stopped, and the body of Curry was found on the north side of the rail near the truck of the tender.

George Clarke, sworn, said he was section foreman of the G.T.R. and had been for some years. On the day of accident witness saw Curry about half an hour before he was killed. Curry was cleaning out the switch designated as the storage lead switch. He was not ordered to do this work but it was part of his duty to do so. Witness did not see engine No. 188, which struck Curry, as he was some distance away. Curry was an active man and a capable working man. He was not a careless man.

Thomas Logan, being sworn, testified he was a G.T.R. section man. Witness saw Curry a few minutes before he met with the accident, but he did not see the accident and was not aware that one had occurred until he was called to the scene by Mr Taylor, fireman of engine No. 188. At the time of the accident a freight train was passing by on the main line near the storages witch, where Curry was working. In witness's opinion the engineer of No. 188 should have stopped his engine before he got to the storage switch, when it was known that a man was working at that switch and especially as there was considerable noise in that vicinity at the time.

This concluded the evidence and after a few remarks by the coroner, the jury retired and brought in the verdict above recorded.

TIRED, ACHING FEET AND LIMBS

are promptly relieved by applying Absorbine, Jr., the antiseptic liniment. It is soothing, healing, and invigorating—puts vim and energy into jaded muscles. One of the many enthusiastic users writes: "I received the trial bottle of Absorbine, Jr., all right and at that time was unable to walk without a cane, just around the house. I used it freely and inside of two days could walk without limping, something I had not done in two months. I went to the drug store and procured a $1.00 bottle and today can walk as good as ever. I'll never be without it. I am recommending it to everyone I can, for I am a living witness."

Absorbine, Jr., should always be kept at hand for emergencies.

At druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or sent postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c. in stamps.

How You May Throw Away Your Glasses

The statement is made that thousands wear eyeglasses who do not really need them. If you are one of these unfortunates, then these glasses may be ruining your eyes instead of helping them. Thousands who wear these "windows" may prove for themselves that they can dispense with glasses if they will get the following prescription filled at once; Go to J. S. McKeown's drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets; fill a 2-ounce bottle with warm water and drop in one Bon-Opto tablet. With this harmless liquid solution bathe the eyes two to four times daily, and you are likely to be astonished at the results right from the start. Many who have been told that they have astigmatism, eye-strain, cataract, sore eyelids, weak eyes, conjunctivitis and other eye disorders, report wonderful benefits from the use of this prescription. Get this prescription filled and use it; you may so strengthen your eyes that glasses will not be necessary. Thousands who are blind, or nearly so, or who wear glasses might never have required them if they had cared for their eyes in time. Save your eyes before it is too late! Do not become one of these victims of neglect. Eyeglasses are only like crutches and every few years they must be changed to fit the ever-increasing weakened condition, so better see if you can like many others, get clear, healthy, strong magnetic eyes through the prescription here given. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

French Destroy German Gas Tanks

PARIS, Jan. 6—The following official communication was issued by the war office to-night:

"In Belgium we successfully cannonaded the defensive organizations of the enemy, particularly in the regions of Steenstraete, Hetsas and the Boesinghe.

"In Artois our batteries dropped projectiles on the railway station of Boisleux, on the hill south of Arras, during the passage of a train.

"In Champagne, in the course of an intense bombardment by our artillery on the German trenches to the north of the Navarian farm, we destroyed all the material of attack by gases, several reservoirs being blown up."

When a young girl begins to think every time the telephone rings it's for her, father and mother may as well begin to save up for the marriage festivities.

Britain Controls Inland Sea

LONDON, Jan. 7.—In connection with yesterday's announcement of defeat of a German war vessel on Lake Tanganyika, in east Central Africa, a half mile above sea level, it is announced that the British ships which accomplished the surrender of the German vessel were especially constructed in England and transported to the heart of Africa. Until the arrival of these vessels, the Germans dominated Lake Tanganyika, which is the centre of a large and important territory. The presence of British armed vessels on the lake will completely reverse the situation there.

This is considered here as most opportune in view of the forthcoming campaign in East Africa.

GLIMPSES OF Y. M. C. A. WORK AT THE FRONT

Magazines Collected

One hundred thousand magazines were collected in one day in Toronto and will be forwarded by the Militia Department to the Canadian soldiers at the front. The collection was arranged by Capt. Forgie for the National Council of Y. M. A.'s of Canada. It is planned by the Y.M.C.A. to gather together and forward huge bundles of these maganzines every couple of months, as the soldiers are eager for such entertainment.

Missionary Sent $200 for Y. M. C. A. Work

A Methodist Missionary just back on furlough, phoned up the headquarters of the National Counicl of the Y. M. C. A. in Toronto and asked what was, being done on behalf of Canada's soldiers. The information was so gratifying that the following day a cheque for $200. was received.

Christmas Gifts From the Trenches

The cabled news item sent out before Christmas that millions of pounds of plum pudding had left England for the soldiers of Britain and the rest of the Empire, caused surprise only from the big figures involved. The Y.M.C.A. workers helped to reverse the process—in gifts "from" the trenches. Here is what Capt. Hancock, one of the Canadian Association men overseas, writes from the firing line: "Our men were paid extra Christmas money, and my C. O. wanted to know what could be done in the way of supplying Christmas presents that the boys could send home to Canada. I got a few thousand francs together and took my horse and groom, with our packs, and made to the nearest large center and purchased a generous supply of souvenirs, jewelry, handkerchiefs, etc.

The way the boys went after these things was amazing. They lasted just one day. Again I made a trip and got more, and still again, each time bringing back as much as we could carry. The men took it all and would have used more.

Further, each man was supplied with a card on which he sent his Christmas greetings with the article he chose. The goods were packed and registered and mailed right from the Y.M.C.A. Hundreds of men sent these messages of love home, which would have been impossible but for the Association. Alas, for some it has already proved to be their last.

"JACK" STEWART, RAILWAY CONTRACTOR

Remarkable Career of Scot Patriot, Who Returned to Old Home

There lately arrived in London a man whose career provides yet another amazing illustration of the energy perseverance, and shrewdness of the modern Scot. His name is Mr. John William Stewart, known in Canada as "Jack" Stewart, the millionaire railway contractor, says London Tit-Bits.

Four years ago he bought from the Duke of Sutherland 50,000 acres of the Sutherland estates, with an annual rent-bill of £2,500, which among other things included Mr. Stewart's birthplace, a tiny cottage at Drumbeg, in the parish of Assynt. A few months later Mr. Stewart bought from the Duke for £66,000 a further large tract of land in the parish of Assynt, which included house property, a deer forest, a sheep farm, and small holdings, with a rental of £2,700.

Yet it is not so many years ago since Mr. Stewart landed in Quebec with just 10s. in his pocket. This was after he had tried farming and engineering in Scotland, and decided that the Colonies offered him more scope for the realization of his ambitions. Obtaining work as a farm hand on a French-Canadian farm, he ultimately settled down in British Columbia with the money he had saved, where he found work on the railway. Afterwards he drifted to Montana, in the States, and made such good use of his opportunities that he was able to enter into partnership with two well-known Irish-American contractors, Foley and Walsh, which has since become one of the foremost firms of its kind in the West.

A patriot to the backbone, Mr. Stewart has utilized some of his wealth to equip a Highland regiment in British Columbia, where he is opening up a great new railroad, and has furthermore contributed £20,000 to the war funds.

"Rather than my country should be beaten in this great war," he says, "I will go back again to day labor and small wages where I began."

And there are thousands of wealthy Scotsmen in all part of the world who would do the same.

REDUCTION OF HOTEL LICENSES.

Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion, has led the way in asking for a reduction in that city of hotel licenses. On Monday last it gave a large majority in favor of a reduction of hotel licenses from 48 to 20, and of shop licenses from 20 to 10.

That too great latitude has been exercised in all cities and towns in the granting of licenses to sell liquor is beyond doubt. Many of these taverns are not required, and become mere drinking places.

Unfortunately for those desirous of restraining the use of liquor as a beverage, the city of Hull in the Province of Quebec, is but a few minutes walk from the city limits of Ottawa. As a result, the Free Press of that city informed its readers that on Monday, the day on which the municipal elections were held, and all the bars in the city were closed, the bars in Hull were crowded by the thirsty ones to excess, at the expense of the city licensees. What will be the result of closing twenty taverns in the city? A year's experience will tell.

Had the question of a reduction of liquor licenses been submitted to the people of Belleville at the last municipal election, there is no question but that it would have been affirmed by a large majority. Whether the request now made for a reduction of ten licenses will be granted by the Commissioners is problematical, though a reduction will be ordered, is not at all improbable.

In the Province of Quebec, the principle of compensation to license holders who are deprived of their licenses has been recognized as fair and equitable on the ground that no man should be deprived of his property, though it be in the interests of the community, without receiving some consideration therefor. This is not a mere theory, but a principle on which all British subjects have lived and acted in the past.

Is this point not worth considering? A law is enacted and placed on the statute book, giving a subject of the country the right to enter into a certain line of business, conditional that he conform to the provisions of the statute, among other things the payment of a certain sum of money which forms a part of the funds required to carry on the affairs of the country. In addition to the payment of a license to enable him to carry on his business, he is compelled to provide buildings and other premises properly furnished for the accommodation of those who patronize his hotel. These investments have been made legal under the provisions of the law, and then in cases of no violation of the law and regulations governing the business which the man is carrying on, he is deprived of the right to continue his business on the ground that the selling of liquor is not in the interest of the people, young or old, and should therefore be prevented. Granted that these moral premises are correct, should not those who are to be benefitted by the stoppage of the traffic pay for actual losses sustained by the man who has invested all his means in compliance with the law to enter into the business of keeping what is known as a public house? The answer is that the license, when granted, is for one year only, and the man who secures the license knows that, therefore he has no right to complain if he is deprived of his calling. It is true that a license is granted for one year only, and he knows it, yet it has been a recognized principle by all Governments that these licenses would be renewed where the laws had been complied with by those holding the licenses. This principle and practice has been acted upon in the past in the granting of timber licenses. These licenses are issued for one year only. No Government has ever cancelled them at the end of a year. Stumpage dues have been increased and so have liquor licenses been increased, so that in this respect both are upon the same basis.

The simple question is, should not, where the interests of a people, no matter in what respect, require the expropriation or the taking away of men's property justify remuneration for actual, not fictitious or prospective loss? Were this principle recognized and acted upon there would not be much difficulty in meeting the view of those who advocate the reduction of hotels and the closing of all unnecessary bars.

Extremists on both sides of this question should not forget the individual rights of their fellow subjects, both in property and in the best way of governing the country. The private rights of a British subject are inalienable, and should be so considered in dealing with all matters in which they are individually or collectively affected.

BLOOD SOAKED PROSPERITY

Representative Humphrey, a member of Congress from the State of Washington, is outspoken in his condemnation of the policy of the administration at the head of American affairs. Speaking in the House of Representatives on Wednesday last he said: "Who will boast of prosperity here that is measured by blood and tears shed across the seas? We would look upon such a person much as we would look upon a man who boasts of having rifled the clothes of dead soldiers on the battlefield."

The Poets' Corner

Everybody Votes but Mother.

(J. W. Bengough).

Everybody votes but mother,
She used to vote once, too,
But whe she got married to father
The law said it wouldn't do.
When mother was just a spinster,
Like my spectacled sister, Ann,
She had a right to the ballot,
But alas! she married a man!
So everybody votes but mother;
Father, Sister Ann, and I,
My widowed aunt and my brother,
And mother wants to know why!

Everybody votes but mother,
'Cause mother changed her name;
Looks as though, somehow or other,
Getting married must be a shame;
They take away votes from fellows
Who have been convicted in court,
And it seems that spinsters who marry
Are bracketed with that sort.
So that's where they rank poor mother,
They've struck her name from the roll,
While sister and aunt and father
And I all go to the poll!
Everybody votes but mother,
Through our stupid and senseless law,
And there's not on the list another
Who needs the vote more than maw;
She cares for the home and the children,
And she has a good right to say
On the laws that affect the household
In any possible way.
So we must have a vote for mother,
Without waiting for dad to die;
For the wife, as well as the widow
And spinster—or we'll know why.

Real Mean.

The Kaiser's treatment of German women passes all bounds. The military authorities have forbidden bargain sales at Berlin.—Montreal Mail.

The Herald of that place makes the announcement: "Harry Barber was re-elected Mayor of Guelph for 1911." That is pretty swift going — for Guelph.—Brantford Courier.

Job, but No Pick.

It is said that the British fleet will continue to keep the German flag from the high seas until Germany has paid the indemnities the Allies will demand as part of the terms of peace. If this is so, Germany will be in the position of the laborer who had a job to go to, but could not work because his pick was pawned, and could not get his pick out of pawn until he had earned the money to redeem it.—Mail and Empire.

An Aspect of Enlistment.

The outstanding feature in the results of the Derby recruiting scheme in Britain is the preponderance of married men among those who have offered themselves. It will be remembered that the same disquieting feature has been evident in Canadian recruiting. To a very partial extent it was explainable in this country, for a time at any rate, by the fact that there were many young men unemployed, and the married ones naturally come to the end of their resources sooner than the others.

But that is no longer applicable to such an extent as to constitute a serious factor in the situation, and even less so in Britain than here. There must be some reason for this difference in patriotism. It has been suggested that the average age among the married men is higher, and that they are therefore more thoughtful and have a better realization of the meaning of the war. That should be more than counterbalanced by the generous enthusiasm of youth, and its eagerness for adventure.

There is another reason that is worth considering. Is it not possible that the same spirit which makes some men take up the duties of their citizenship, and fulfil their duties to the community as husbands and fathers, will operate to make them ready for the infinitely greater duties and sacrifices of patriotism? There is an old saying among the feminine sex to the effect that "All the best men are married," and there is probably a certain amount of truth in it. Those men who have the natural and wholly admirable instinct to make a home are sure to have also the natural instinct to defend it. On the other hand it is a reasonable assumption that the selfishness which keeps many marriageable young men single also keeps them from enlisting.—Montreal News.

A city man wanted a new office boy. Among the applicants was a lad, who gave a neighboring firm as his reference. So the prospective employer got on the telephone.

"Well," said the head clerk, who answered his inquiry, "he's one of those 'push-and-go' boys."

"Good!" said the inquirer eagerly. "Smart and efficient, and all that — eh?"

"Hardly that," came the disappointing reply. "What I mean is that he only goes when you push him!"

An Irishman was going along the road when an angry bull rushed at him and tossed him over a fence. The Irishman, recovering from the fall, upon looking up saw the bull pawing and tearing up the ground, as is the custom of the animal when irritated, whereupon he smiled at the animal and said: "If it was not for your bowand scraping and your humble apologies, you brute, faith, I should think that you'd thrown me over this fence on purpose."

Sandy had been photographed, and as he was looking intently at his "picter," Tam MacPherson came along.

"What's that ye hv theer?" he asked.

"My photygraph," replied Sandy, showing it proudly. "Whit d'ye think o' it?"

"Mon, it's fine!" exclaimed Tam in great admiration. "It's just like ye, tae. An' what micht the like o' they cost?"

"I dinna ken," replied Sandy. "I ever, "it's awfu' like ye!"

Mr. Dauber was holding a private exhibition of his paintings in his studio, secretly in the hope that he might sell one or two, and so be able to have a good meal.

Selecting a likely victim—a prosperous looking old gentleman—he drew him to an easel in the corner.

"There's sir," he said, with an air of modest triumph, "that is my latest work!"

The visitor raised his eye-glasses and looked at the mingled hues on the canvas, where red black and khaki each made a bold bid for supremacy.

"Er—what is it?" he asked cautiously.

"A battle-scene," explained the artist coldy. "And I have tried to express in it all the horrors of war."

"Excellent!" murmured the old gentleman, "I never saw anything more horible in the whole of my life."

Preparing for Emergencies

"You say that you want some name engraved on this ring," said the jeweller to the bashful young man.

"Yes: I want the words, 'George to his dearest Alice' engraved on the inside of the ring.'

"Is the young lady your sister?"

"No; she is the young lady to whom I am engaged."

"Well, if I were you I would not have 'George, to his dearest Alice' engraved on the ring. If Alice changes her mind can't use the ring again.

"What would you suggest?"

"I would suggest the words, 'George to his first and only love.' You see, with that inscription you can use the thing half a dozen times. I have had experience in such matter myself."—Tit-Bits.

FLOUR FROM CANADA

Help to Make Her Dream Come True

SHE is one of some Three Million Belgians who, since they refused to sell their honor to Germany, have lived on the brink of starvation. A thriving industrial people, used to life's comforts, they have been reduced to a state where they dream, not of luxuries or pleasures, but of having enough to eat!.

True to their character as the war has unmasked it, the Germans callously refuse to help the starving. The task of feeding them has been undertaken by Belgium's Allies and Neutral Nations, through the provided by voluntary contributions and administered with wonderful economy and efficiency by a neutral Commission.

Absolutely none of the supplies go to Germans, and most of the food taken into the country is paid for by Belgians who have still a little money. But to feed those who cannot pay, nearly $2,500,000 a month is needed!

Surely no people ever deserved our sympathy and aid more than do these starving Belgians!

They face a winter of necessity, while we are living in plenty. The Fund needs regular weekly or monthly contributions rather than larger but spasmodic gifts. Let us plan to deny ourselves, if necessary—share with our needy Allies—and help to save their lives.

Send your contributions to Local or Provincial Committees or to the Central Executive Committee, 59 St. Peter Street, Montreal.

UNION BANK OF CANADA

A Joint Account is a Great Convenience for family funds. It may be opened with the Union Bank of Canada in the names of two persons, either of whom can make deposits or withdraw money when in town or when passing the bank. It is especially convenient if the husband is frequently away on trips, as it enables the wife to procure funds for expenses on her own signature alone.

"Truth Dexter"

By

Mrs. Dexter seized both of Truth's frantic hands, and gazed steadily into the tortured face, as she said: "Tell me more slowly, dearie! Mummie cannot understand when you talk so wildly. Do you mean that you are never going back to your husband?'

"Never!" cried Truth, beginning now to sob and shiver. "I can't go back, for he don't want me."

Mrs. Dexter reseated herself. The still invincible spirit mounted to its throne in her ashen face.

"Can you compose yourself enough to tell me about it now? Or would you rather wait until——"

"No, no!" broke in Truth. "We needn't wait. I'll tell you now. I wish I had done it before this (she motioned toward the paper) ever had got here."

"I cannot see how the death of any outsider, even though he be a friend, can affect the relations between a lawfully wedded husband and wife."

"But Van loves Mrs. Wiley. He wouldn't say he didn't."

"Truth Dexter!" said the old lady, with gentle dignity, remember you are speaking of a married man,—my grandson-in-law, in whom I have every confidence. This woman you mention is scarcely yet a widow."

"But, grandma," said Truth in more rational tones "she didn't mind being married! and her—friendship—with Van began long before she knew me. She has been my enemy ever since I landed in Boston. When she was in England I was happy—that was the only time. I used to pray every night for her not to come back. But she did come and before long she began persecuting me. Don't you remember that morning when I had been down to get you some felt slippers, and somebody came into the hotel with me, and afterward you found me with a dreadful headache?"

"Yes, I remember well. I couldn't imagine at the time what caused so sudden a turn."

"Well, that was the time she forced herself on me, and said such cruel things."

"What kind of things?"

"Well," said Truth, flushing, "she said that I was makin' myself ridiculous by lovin' Van. That he was a laughing-stock, too, and that all Boston knew why he had married me."

"The heartless trollop!" exclaimed Mrs. Dexter. "But, Truth, I can't understand your listening to such a vulgar mischief-maker."

"Oh, mummie! if you only knew how I tried not to. I put my hands to my ears. I almost turned her from the room,—but she didn't need words. It was all in her face."

"Why didn't you tell me of this at the time? I could have warned you against believing such a baggage."

"I couldn't bear to spoil your trip South, mummie. You were so happy! I wanted to keep the torture to myself until you were gone, and then I was going to ask some good friend, Mrs. Adams, or Quincy, or Van himself."

Mrs. Dexter almost broke down. "Poor child! To think of you suffering that all alone,—so bravely!"

"But I wasn't brave,—that's the trouble. It all came out before I wanted it to, that night after the concert."

"Ah! That was the night you fainted!"

"I didn't mean to, really," she said penitently. "It was all my fault, for that night I forced Van into listening when he begged and pleaded with me not to."

"Oh, Truth, did you actually attack your good, kind husband on words of a minx like that? It was all she wanted, to make trouble between you and Van."

"It wasn't only Mrs. Wiley, though that was the stinging part, I reckon. You don't know how bitter she was,—what awful things she insinuated! She was bound to part us if she could, and now she has helped to do it. Oh, mummie, I've lost him forever, and he'll marry her!"

"Truth Dexter!" cried the old lady in a ringing voice, "no suffering excuses coarseness. I will not stay in the room if you permit yourself such low thoughts. In my day decent people did not speak of married men marrying other women."

Truth was taken aback, and a little frightened. "But, grandma," she faltered, "you don't know this wicked world. There are ways—"

"Those ways are not fit subject for decent conversation either. Now, if you have not lost your senses altogether, I would like to know what proof you have that anything the woman said was true."

"He could not deny what I asked him."

Mrs. Dexter caught her breath. "Did you try to force or taunt him into a denial?"

"I reckon I did."

"Then he did right to refuse. I have no patience with a man who allows himself to be bullied. Are you willing to tell me what she said?"

Truth hung her head still lower. "She hinted that he had married me for—pique,—and—oh—the other is too horrible even to think!"

"Money?" suggested Mrs. Dexter in a strained thread of a whisper.

"Yes,—and afterward Mrs. Adams admitted the same thing."

Mrs. Dexter struck her frail hands together, and sprang to her feet. "Oh, that money!" she cried, "oh, the curse of it! It killed him,—it is eating my heart out day by day, and now it is to ruin my child's life!"

Truth raised her face, and a great dawned for her. "Do you feel that way, too? Oh, then it will be easier, no matter what happens! Mummie, it was the fortune, after all, that made the issue between us. I said that I would not go on livin' on blood-money. Maybe what she said did something to make me hate it more—but I had made up my mind before. I have never been satisfied about that will,—only I was too much of a coward to speak."

rs. Dexter stood perfectly silent in the centre of the room. Her tense figure began slowly to relax, her clenched hands to join themselves into the gentle curves of prayer, and into her face came a look of ecstatic brightness. "Now have I seen the glory of the Lord!" she murmured.

A moment after, to Truth's alarm, she had sunk to her knees and was sobbing aloud, as if in confession,—"Oh, my baby! You are the brave one, and I the coward! Yet I thank Heaven that it has been so. Did you never suspect how the bitterness of this legacy has eaten into my very soul? Everything has been tinged with blood and dishonor,—even here, the improvements on the old place, the very grave in which my husband lies are tainted. You seemed happy, and I hushed my own sorrow for your sake. I thought that an old woman should not interpose even her own convictions before the bright future of younger lives. I thought you could not feel it as I did. But we will pay it all back, I have learned that heavy old-fashioned furniture brings high prices in the North. We will manage in some way to live, and clean away the stains!"

"I told him that I would teach," cried Truth, catching the excitement. "And truly I will. I can't throw away the education that I have got, but I can use it for our South. I told Van this that night."

But the mention of Van's name had shattered the exaltation of Mrs. Dexter's mood. She rose stiffly, went to the washstand in an adjoining closet, bathed her face, smoothed her hair, and reseated herself in the low rocker beside the lamp. Truth drew near also, taking her place on a little stool at her grandmother's feet, as she had so often sat with Van.

"Now, dearie, try to tell me quietly just what you said about this to your husband, and how you left matters with him."

"Well, he was terribly angry, and I reckon I was, too. I told him that I would never be his wife again, and that I was going to make over all the money to him."

"Did he say he would take it?"

"No, he didn't. He said that he wouldn't have it, and that it wasn't in my power to give it away even to him, without his consent, and that he would be a fool to consent."

"Then what did you say?"

"I told him I would never change on the subject of the money, and he would have to choose between us. Even if I could get over about—Mrs. Wiley, I would never live again on that dreadful money."

Mrs. Dexter leaned forward. "And he hesitated?"

"Yes," said Truth, all the life dying out of her face. "He's hesitatin' yet. He told me to think about it and talk it over with you. And now I wish I had done it sooner, for it's too late!"

"Too late?" echoed Mrs. Dexter.

"Oh, don't you see? He'll take the money now, and his freedom too, for Mrs. Wiley is free!"

Mrs. Dexter gave a sharp exclamation of displeasure, and was beginning, "You must understand, Truth, once and for all—" when the ghastly pallor of the young face checked her. Truth threw out one hand blindly, clutching the arm of her grandmother's chair, and in a moment more had fallen in a semi-conscious state.

"Oh, what it it, Truth? What is it? Are you sick?"

"No, no!" Truth managed to gasp. "It will be over in a moment. It's only one of those dizzy spells that I have been having lately."

Mrs. Dexter bent to look with an almost agonized earnestness into the drawn face, and noted, as if for the first time, how big the eye-sockets had grown, how pale and sad the mouth. Was there not something unusual, something special, in that bluish pallor? The old lady caught her breath with a sudden thought.

"Tell me more of this dizziness, Truth. How long have you felt it? At what hour of the day are such attacks likely to come?"

Truth answered obediently but without much alacrity. This sudden interest in physical details seemed to her irrelevant and unimportant. She could not understand, either, why such a light began to glow from Mrs. Dexter's eyes, and started in incredulous wonder as the cry rang out, "Oh, Truthie, my little bay! To think that I have never suspected this before!"

"Suspected what, mumie? I don't understand!"

"There is no need for you to understand yet. Go to bed now and get all the rest you can. I must write to Van. Everything is going to be all right. Van is not going to give you up." The old lady was laughing and crying at the same time. "You'll know before long. Now go to bed, like a good child, and don't you worry one minute longer!"

Truth went upstairs in a dazed condition. "Well!" she ejaculated to herself, "everbody seems to do funny things lately,—even grandma! Now what coud have made her so happy all of a sudden?"

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years, at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY

Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

DISTRESSING BATTLE WITH THE ELEMENTS

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—The steamship Patris, having on board the 300 passengers of the Greek liner Thessaloniki, abandoned at sea yesterday, arrived at Quarantine at 9.50 o'clock to-night, and will dock to-morrow morning.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6—The steamship Patris, which has on board the 300 passengers she rescued from the abandoned Thessaloniki, sent her first direct radiogram to her agents to-day. It told a story of perils at sea during the last seven days. The Patris expects to make this port to-morrow morning.

"The passengers aboard the Greek liner Thessaloniki were transferred to the Patris last Saturday morning," says the radio. "Friday morning the Patris was informed by wireless that the Thessaloniki was in distress and immediately began a search which ended successfully that night.

"The Patris attached tow lines to the Thessaloniki, but the ropes soon broke. She stood by Sunday, and then made fast again. She continued towing the crippled liner until Tuesday morning, when the cables broke a second time. Owing to wind and snow the Patris drifted 100 miles from her course.

"The Thessaloniki called once more for assistance, and was answered by the steamship United States. Both the United States and the Patris continued the search on Wednesday, but unsuccessfully, as they were unable to obtain the correct position of the Thessaloniki. The Patris was obliged to abandon the quest as she was short of coal."

A wireless message received Wednesday afternoon stated that the steamship Perugia had rescued all the members of the Thessaloniki's crew before the arrival of the United States..

The Perugia of the Anchor Line is due to arrive here Saturday morning.

While the reports of a discovery of platinum near the Crossus Gold Mnes, in Munro township, have excited some interest among prospectors. It is not very probable that it will be of much economic importance unless associated with other minerals. Small quantities of platinum were found in the pyrrhotite ore at the Alexo Mine, about thirty miles away. It was reported last summer in iron chrome ore on claims in the township near Munro. The quantity has always been so small as to be negligible, and it is not likely to be anything but a by-product of minor importance. The ore from which the assays were made came from the claims of Archie Burton, about a mile north of the Croesus Gold Mines.

Thirty American horse tenders have made a protest to the American Embassy that they are being held on board the British steamship Kalvinia at Manchester, under dangerous sanitary conditions. The alien officer at Manchester declined to permit the Americans to go ashore because they had no passports, and under the new regulations of the State Department at Washington the American consul could not issue certificates of citizenship to them. The Kalvinia is not to start on her return voyage for three weeks, and the men in their complaint state that living conditions on board are very unsanitary. The Kalvinia came from New Orleans.

Export Business Increased in 1915

MONTREAL, Jan. 7.—Export traffic from the west via St. John during December showed a very heavy increase over corresponding month last year. December 1914, 20 steamers cleared, carrying 60,346 tons and 1,262 horses. December 1915, 38 steamers cleared carrying 181,370 tons and 1,166 horses.

The Greek Red Cross Society

In spite of the wavering attitude of the Government the Greek Red Cross Society under the presidency of Queen Sophia has rendered important services to the wounded of the Allies.

At the outbreak of the war the Greek Red Cross immediately came to the aid of the Red Cross societies in the belligerent countries. A sum of 10,000 francs was put at the disposal Red Cross at Geneva. In addition 5,000 francs was sent to each of the Red Cross societies in England, France, Belgium, Austria-Hungary, and Germany.

A further sum of 5,000 francs was given to the Graeco-Russian hospital in Petrograd.

The Greek Red Cross further sent complete hospital detachments for active service in Serbia and Montenegro. The Serbian Mission had a capacity of 100 beds, the Montenegro of 40. In addition assistance of a friendly nature has been given to the English and French Red Cross service now operating in the Mediterranean in connection with the Dardanelles and Balkan campaign. The Hellenic society has also acted as an interemediary with the Turkish Government in securing improved conditions for prisoners of war.

At the same time the society has given systematic instruction throughout Greece, and a great many new branches have been organized. One of these is at Saloniki. All these banches are controlled by the Central Committee at Athens and are under obligation to contribute money and supplies. Last year's financial statement shows receipts of 1,432,505 francs.

The Greek Society is thus, in the event of Greece joining the allies in a position to add considerable strength to the Allied Red Cross forces.

One on the Doctor

Dr. James L. Hughes tells a good story on himself. He recently made a trip to New York and at the border was interrogated as customary by the United States Immigration Agent, a thorough Irishman:

"Are you an American, thank God," replied the Doctor.

"Are you remaining in the States long?" was the next query.

"No," was the reply.

"Thank God," said the Immigration Agent.

Another story of Immigration inspection that will bear repeating is of a Woodstock lawyer who was travelling to Chicago at night and was asleep in his birth, when the immigration officer entered the train. The officer shook the legal man and inquired if he was an American "Yes" was the reply. "Where is your home?" "Woodstock, Ont." "Why, what do you mean by saying you are an American and that your home is in Woodstock, Ont?" "Do you people think you own the whole continent" was the startling reply.

STEAMSHIP KARNAK HAS NARROW ESCAPE

Pursued For Hours Sumarine—Had 250 Passengers Aboard,

PARIS, Jan. 7.—(Special).—After an all-night race to escape a submarine the French steamship Karnak landed her 250 passengers at Marsielles this morning. Many were half crazed as a result of the ordeal of fear through which they had passed. The Karnak also landed seventeen passengers and thirteen members of the crew of the British liner Abelia and the crew of the British steamer Middleton, both of which were sunk in the Mediterranean by submarines. There was some loss of life on the Abelia. Both the Abelia and Middleton are reported to have been sunk without warning.

Officers of the Karnak tell a thrilling story of a mad dash through the seas alone saved the big steamer. The submarine, which was of the latest type and fully 250 feet long, was fully as speedy as the zigzaggng Karnak. The big waves bothered her, however, and prevented her successfully launching a torpedo against the fleeing passenger ship.

The Karnak was steaming for Marseilles from Alexandria and Malta when she sighted several small boats far at sea. They contained survivors of the Middleton and Abelia.

Scarcely had she gained her way after picking up the drifting survivors when a submarine was sighted approaching her, according to stories told by officers and passengers on their arrival at Marseilles.

It was then afternoon. The Karnak's captain ordered full speed and began to lay a zigzag course. The sea was rough and the vessel's bow split the waves in her dash to escape the under-sea enemy.

"The submarine followed close on our tracks," said one of the ship's officers, "but the heavy seas seemed to bother her. Her speed was almost as great as ours, and she hung on doggedly. She was a big boat. We could see her shooting along just on the surface. Sometimes she was almost hidden by the seas breaking over her."

Just rescued after hours of anguish in the open boats, the survivors of the Middleton and Abelia were terror-stricken at the new menace. They huddled in the smoking-room, where the Karnak's passengers also were gathered. Each person aboard wore a lifebelt.

Some of the braver spirits ventured to the stern, there to watch the race with death.

Darkness fell, but still the submarine clung to the Karnak's wake.

Running without lights the big steamship desperately tried to elude in the inky blackness of night the great U-boat which was trying to sink her. But the submarne kept on. A phosphorus trail in the darkness marked her wake.

Throughout the night more than 300 persons in the cabin tried to keep up their nerve and spirits. For some, however, the effort was too great, and they broke into hysterical weeping. Others, worn out, dozed off, resting in their lifebelts.

"Finally about dawn," said an officer, "we managed to shake off the submarine. Then we struck a straight course into the Marseilles.

"Only the choppy seas and our commander's zigzag course prevented the submarine from taking a shot at us."

The Middleton was a 2,508 ton ship hailing from Hull. She was built in 1892.

The Abelia was a new vessel built in 1914, and propelled by an oil motor. She registered 3,650 tons and her home port was London.

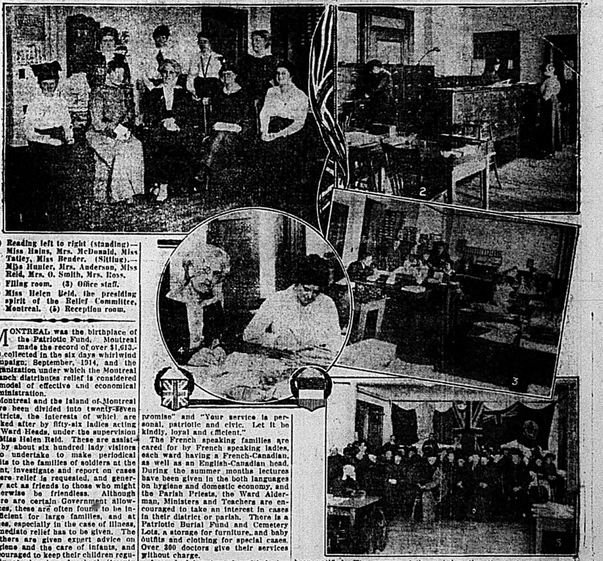
LOOKING AFTER SOLDIERS FAMILIES



(1) Reading left to right (standing)—Miss Hains, Mrs. McDonald, Miss Tatley, Miss Bender. (Sitting).—Miss Hunter, Mrs. Anderson, Miss Reid, Mrs. O. Smith, Mrs. Ross.
(2) Filing room. (3) Office staff.
(4) Miss Helen Reid, the presiding spirit of the Relief Committee, Montreal. (5) Reception room.

MONTREAL was the birthplace of the Patriotic Fund. Montreal made the record of over $1,613,000 collected in the six days whirlwind campaign, September, 1914, and the organization under which the Montreal Branch distributes relief is considered a model of effective and economical administration.

Montreal and the Island of Montreal have been divided into twenty-seven districts, the interests of which are looked after by fifty-six ladies acting as Ward Heads, under the supervision of Miss Helen Reid. These are assisted by about six hundred lady visitors who undertake to make periodical visits to the families of soldiers at the front, investigate and report on cases where relief is requested, and generally act as friends to those who might otherwise be friendless. Although there are certain Government allowances, these are often found to be insufficient for large families, and at times, especially in the case of illness, immediate relief has to be given. The mothers are given expert advice on hygiene and the care of infants, and encouraged to keep their children regularly at church and school (twenty prizes are given for the best school reports), are taught principles of thrift and given free legal advice. The slogans under which the lady visitors work are such as "Provide Opportunity not Charity—and be a friend," "Guard the Fund—do not patronise—do not promise" and "Your service is personal, patriotic and civic. Let it be kindly, loyal and efficient."

The French speaking families are cared for by French speaking ladies, each ward having a French-Canadian, as well as an English-Canadian head. During the summer months lectures have been given in the both languages on hygiene and domestic economy, and the Parish Priests, the Ward Alderman, Ministers and Teachers are encouraged to take an interest in cases in their district or parish. There is a Patriotic Burial Fund and Cemetery Lots, a storage for furniture, and baby outfits and clothing for special cases. Over 300 doctors give their services without charge.

A wonderful system of card indexing and filing enables the Relief Committee to handle all cases with promptness and efficiency. There are between forty to seventy-five advices each day of changes in address, desertion, births and deaths, illnesses or discharges. In one single month 1,500 removals have been notified. The average daily attendance is about 300 mothers. Great care has to be taken that the Fund is economically spent and that no duplicate or unnecessary payments should be made, and this is only possible when the office organization is businesslike. The filing room alone occupies the time of three ladies. So efficient, however, has been the Montreal administration, that the Boston Charity Organization Society has asked for a report and it is likely that the Montreal methods will be adopted in this and other cities of the United States.

HEROES OF ST. BERNARD

Famous Dogs With Long Records of Life Saving

Day Allen Willey in Our Dumb Animals.

A body of men live devoted lives on a desolate, cloud-capped mountain top, in the midst of snowdrifts that beset their bleak home more than nine months in the year, just to feed the hungry, to lodge the homeless and, aided by their dogs, whose sagacity has been a household word for centuries, to catch precious lives from the teeth of the storm. All this they do without hope of reward in this life; without clamor or advertisement or effort to convert those whom they have aided to their own creed; giving their substance and their lives freely to all comers, as their predecessors have done for more than 1,000 years. Such is the history of the monks of the famous hospice on Mt. St. Bernard.

No one gives them medals when they retire, broken in health, to die in the smiling valley below. They never dream they are "heroes." They do their duty as naturally as the bird sings; or as the great dogs they love do theirs; and so little are they in the thought of the world that out of the cosmopolitan thousands who throng Switzerland, "the playground of Europe," every season, very few ever dream of climbing the great St. Bernard to the hospice.

Some of the dogs, notably big, powerful Barry, go around wth us to their friends. They are muscular, short-haired animlas, many of them white with a few brown patches. The head is round and broad, the neck and chest muscular. "We lost five of our best dogs last winter." Canon Darbellay says sadly. "Robert, a huge brown animal, was greatly loved and regretted by us. He had gone off by himself to look for a woman who was missing, and as he did not return we turned out in force to look for him, and found the old hero dead in a crevasse.'

It seems that the genuine old breed is really extinct, for about a century ago almost all of the females got out into a frightful snowstorm owing to a misunderstanding, and they all perished. The original St. Bernard came from the Spanish side of the Pyrenees. The present breed seems larger. Among the famous dogs are such veterans as "Robert" and "Napoleon," the latter a grand old fellow now privileged to lie before the kitchen saving in the snowy wastes.

In the museum at Berne is seen another old "Barry," stuffed yet bearing himself gallantly with his little cask about his neck. More than lives had this splendid creature saved when she met this pathetic end. A young militiaman crossing the pass had sunk down exhausted in the snow, and was swiftly slipping from sleep into death when gallant old Barry's keen nostrils struck his trail, even then two full days old. The big dog plunged through the snow, followed by the marronniers or attendants, and suddenly stopped before a wall-like drift. Here he began pawing violently and soon uncovered the waxen face of the dying soldier. Barry began to lick him wth eager affection and anxiety when the man suddenly revived.

There are just two of the old breed left—a white dog who has been nearly blind since puppyhood on account of an accident, and a very handsome brute with an excellent record. Novices are there among the dogs as well as their masters. Here are four youngsters of seven months being trained in the snow to rescue dummy figures. They find this training excellent fun, but when the wild storms are out and the drifts deep and soft the young dogs are sorely tried.

Formerly the monks had to depend entirely upon their animals for news of travellers in distress in this great wilderness of rocks and ice. Their scent is so keen that they can follow a man's footsteps two or three days after he has passed. In those old days whole caravans of immigrants would be overwhelmed by avalanches, and our morgues were ever full. But now the fathers are connected by telephone with the villages in the valleys and get information of every party starting across the pass. If they do not arrive they know something has gone wrong and out go the marronniers, accompanied by the dogs. One party will make for the nearest shelter on the Swiss side—the Cantine de Proz; and the other goes to the Italan side. In very bad weather the monks go with them. They wear a long and very thick overcoat of wool, woolen gaiters, a cloth helmet with fur ear flaps, huge rubber boots and gloves, linod with swandown. They carry sticks of ash, as well as alpenstocks, spades and provisions.

When the first heavy snows of autumn begin, they mark the paths with posts 15 feet high; and when these are snowed up they put other poles on the upper snowcrest. Soon the winter paths lead indifferently over monstrous rocks and burried Alpine huts. Grave danger arises from the wind shifting the snow and rendering it impossible to return upon one's track. In this way the travellers are cut off, and might well perish were it not for the dogs, whose unerring instinct triumphs always, even where storm and avalanche have swept away every trace of a path. The monks go forth more than willingly. The dogs never mistake, never fail to discover an exhausted wayfarer, even a shroud of snow three or four feet deep. Sometimes a dog will go off on a trail by himself, find an unfortunate, and be buried in the whirling snow himself. But the powerful animal will tunnel his way out of the drift, and come back to the monks to give an excited alarm with flashing eyes and bristling hair.

As to the origin of the dogs it seems to be lost in remote antiquity. Some say that St. Bernard himself brought them here. Certain it is the pure race cannot live away from these mountains. In the plains they always degenerate; their amazing sagacity grows duller. Unfortunately, even here they do not live long, so terrible is the climate.

Long Beach, California,
Jan. 1st, 1916.

Editor, The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—You will be surprised to hear of me at the other side of the continent; but we have lately had "The Kilties" here from Belleville,
Who declare their home,
Like true men they are, near and far,
Where e'er they roam.

Well, on seeing me they at once inquired of me "Have you seen Mrs. Shakespeare, who ran away from Belleville about two years and a half ago?" The "ran away" was a fallacy, but the high compliment of "Mrs. Shakespeare" is a compliment I must compound, so, presto, herein are the verses.

Everyone accorded them a gracious welcome. They played in the great Auditorium (built over the Pacific) to 10,000 people; it was completely filled.

These verses express the impression they left here. Poor fellows, joy go with them in these sad times. It is needless for me to tell you how my heart aches for my country's woes. Should you kindly print these verses please send me a copy. Kind regards.

MRS. JOSEPH BROWNE.

"THE KILTIES"

At Long Beach California

How thrilled the heart, when late there came,
A minstrel band of Scottish name;
But Canada's sons indeed were they,
Who came to cheer with minstrel lay
Their clansmen here upon their way.

They came in tartan, kilt and plaid,
Of gold and silver. The pipes they had,
Tuned by the gods to diviner strain,
Arouse the blood to heroic fame,
And Scots' war slogan hear again.

With dance and song, and bagpipes they
Did lure us, and beguile the day.
This sunny clime more dazzling grew,
Pacific's wave more rippling blue,
And "Palos Verdes" nearer drew.

Afar they'd roved by land and sea,
The Pyramids and Thermopylae
Had met their gaze, till "No place like home"
The burden of their song become,
A dream of rest, no more to roam.

Oh, Belle of Villes on Quinte Bay,
Whose silver tide laps your shores alway,
For your avenues of maple trees,
Old Moira's murm'ring stream at eves,
And hills and dales the wanderer grieves.

MUSIC & DRAMA

MARKS BROS.

Marks Bros. Dramatic Co., under the auspices of the 15th Regiment Band, presented "Dad's Sweetheart" last night before a crowded house at Scott's Palace Theatre, with May Bell Marks in the title role.

That this is one of the leading repertoire companies on the road was fully demonstrated by the presentation of this play, as well as by their work during their entire stay here. The interpretation of this splendidly written play by Miss Marks and the entire company deserves the plaudits of the public. That they were heartily encored goes without saying.

Mr. Hebert as Dave Haskins—"Dad", excelled himself last night and appeared to even better advantage that he did the previous evening as Hank Torrington.

Messrs. Rowley and Lester and Miss Bell contributed largely to the evening's entertainment by their excellent specialties between acts. Another young lady, whose name is unknown to the writer, also performed with credit to herself in a couple of pleasing dances.

To-night is their last appearance in this city at this time and they will present the much talked of drama, "The Factory Girl."

AT GRIFFIN'S

Reese Bros. Africander Minstrels again appeared before a Belleville audience and the one-legged globe trotter, Ralph Tompkins, was the centre of attraction among the audience. The company will appear again to-night, which will end their engagement here. Next week is the opening of the vaudeville season at Griffin's, and on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the singing and musical artists, Oliver and Bell, will be the leaders. Also there will be shown 8 reels of motion pictures. Pictures change three times a week.

CASTORIA

The Kind You Have Always Bought, and which has been in use for over 30 years, has borne the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher and has been made under his personal supervision since its infancy. Allow no one to deceive you in this. All Counterfeits, Imitations and "Just-as-good" are but Experiments that trifle with and endanger the health of Infants and Children—Experience against Experiment.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. It destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic, all Teething Troubles and Diarrhœa. It regulates the Stomach and Bowels, assimilates the Food, giving healthy and natural sleep. The Children's Panacea—The Mother's Friend.

French Hair Dressers are Clever

Scientists in France have given much study to the care of the hair, and nowhere in the world do men, women and even children have such luxuriant hair.

It was Dr. Sangerbund, of Paris, who discovered that falling hair, faded hair and dandruff were caused by germs, and it was a Frenchman that first gave to the world a hair tonic, that would destroy the germs.

Since the introduction of Parisian Sage into Canada the people have learned that dandruff can be quickly abolished, that falling hair or thin hair is unnecessary, and that everybody can have an abundant head of vigorous hair, full of life and beauty.

PARISIAN SAGE

It is because Parisian Sage works such wonders that the sale all over Canada is phenomenal. It is guaranteed to eradicate dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks, or money back.

Parisian Sage costs 50 cents a large bottle at your druggist's. The Girl with the Auburn Hair is on every package.

For aches, pains, rheumatism, etc., try Parisian Mustard Cerate. Its effect is wonderful. Use in place of mustard plasters, poultices or hot applications. Will not blister. 25c. a tube.

HOCKEY

Picton 7, Belleville 5

Defeated but not humiliated, is the universal verdict regarding the intermediate hockey game in Picton last night.

The local team went to Picton yesterday and played their first game of the season with the intermediates of that place and that they gave a good account of themselves is readily seen by the close score of 7 to 5.

The ice was hard and fast and the game was remarkably clean, there being only four penalties imposed.

The first period ended with the score standing 2 to 1 in Belleville's favor. At the end of the second period Picton lead by 5 to 4, and at the close of the game the score stood 7 to 5 in Picton's favor.

The Belleville team worked hard and played hockey all the way and with a little more conditioning would have won out quite handily. Phillips in goal deserves especial mention as he stopped everything in sight where he had the least opportunity to do so.

The teams lined up as follows:—

Referee—Lou Marsh, Toronto.

Three more games are scheduled for this team within the next few days. On Monday night they play the fast Queen's University intermediate team here and a good game is assured. Every hockey enthusiast should come out and cheer the local boys to victory. Then on Friday night Picton plays a return game in this city and the Belleville boys will retrieve their defeat.

On the following Monday night the 33rd Battery team of Kingston play in this city. This will be Belleville's first chance to play the soldier boys in action and a good crowd will surely turn out.

A CHALLENGE

The Type Pickers of the Intelligencer printing office hereby and herewith, etc., etc., challenge the Stitch Takers of the Deacon Shirt Factory to play the annual game of "Shinny" at the "Ice Emporium" of this city at as early a date as these famous shirt makers can get a satisfactory shirt made to wear upon this most auspicious occasion.

It has been the rule of late years to play strenuous games of this winter sport annually and although the deacons have been successful on the larger number of occasions, the Type Pickers intend to "David Harum" them this year if the deacons have the necessary nerve to come out on the ice.

The Type Pickers insist that no "professionals" shall be "rung in" and that only "bonny fidy" deacons shall take part in tnis grand fasco, and the Type Pickers promise to use only Intelligencer men to gain the laurels.

Havelock has organized a hockey team and Robert Quinlan is manager. The team will be entered in the Trent Valley league.

The Queen's hockey team left for Boston yesterday and will clash with the Boston Arena team this evening, returning to the city Monday morning. Besides John Dawson and Manager Nicholson, the following players took in the jaunt: Box, Rotelle, Cam Toland, Spence, Wallace, Parker, Goddard, McCuaig and Smith.

The Campbellford juniors have dropped out of the Junior O.H.A.

The junior schedule consequently will be as follows:—

Jan. 12—Lindsay at Peterboro.
Jan. 17.—Peterboro at Lindsay.
Jan. 21—Lindsay at Belleville at Peterboro.
Jan. 31—Peterboro at Belleville.

PETERBORO, Jan. 7.—The local intermediates defeated Campbellford in the last minute of play to-night zy 3 to 2. It was 1 to 0 at the first period and 2 to 2 at the second period. With two minutes to play Smith was hurt leaving the teams with six men. Clements drew a penalty and Evans securing the puck went through alone and scored the deciding goal. The teams:

Campbellford—Goal, Brown; defence, Farrell and Stewart; rover, Nesbitt; centre, Clements; wings, Lott and Christenson.

Peterboro—Goal, Legros; defence, Spratt and Montgomery; rover, Evans; centre, Jackson; wings, Hamilton and Smith.

Referee—Lang, Belleville.

ATHLETICS.

The A.A.U. is still on the trail of Goulding, the latest being that he agreed to an unfair race. Goulding's reply is that a New York crack was advertised to compete in a walk in Buffalo and backed out. In an effort to have him appear, Goulding says he promised not to beat him too badly and that is the basis of the "unfair" charge. Similar arrangements are common with stars who compete for exhibition purposes only.

The Lacking Stroke.

"Do you think it would improve my style," inquired the varsity man who had got into the crew through favoritism, "if I were to acquire a faster stroke?"

"It would improve the crew," replied the candid trainer, "if you got a paralytic stroke."—London Tit-Bits.

Grim Nickname.

It is said that a former postmaster general of Guatemala was nicknamed "mata muertos," which is to say "knifer of dead persons." He is supposed to have stabbed the dead body of a murdered president as it lay in the street.—London Telegraph.

When a Chinaman Laughs.

The Chinese laugh is not so expressive as the European; it is usually a titter rather than a genuine outburst of merriment.—London Telegraph.

Pasteur's Tribute to Lister.

Of all the tributes to the genius of Lord Lister, the discoverer of antiseptic surgery, probably the most touching was that paid to him by Pasteur, the famous French scientist. At a meeting of savants in Paris many years ago Lord Lister was present, and his brilliant achievements were explained to the audience by Pasteur. As he progressed in his speech he became more and more emotional, and at last he was so carried away by his own eloquence that the tears stood in his eyes. Finally he stepped down from the platform, took Lord Lister, who was in the front row of the audience, by both hands, led him back on to the platform and kissed him on both cheeks, after the manner of the French, in full view of the assembly. Few could have looked on unmoved at the great Frenchman's act of homage to the distinguished English surgeon.

In Sympathy.

The two men had met at a dinner party and were talking in a corner by themselves.

"You see that tall woman with the sharp nose and the critical eye?" asked one of them.

"Yes," said the other quietly.

"Well, I've watched her for quite awhile. She's always got her nose into somebody's business. She's the last woman I'd marry."

"Which shows how strangely in sympathy we are," said the other without resentment. "She's the last woman I did marry."—Exchange.

Information Wanted.

Will some one please give a hint in regard to the whereabouts and the welfare of the family? This honored institution began to disappear a generation or so ago, just about the time that the dissipation of inconveniences attendant upon the rearing of children made families feasible. Ever since the passing away of one room log cabins, abject poverty, home grown wearing apparel and common sense the family has been losing weight and numbers. Its recent complete withdrawal from society has caused grave concern among those who favor the further propagation of the species. If the family will kindly come back and reestablish itself among the race of men no questions will be asked and none answered.

Enemy Attacks Are Repulsed

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Afternoon statement: "In the Campagne district the enemy developed an attack which he had prepared yesterday by a violent bombardment, notably with suffocating gas shells during the course of the day and throughout the night. He attempted no less than four concentrated attacks on a front eight kilometers long, running from La Courtine to Mont Tetu west and east of the Butte Du Mesel. everywhere our fire decimated the adversary's forces and stopped his offensive operations short. The enemy succeeded in gaining a foothold momentarily only at two points of our first line, to the northeast of the Butte Du Mesnil and to the west of Mont Tetu. Vigorous counter attacks by our troops promptly drove him out. At the present hour he occupies only two small elements of advanced trenches.

Britain Demands; Turks Agree

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Replying to a question in the House of Commons today Lord Robert Cecil confirmed the fact that early last year the Turkish Military authorities sent to Gallipoli fifty British and French non-combatants for the purpose of exposing them to the fire of the Allies, and that when the British Foreign Secretary notified Turkey that the Ottoman authorities would be held personally responsible for the lives of these persons the latter had been released.

JUST A NEW YORK FAKE

Yarn That a Gotham Beauty Was to Adorn Our Stamp

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 8.—The New York report that the face of Roba Porter, a New Jersey beauty, is to appear on a new issue of Canadian coins is designated by the comptroller of Dominion currency as a ridiculous piece of nonsense. "Only one face can appear on Canadian coins," said Mr. Rourke, "and that is the face of the reigning monarch. Without the King's face no Canadian coin can be considered legal tender. Moreover, Canada is not even considering striking a new issue of coins; the story is utter bosh."

SUNDAY DESPATCHES FROM THE FRONT

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 9.9—The British official report from the western front stated that German mines near Labassee were exploded yesterday with considerable loss to the enemy, the artillery at other points continues very active.

Despatch from Paris tonight reports a continued destruction of German defences including two blockhouses south of Arras and the Bomb depots in the Somme region.

A Zurich despatch states reports a considerable movement of Roumanian troops. Rumors are current that a Ro umanian force his embarked on transports at an unnamed Black Sea port.

Bucharest reports say it is again reported that the Russians have landed near Varna. No confirmation of the report.

Amsterdam despatches state that numbers of fresh British troops are reported arriving on the Flanders front.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The Paris official report says the French artillery continues effective bombardment of the German works at various points on the western front.

Vienna official reports a bitter struggle against the Russian offensive on Czartoryak front where it is admitted the Austrian lines have been penetrated at two or three points.

The Petrograd official report on the middle strip says the Russian have occupied several Austrian positions capturing many guns with about two thousand prisoners.

A Mitylene despatch reports that the French cruisers continue the bombardment of the Turkishh batteries on the coast of Asia.

From Athens via Paris the reports say there is no chance along the Greek frontier.

A Rome despatch reports great activity along the whole front and that advances have been made at Tolmino, Dolje and other points.

INAUGURAL MEETING OF NEW CITY COUNCIL

THREE NEW MEN IN THIS YEAR'S COUNCIL

Deacon, Whalen And Parks Added to City Council and Should Prove to be Valuable Additions to the Civic Body—Mayor Ketcheson Outlines Plan

The inaugural meeting of the city council of the city was held this morning in the Council Chamber at 11 o'clock at which time a few spectators were present and the following members of the council were in attendance.

Mayor H. F. Ketcheson, Aldermen W. A. Woodley, W. S. Smith, O. E. Platt, W. B. Deacon, J. St. Charles, H. Charles, H. Earle, C. Whalen, J. Duckworth, J. E. Parks.

City Clerk Holmes made his declaration as to the result of the municipal election, and stated that all members had signed their declaration of office On motion, Aldermen Deacon and Whalen escorted Mayor-elect Ketcheson to the chair and he was incerted with the insignia of office. Rev. Canon Beamish Rector of St. Thomas Church, was called upon and offfered up an appropriate prayer followed by the Lord's prayer.

Mayor Ketcheson then delivered his inaugural address as follows:—

MAYOR'S ADDRESS

To the Aldermen of the City of Belleville.

Gentlemen.—I desire to extend to you greetings and hearty congratulations on your election by your fellow citizens of the honorable position of aldermen of this beautiful city. The duties you have assumed will require your careful attention and consideration.

"Economy" must be the watchword of this year's council.

Our National Leaders in finance tell us that Economy, private, municipal and national, is necessary to assure success in the great war.

No public works that will make it necessary for us to issue debentures should be started during this year, but all work under construction or for which contracts have been let will require to be completed, and it will be your duty to see that this work is in accordance with the specifications.

The re-organization of our fire department is well under way and will be completed early this year, and you must see to it that the extra expense incurred by the fire department is saved to the citizens by the lowering of their insurance rates.

Every citizen is interested in our public utilities and the financial condition of our city generally. At as early a date as possible a clear and concise financial statement of the city, including the Gas and Water-works Departments, should be published.

We have a beautiful city, well situated, and have been blessed with a measure of prosperity beyond that of most cities of our size.

We have a splendid business section and a glance at the shops and stores will convince anyone that they are prosperous.

All our industries are busy, many of them working on war munitions and in that way assisting the Empire. I would like to see every effort put forth to secure new industries. Our transportation facilities, both by water and rail, and our central situation, should be an incentive for new manufacturing concerns to locate here.

There is no doubt that after the close of the war many millions of dollars worth of manufactured goods which we have formerly imported from our enemy's country will be manufactured in Canada.

No city on this continent can boast of better schools than we have. Our Public, Separate, and High Schools are among the best in the Province, and such institutions of learning as St. Agnes School, Albert College, and Ontario Business College are household words from one end of this Dominion to the other.

Our Hospital and Home for the Friendless are monuments to the energy and ability of the women of our city and along with our Young Men's Christian Association and Children's Aid Society command our hearty support.

We are in the centre of a very prosperous farming community and everything points, in the near future, to a bigger, better and more prosperous Belleville.

Over seventeen months have passed since the beginning of the great war in which our Empire is engaged, and while we all feel sure of victory, we must not fail to put forth every effort to secure same.

In fact, the successful prosecution of this war should be the first business of the nation, and it is the duty of every citizen to encourage young men to offer themselves for the defence and freedom of the Empire, and to see that our soldiers who are fighting for us are properly cared for and their loved ones left behind receive every attention and assistance.

We who cannot fight should pay, and funds for patriotic and red cross uses must be liberally provided. Our people have done well with both men and money, but much more will be required before victory crows our banners. Our fathers fought and bled and died for the freedom and liberty which we enjoy and we will fight and bleed and die, if necessary, to retain the heritage which our fathers handed down to us.

My prayer is for a happy and prosperous year for our City and Empire and for a speedy ending of the war.

H. F. KETCHESON,
Mayor of the Corporation of the City of Belleville.

Ald. Woodley moved, seconded by Ald. St. Charles, that a hearty vote of thanks be extended to Mayor Ketcheson for his able address. The motion was carried by a standing vote and Mayor Ketcheson responded in an appropriate manner, thanking the council for the vote of thanks so unanimously adopted.

The council went into committee of the whole for the appointing of chairmen of committee for the ensuing year, Ald. Smith in the chair. The chairmanship of Committees recommended the appointments as follows:

EXECUTIVE—Ald. Woodley, Chairman, Committee—The whole council.

Max Harden Is Shut Up

Cannot Speak or Write Till End of War

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, Jan. 8.—Maximilian Harden, the brilliant German journalist, is prohibited for public speaking or writing for the remainder of the war by an order issued today. His weekly magazine, "Zukunft," is suppressed for attacking the government.

The order forbidding the noted German editor from expressing himself publicly, either by speaking or writing, and supressing his magazine, is one of the most drastic acts of censorship in the war.

Most Feared Publicist

The contents of the article complained of by the German government have not been made public outside Germany. It is known, however, that Harden has been in difficulties with the censor several times for criticising the food regulations and other acts of the government pertaining to the war.

Harden is not only the most feared publicist in Germany, but also one of the best known men in the Kaiser's Empire. He was a close friend of Bismarck. He won his way to fame by a series of articles charging unspeakable conditions of the Kaiser. Harden was sued for libel. but was acquitted, and when the Crown Prince brought the Kaiser's attention to the articles there were wholesale dismissals of counts and princes of the notorious "Round Table."

Has Immense Circulation

"Zukunft," or "Future," the weekly edited by Harden, has an immense circulation.

In addition to his work as a writer, Harden is much in demand as a public lecturer.

On December 1, 1911, Harden gave the United Press an exclusive interview predicting that war between Germany and Britian was inevitable, unless there was a complete "right about face" in the policies of the men in control of Germany's foreign affairs. "Germany's international position today is worse than in many years," said Harden at that time, commenting upon the Moroccan affair. "This is due to the incapacity of the men at the head of government. For ten years German diplomacy has acted too much on the theory that the other man is a stupid fellow.

"The Kaiser has two ideas—firstly, that in the war with England the millions of Mohammedans would rally to Germany's support, and, secondly, that the United States would help Germany. The Moroccan agreement and occupation of Tripoli by Italy, Germany's ally, answers the first. The second is to me too absurd to be conceivable. I always ridiculed the idea that England would help Japan in a war with the United States."

The United Press interview with Harden created a sensation in Europe.

"The Moroccan affair," said Harden at that time, "has intensified Anglo-German bitterness. Germans feel deep in their hearts that England prevented Germany from being more successful in negotiations. Now, this affair was wholly unnecessary. Could German diplomats think that England would permit Germany to get a foothold on the west coast of Morocco?

"War with Britain is unavoidable—shall I say inevitable—unless there is quickly a complete face about in the methods and policies of the men who direct German foreign affairs. It could be averted but I doubt very much if it will be.

"How could it be otherwise with men, however, estimable personally, who have not the diplomatic capacity to direct German Empires international affairs or to rise to a situation. The Reichstag is merely an ornament. Under it is no responsible ministery. It makes the people pay for errors they did not commit, bear the results of blunders by men they did not select."

Men Scarce Weapons Plenty

PARIS, Jan. 8.— (Special.)—The Germans have already begun to replace their shortage of men with an increased number of weapons, says La Liberte. According to this report a few of the men are armed with deadly non-recoilling automatic rifles, capable of firing ten shots before they are recharged. Machine guns concealed in invisible concrete shelters replace an entire company.

The French officers also are impressed with the profusion with which field glasses have been distributed. They now form part of the equipment of nearly every captured German private.

THE BRITISH FLEET IS WAKEFUL AND ALERT

Concentrated For Quick Work in North Sea—Subs. Sent Out in Mediteranean and Baltic—Cruisers, Destroyers and Submarines Assembled

KING EDWARD VII SUNK BY HIDDEN MINE

Entire Crew Saved and Only Two Men Injured—Cost $7,500,000—Was Second Largest Battleship Sunk Since War Begun

LONDON, Jan. 9.—(Special.)—Under escort of officers assigned by the admiralty, a correspondent of the Associated Press and a party of foreign journalists were given the first opportunity to visit one of the great naval bases on the coast, where cruisers, destroyers and submarines are assembled for their watch over the North Sea, and from which point big oceangoing submarines are sent on forages to the Baltic and the Dardanelles. It was an impressive sight of concentrated power and alert readiness, with long lines of battle-scarred cruisers stretching seaward, headed by the famous Arethusa. Back of them was a vast flotilla of destroyers, then a countless number of submarines of the latest D and E types, which have recently performed such brilliant work from the Dardanelles to the Bosphorus and throughout the Baltic.

Vast Naval Rendezvous

The day was typical of the rigors the British fleet is now experiencing in the North Sea, with rain pelting the sailors in oilskins, a north wind cutting the sea into form, and seagulls everywhere. The little fishing village on the coast had been transformed by the war into a vast naval rendezvous, with storehouses stretching half a mile, prepared to re-equip an armada and send it back to sea within two hours of its arrival.

LONDON, Jan. 9.9—(Special.)—The British battleship King Edward VII. has been sunk after striking a mine, but the entire crew has been saved.

The loss of the warship was announced by the admiralty in the following statement:

"H.M.S. King Edward VII. has struck a mine. Owing to the heavy sea she had to be abandoned and sank shortly afterwards. The ship's company was taken off without any loss of life. Only two men were injured."

The King Edward VII. represented an investment of nearly $7,500,000, and was one of the finest of the last class of pre-Dreadnoughts.. She was built in 1903 and was therefore only slightly older than the Natal which was sunk by an internal explosion about a week ago. She probably carried more than 700 men.

THE SHIRKER.

Written by Sergeant Elsmare of the 80th Battalion, now attending the Provisional School of Instruction.

Some of our lads have 'listed,
They are eager to face the foe;
Some more of our lads have 'listed,
And some under age we know,
And the dear old country takes them,
While the men stand idly by,
And the sergeants and doctors pass them,
And the total's mounting high.

Some more of our lads have 'listed,
And it fairly sickens me,
And I wonder what will happen
In the future days to be;
Our dear old country called us
To fight for God and Right,
Our rulers take our youngsters
While they let the "men" go light.

The youngsters have the spirit,
The slackers have the frame;
The youngsters have the glory,
The slackers have the shame.

FOR LICENSE EXCHANGE

Noted New Yorkers to Address Ontario Motor League

Chief of the largest automobile bureau in the world, the Hon. Francis M. Hugo, Secretary of State for New York, and Herbert W. Baker, secretary of the New York State Automobile Association, will be among the distinguished guests and speakers at the annual meeting of the Toronto Motor League, to be held in Toronto an January 18. During the evening session the proposed interchange of motor licenses between the Province of Ontario and the State of New York will be discussed. The New York State officials are heartily in accord with the campaign of Ontario motorists to the end of securing license exchange.

Already New York State has passed legislation that will bring license exchange into operation immediately Ontario officially recognizes the New York State automobile licenses. As yet the Ontario Government has not seen its way clear to reciprocate, but motorists are of the opinion that in view of the Federal Governments statistics showing that tourist traffic is the Dominion's' fourth source of revenue and its action in removing the ten-day-bond barrier to international motor touring, the Provincial Government will soon if not immediately grant the boon of license exchange.

The Old Song "Somebody Lied"

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Two Americans named Carson and Dempsey, of Nashville, who were members of the steamer "Nicosian" when the latter was shelled by a submarine which was afterwards sunk by the patrol boat "Baralong," deny absolutely that the German crew of submarine were shot either in the water or aboard the Nicosian, and that statements to that effect by other Americans on the Nicosian were inspired by spite.

Still the story comes that Pullman porters are to get more pay. We can't afford to increase the tip till war is over.

Berlin Claims Several Victories

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—(By wireless)—An offensive movement has been inaugurated by the German forces in the Champagne district. An announcement was made by the War Office today that a French position extending over several hundred yards at a point northwest of Massiges had been captured by the Germans. The conquered position is near Maisons de Champagne.

The Germans captured 423 prisoners several machine guns and bomb-throwers. The French counter attack failed.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—The Austrian official statement issued on Sunday says that the Russians on Saturday ceased their attacks in East Galicia near the Bessarabian frontier, having been repulsed at all points.

British Nation Is Wasting Money

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The question of the ultimate size of the British army, which the Times says, has not yet been settled to the satisfaction of Runciman and McKenna, will be discussed at a Cabinet meeting tomorrow. The Daily Mail argues that unless the country is able to pay for all the soldiers required to smash Germany, the ministers had better admit that the war is lost, but the Mail says there is plenty of money if it were not for national and individual waste. Of the five millions pounds which the war is costing England daily on good authority it stated that one million is being wasted.

SENTRIES FOR CHURCHES.

A Custom Forced by Native Feuds in the Melanesian Islands.

In the Melanesian islands the natives carry on feuds with a more relentless hatred even than the vendettistes of Corsica. In these islands Christianity has been made, at least in outward aspect, the religion of the people.

That it really does mean something to the Melanesian is evidenced by the reply I received from an intelligent old chief when I asked him why he did not become a Christian.

"I'm to be," he said, "when I kill the devil who kill my boy five years ago."

So relentlessly are these feuds carried on that it is the custom for a native of wealth with a grievance against another, but who finds it impossible or inexpedient to kill his enemy and secure his head himself, to hire a professional murderer and pay him upon the delivery of the head.

Often in the years that are just gone indiscriminate killing went on with such savage persistence that even during church service "pot shots" were taken at marked worshipers through the doors and windows.

The situation became so acute in one village that the government was petitioned, and the response was the loan to the missionary of a rifle.

The missionary took the hint and armed one of his natives who stood guard outside the church during services.

And so it became the fashion on many of the islands to add a sentry to the church rolls.

Spanish Court Customs.

There is no court in Europe more tenacious of its etiquette—which was inaugurated several hundreds of years ago—than that of Spain. It is said that King Ferdinand VII. once made a minister resign because he had accidentally touched his hand. One of the quaintest ceremonies is the closing of the royal palace gates at Madrid every night. Electric light has been in use in the palace for quite a long while, but nevertheless every evening at 11 o'clock the officiating gentleman in waiting appears, accompanied by several servants, who carry ancient lanterns, to demand a huge key from a higher official to lock the doors of the palace. This is all the more amusing as the huge key does not fit the modern keyholes. The key is then returned to a third official, and every night gentlemen in waiting have to patrol the corridors of the palace, though sufficient guards are about, to watch over the slumbers of their royal master.

In addition to the Christmas Tree and other good things provided by the Muskoka Free Hopsital for consumptives, for all patients at Christmas time, the soldiers in residence there were extra well looked after, being presented with moccasins, fruit, and other articles, by ladies' societies of Gravenhurst, Newmarket and Toronto.

A Tragedy.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

In a public park in Rio de Janeiro a lady handsomely dressed walked alone. The fact of her being unattended caused those who saw her to wonder, for it is not usual for one of the higher class to be out alone. When she deliberately took a seat at one end of a bench, at the other end of which sat a man, the surprise was even greater, for she appeared to be a lady. She had been sitting but a few minutes when two gentlemen walked by.

"Gentlemen," she said, "this man who is sitting near me has insulted me. May I ask you to get his address that my natural protector may demand satisfaction?"

The two men stopped, lifted their hats and offered their services. The accused man denied that he had offended the lady. She begged one of the others to call upon her at her hotel. He did so, sending up his card, bearing the name of Roger Stone, Denver, Colo.

"I am fortunate," she said, "in not only finding a countryman to assist me in this affair, but one from the chivalrous west. I am traveling with my twin brother. He is not with me this evening, but will be in later. Will you be the bearer for him of a challenge under the code for tomorrow morning?"

Mr. Stone's surprise at this singular proceeding was even greater than before. He asked the name of the man for whom he was to bear the challenge and was told that it was Harrison—Frank Harrison. He endeavored to learn something of the manner in which the lady had been ill treated, but she appeared to be so averse to going over the disagreeable details that he did not press the matter. What added to the mystery was that the man who had offended the lady was also an American named Mathews.

The next morning the two parties met on the ground chosen. Mr. Harrison, who was the image of his sister and looked equally feminine, was attended by Mr. Stone, the other principal's second being a Brazilian. His opponent protested against the proceeding, for which he said he was unable to account. He disclaimed any intention of interfering with Miss Harrison, and if he had unwittingly done so he would apologize. The lady's defender refused to accept an apology, and preparations were made for the encounter, which was to be fought with pistols.

When the two principals were placed face to face at thirty paces interval and the signal was about to be given to fire Harrison made a signal for delay. Then, addressing his opponent, he said:

"Jim Mathews, you don't know me, for you have never seen me before. I am not Frank Harrison. I am Eugenia Phillips, widow of the man you ruined and drove to suicide three months after our marriage. I have followed you all the way from Virginia City for the express purpose of killing you. I found you yesterday and took measures for this meeting."

A deathly pallor spread itself over the face of the man addressed. His enemy nodded to the man who was to give the signal. He hesitated. The woman raised her pistol, and her adversary followed her act. A white handkerchief fluttered to the ground The man's hand trembled; the woman's was steady as a rock. Two shots rang out, and the man fell with a bullet in his heart.

The woman stood for a few moments looking at him who had blighted her life and on whom she had taken revenge, then sank in a swoon.

The finishing of this tragedy, occupying as it did but a minute or two, did not give the seconds any time to prevent it. Indeed, they were paralyzed with surprise. When the woman fell her second ran forward, took her up and bore her to the carriage in which she had come onto the ground. He took her to her hotel and called for a doctor, for she was hysterical.

Meanwhile Mr. Stone busied himself to prevent the affair from getting out, and by pledging the few persons involved to secrecy and bribing the police he succeeded. Had it not been for the burial of the slain man the bribe would not have been necessary.

As soon as the lady was able to travel she sailed for the United States, and on the same steamer was her second in the duel.

From the time of that episode Roger Stone was a changed man. The tragedy at which he had assisted, the wrecking of a woman's life, affected him materially. It's not easy for a man to witness a woman's sufferings without being strongly drawn to her. On reaching the United States Stone and the widow both sought the west, where they lived. Stone visited Mrs. Phillips frequently and in time begged her to permit him to devote the rest of his life to her. Though grateful for his sympathy and the service he had rendered her, she told him that it would not be right for one whose nerves had been shattered to burden one who seemed to have a pleasant career before him. Besides, she had a life on her conscience. To this latter statement he said that if he had had time to gain a correct understanding of the case the life would have been on his conscience instead of hers, but it would not have been a heavy load to bear. By dint of persuasion he finally gained his point. And now the tragedy is in the dim distance, and its keen edge has been worn away.

ANOTHER ARMAMENT RACE

(New York World.)

What does the two-power navy standard suggested by our sea strategists means? First, the increase of personnel from 55,000 to 230,000 the number in the British and German navies even before the war; second, a cost of $590,000,000 a year, if in proportion to the present rate per man. Not to mention that Great Britain would at once begin to outbuild us.

ACCIDENT TO BE INVESTIGATED

Inquest Opened on Remains of C. Wellman Killed by G. T. R. Express—Mrs. Wellman Will Probably Recover

An inquest to enquire into the circumstance of the deplorable accident which occurred at the Canifton Road railway crossing on Saturday afternoon resulting in the death of Mr. Charles Wellman, of Thurlow township, was opened at Tickell & Sons' undertaking establishment on Saturday evening. Dr. Boyce, coroner, presided and Mr. Wm. Carnew, County Attorney, represented the Crown.

The jury is composed of the following citizens: Messrs. W. H. Panter, R. W. Adams, A. Adams, Fred Meagher, H. A. Morgan, B. J. Black, Walter Hicks, W. E. Britton and P. Harrison. Mr. W. R. Adams was selected as foreman. After the jury had taken their oath they viewed the remains. The injuries presentable showed that death had been instantaneous as the skull was frightfully fractured, and the left arm was broken midway between the wrist and elbow. Some evidence was then taken.

Police Officer Ellis testified that he had summoned the jurymen all of whom were qualified to act. He had visited the scene of the accident and saw evidences of it, such as pieces of the vehicle in which deceased and his wife were riding in when struck by the fast east bound train, which was a little late, arriving here. Personally he knew nothing of the accident only what he had heard.

Mr. Walter Thomas testified that he knew deceased and recognized the remains as those of Mr. Charles Wellman, who lived upon the farm of witness' father, in Thurlow. Mr. Wellman was in Belleville on Saturday and was in the witness' shop about 11 o'clock in the morning and received pay for some business transacted Deceased was about 50 years of age and was a sober and industrious man. He had a family of five or six children. Personally he knew nothing of the accident. This was all the evidence submitted and an adjournment was made until Wednesday evening, 12th inst, at the police court room.

THE VICTIM

The victim of the distressing affair was a man 55 years of age and was born in the Township of Marmora, Hastings county. He had lived in this county all his life and for the past year on Mr. George I. Thomas' farm, in Thurlow township. By all who knew him he was regarded as an industrious man. A family of five children survive, four of whom live home and the eldest daughter is married. The remains after being prepared for burial, were yesterday conveyed to his late home.

At first it was thought that Mrs. Wellman had been fatally injured, but her condition today showed some improvement.

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

A LONE TRAMP

The only occupant of the police cells since Saturday, was a tramp, who was a young man.

JOINED THE BATTERY

A. S. Young, Belleville, A. L. Yerex, Belleville, C. Gould, Plainfield, and C. R. Carter of Roslin, left this city to-day to join the 33rd Battery at Kingston.

PRACTICE RUN

At a few minutes before 3 o'clock this afternoon the fire brigade was called out owing to an alarm being sent in by Chief Brown, of the department. The two hose wagons and hook and ladder wagon responded with alacrity. The alarm was for the purpose of a practice run which proved most satisfactory.

DIED IN MINNEAPOLIS

Mr. John Canning who resides on Catherine street in this city, received a telegram this morning announcing the death of Mr. Wm. M. Bathurst, which occurred yesterday at Minneapolis. Deceased was about 50 years of age and was known to many in this city, having been a frequent visitor here. His wife is a sister of Mrs. McCutcheon who resides at 57 Dundas street, Belleville, and he was also a cousin of Mrs. John Canning. Mr. Bathurst leaves a wife and two sons.

CONSIGNED TO TOMB

The funeral of the late Mrs. Frances Gillum of this city, took place this morning, and a number attended the obsequies. Burial service of the Anglican church were conducted at St. Thomas' Church by the rector, Rev. Canon Beamish, who also officiated at the interment at Belleville cemetery. Many floral tributes were placed upon the casket. The bearers were Messrs. Thos. Ritchie, C. M. Stork, J. W. Murray, J. Williams, R. Tannahill and W. S. Cook.

ANNUAL MEETING OF B. B. M. B. C.

The Belleville Business Men's Bible Class held its annual election of officers yesterday. The officers of the class for the ensuing year are: H. W. Ackerman, Honorary President; E. F. Dickens, President; J. A. Borbridge, 1st Vice-President; R. S. Sills, 2nd Vice President; J. H. Moon, Treasurer; R. D. Allson, Hon. Secretary, G. H. Robinson, Secretary; M. P. Duff Asst. Sec.; Finance Committee, R. Arnott and R. B. Morden; Chorister A. M. Chapman; Organist, Miss Edna Wallace; Teacher, F. E. O'Flynn, B.A.

This class is one of the pioneer adult Bible Classes of the Dominion and was organized by His Honor Judge Derche. It meets Sunday afternoon at 2.15 in the auditorium of the Bridge Street Methodist Church. The greatest interest is shown in the lessons and it is a frequent occurrence to find the members discussing the lesson during the week.

The flower committee is active and the class sends flowers to all members who are sick. The class has an organized bowling club which meets every Monday evening in the church parlors. The special features of the class are announced in the daily papers every Saturday. This class is a strong organization, has a membership of about 150 and they are commencing the New Year under the most favorable auspices. Tonight the chairmen of the standing committees will be appointed and the class will continue its aggressive work. We congratulate the teacher and the members of the class on the splendid success of the work of the class during the past years.

FIVE CANADIANS HONORED AT FRONT

OTTAWA, Jan. 9. — In connection with the successful minor operations carried on by our 5th Western Canadian Battalion on Dec. 15th, the following awards have been made by the commander-in-chief: Distinguished Service Order, Captain E. C. Jackson; military cross, Lieut. K. L. T. Campbell; distinguished conduct medals, Sergt. J. S. McGlashan, Pte. J. A. Coles, Pte. John Lindsay.

ONE ON THE DOCTOR

Dr. James L. Hughes tells a good story on himself. He recently made a trip to New Work, and at the border was interrogated as customary by the United States Immigration Agent, a thorough Irishman:

"Are you an American?" he was asked.

"Yes, and a Canadian, thank God," replied the doctor.

"Are you remaining in the States long?" was the next query.

"No," was the reply.

"Thank God," said the Immigration Agent.

A Christmas Box

By EUNICE BLAKE

Jack Hollingsworth was to have been his uncle's heir until Jack married Julia Trevor without saying anything about it to the old man except to invite him to the wedding. After that it was understood that St. Luke's hospital would get the bulk of the property and Jack would have to get on as best he could. Since he had been brought up to expect a fortune, this was not a pleasant outlook.

A couple of months before the third Christmas after the marriage and a short time after their baby was born Jack and his wife were sitting together brooding over their poverty—for Jack was not a success as a worker—and lamenting that Jack had not at least mentioned the fact to his uncle that he was about to take a wife and asked the old man's approval. Mrs. Hollingsworth said she didn't blame the old man a bit. Jack admitted that he didn't blame him either.

"Let's send him a Christmas present," said Julia. "It may bring about a change."

"Where are we to get the money to pay for it?" suggested her husband.

"I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll make a batch of those iced top cookies I know so well how to make and send them to him in a box with a note saying I made them."

"Put in your photograph," said Jack.

"That's a good idea. I'll put in the one taken with the baby."

This plan was not so bad, since Mr. Silas Henderson, Jack's uncle, believed in women who were practical and was very fond of children. Indeed, it was the sad spot in his life that his wife, now dead, had not borne him a son to bring up to manage his business and inherit his property.

Unfortunately for Julia's scheme, not long before Christmas Silas Henderson received a Black Hand letter demanding $5,000. He paid no attention to the demand except to hand it over to the police. On Christmas eve Jack, at Julia's suggestion, to save expressage, as soon as it was dark took the box of cookies to his uncle's house, put it down, rang the bell and slipped away. The summons was answered by the butler, who took up the box and carried it to his master, telling him how he had found it.

Mr. Henderson took it up, looked at the address—written by Julia—and, suddenly remembering his Black Hand letter, dropped it like a hot coal.

"Thomas, telephone for the police!" he cried to the butler.

The order was obeyed, and in a few minutes a patrol wagon dashed up to the house. A sergeant and a couple of men entered and asked what was the matter. The sergeant when informed of the receipt of a suspicious package sent the men back to the station and proceeded to examine what no one doubted was an infernal machine.

The first thing the sergeant did was to unloose the bit of narrow ribbon that Julia had used in tying it up and put it in his pocket as a possible clew. The next thing was to unwrap the paper about the box and hold it up to the light in hopes of seeing some mark on it by which to find the culprit. A box in which a set of child's ninepins had been kept next appeared.

"A sliding cover," remarked the sergeant sententiously. "We must find some way to remove the lid without drawing it out, for this is doubtless intended to produce friction and light an inflammable. Have you anything to bore with?"

A large sized gimlet was produced, and the sergeant bored a hole in the side of the box, drew out the gimlet and looked at a substance that adhered to it.

"Dynamite!" said the sergeant.

He put the gimlet to his nose, then to his tongue.

"Doesn't taste like dynamite. It's more like cake. I fancy, Mr. Henderson, you have made a mistake. This may be a Christmas box."

He bravely pulled out the cover, removed some paper and took up a card on which was written:

A merry Christmas to Uncle Silas from the Hollingsworth family.

Beneath the card was a photograph of what looked to Mr. Henderson like a Madonna and child. Lifting another paper, a dozen round cakes with pink icing on the top were displayed. Mr. Henderson gave one to the sergeant and ate one himself. It was delicious.

"Thomas," said the receiver of the box, "call up my nephew, John Hollingsworth, on the phone and ask him if he and his family will dine with me tomorrow."

Thomas obeyed the order, and the next day the Hollingsworth family, including Silas Henderson Hollingsworth, aged two years, the child sitting in a high chair on his great-uncle's right, dined with Silas Henderson.

That was the first Christmas in many years that Silas Henderson had any one to dine with him on Christmas day. A fine dinner was provided, such as the Hollingsworths had not partaken of since their marriage. Mrs. Hollingsworth made herself especially agreeable, and little Billy was regarded by his great-uncle with delight.

"After all," said the old man, "blood is thicker than water. You, Jack, and you, Julia, and Billy will make my life much happier in the future, and it all came from a mess of cookies."

The next day Mr. Henderson changed his will in favor of his grandnephew, leaving the estate in trust to the boy's father.

Within the Military Circle

All officers appointed to command battalions, not under the rank of majors, may now attest recruits for the Canadian expeditionary forces. A recent order in council makes this possible. Previous to this order, all recruits in this city had to be sworn in by the police magistrate, by a justice of the peace, or by Colonel Ogilvie, who has been made a justice of the peace for the purpose of attesting recruits. After this every commanding officer with the rank of major or colonel will be able to swear in his own recruits, and this will relieve Colonel Ogilvie of a great deal of work in this particular.

The 3rd Division is the only one in Canada from which the Royal Commission for the investigation of certain charges regarding war material has not received one solitary complaint, which speaks volumes for the administration of this Divisional area.

The decision to increase Canada's Army to half a million gives a peculiar interest to the recruiting figures and the following facts that have just been announced shows positively that the Third Military Divisional Area has more than done its share. The Third Division is commanded by Col. T. D. R. Hemming and takes in the following counties: Durham, Northumberland, Victoria, Peterboro', Hastings, Prince Edward, Lennox, Addington, Frontenac, Haliburton, Carleton, Dundas, Glengarry, Renfrew, Russell, Stormont, Grenville, Lanark, Wright, Labelle, Pontiac, Leeds, Prescott, Nipissing district south of Mattawa river.

Canada is divided up into thirteen military districts or divisions, of approximately equal strength as to recruiting possibilities. The totals by divisions as published last week show that one-ninth of the total men recruited came from this division. This fact alone proves the superiority of the recruiting methods of this Division as compared to others.

There are fifteen militia regiments in this Division and every one of these has given a battalion to recruit for overseas service, and men are still being trained either for these battalions located here yet or as reinforcements for the ones that have gone over sea. On Dec. 31st, 1915, when the figures were obtained there were 7,100 men in this Division and 370 officers. This is exclusive of the number on guard duty along the water front. Every two weeks in this Division if the present record is kept up this Division brings one complete battalion up to strength. From Dec. 1st to Dec. 15th, 1,096 men were enlisted, and from that date to the end of the year 1,115 men were enlisted. This means twenty-four battalions from this Division every year—a wonderful record that is not equalled in Canada. On top of this one must remember that there are few cities of any size, and with Montreal drawing from one end and Toronto drawing from the other, there has been a big "leakage" in recruits from the 3rd Division.

There were 238 recruits secured from the city of Kington during the last two weeks of the year, and this makes Kingston third on the list of places that are recruiting centres in this division.

The list, with the number of recruits secured and the percentage that number is the population is:

Centre.	Recruits	Per cent
Perth	59	1.9
Cobourg	85	1.7
Kingston	238	1.26
Belleville	114	1.15
Lindsay	53	.78
Peterboro'	56	.3
Ottawa	180	.3

All a Dream.

There is an amusing example of oriental subtlety in an anecdote that Mr. Sidney Whitman tells in "Turkish Memories." The story is of a young diplomat who was sent to Constantinople to be trained for his profession.

One day the diplomat met a carriage guarded by a eunuch that contained some ladies of the sultan's harem. The young man endeavored to peep in at the window and got a blow across the face from the vigilant eunuch. He made a great uproar and lodged a complaint with the sultan himself. He was received in private audience, and Abdul Hamid listened patiently to his story of the outrage.

On its conclusion the sultan replied: "My dear sir, I have gone carefully into the case and see exactly how it stands. You are a gentleman; therefore you could never have committed such a breach of good manners as is alleged to have taken place, and consequently no eunuch could possibly have presumed to strike you. The whole affair must be the product of your fancy; pray let us dismiss it."

Vanity Tickled.

During the early excesses of the French revolution a rabble of men and women was rioting in the streets of Paris. Lafayette appeared and ordered a young artillery officer to open fire upon them with two cannon. The officer begged the general to let him try first to persuade them to withdraw.

"It is useless to appeal to their reason," said the general.

"Certainly," answered the officer, "and it is not to their reason, but to their vanity, I would appeal."

The officer rode up to the front of the mob, doffed his cocked hat, pointed to the guns and said:

"Gentlemen will have the kindness to retire, for I am ordered to shoot down the rabble."

The street was cleared at once, for none could brook the idea of being classed with the scum of the city.

The Eternal Conflict.

Society is nothing more than a continuation of the conflict of nature under the guidance of intelligence. It is vain to hope for any amelioration of society from the prevalence of an intellectual education. Culture of the intellect supplies new weapons for use in the conflict and may render it less rude in appearance, but cannot change its nature. * * * Doctrines and creeds are forms; the will supplies their contents. Just as a vehicle may convey substances having wholesome or injurious or indifferent properties, so any system of thinking—theological, social or political—may be made to bear any purport, good or bad. To try to shape opinions so that they may not be made subservient to any evil purpose is all labor in vain.—Schopenhauer.

Wars and Words.

The wars with Spain in the sixteenth century enriched the English language with many new words. To them, as Logan Pearsall Smith has pointed out, "we owe the Spanish words 'embargo' and 'contraband' and the Dutch word 'freebooter.' Among other Dutch or Flemish terms that were perhaps brought back to England by soldiers in their campaign in the low countries may be mentioned 'furlough,' 'cashier,' 'league,' 'sconce,' 'onslaught,' 'drill' and 'domineer.' 'Comrade' is a Spanish word, but seems to have been a soldiers' term learned in the low countries, and 'forlorn hope' is a military phrase, being the Dutch 'verloren hoop,' in which 'hoop' means a troop and is cognate with our word 'heap.'"—London Chronicle.

A Long Pull.

Personally we never expect to have any trouble with our appendix. We think the dentist pulled it out when he fetched that tooth.

Eggs.

The earliest Scriptural mention of eggs as a food is found in Job vi, 6: "Is there any taste in the white of an egg?"

Men are born to succeed, not to fail. —Thoreau.

Gwendolin's Failing

How a New Year Resolution Was Kept

By F. A. MITCHEL

Miss Gwendolin Caruthers was a bankrupt in flirtation. During her summer outing she had become involved with three suitors; two more had been added in the autumn, and the Christmas holidays had increased the total by one more. Of those two were serious, three were semi-serious, and one was to be counted a credit instead of a debit, for the gentleman had not been brought to a proposal.

Now, considering the fact that Miss Caruthers had but one heart for the five or six suitors, her assets and liabilities may be said to be as one to half a dozen. Notwithstanding this distressing condition of her heart affairs, at a party congregated to see the old year out and the new year in she yielded to the temptation to take position in a window seat behind a curtain with still another young man and then and there deliberately drew him into a proposal.

Miss Caruthers' disposition to go heart hunting had been noticed by both her father and mother and had given them great concern.

"She's not only declining desirable parties," said her mother, "but driving away other desirable young men who do not dare trust her."

"Too bad!" said her father. "The day may come when she has passed the mating age and will be forced into enduring spinsterhood."

It was a great relief, therefore, when Gwendolin astonished her father and mother by coming down to breakfast with them at 9 o'clock New Year's morning and announcing to them that she had made a New Year's resolution not to incur any more heart liabilities during the year she was entering upon. In other words, she would not act toward any young man in an encouraging manner.

"Good for you, Gwen!" exclaimed her father, taking her in his arms. "If you assure me one year from today that you have kept your resolution I'll give you an automobile."

"Done!" cried Gwen, kissing him first on one cheek and then on the other.

"But"— said her father, holding her off and looking her in the eye.

"But what?"

"There must of course be an exception."

"I see; the exception is an acception."

"You mean an acceptance. If you accept a man and marry him that won't count."

"Suppose I accept him and don't marry him?"

"That will count."

Gwen gave her father another kiss and sat down to breakfast. She dismissed the matter of her newly made resolution from her mind, for she only realized its importance in relieving her from having to make excuses to rejected suitors and had no doubt whatever of keeping it.

Unfortunately there was just one weak spot in Gwen's resolution. In the list of men who had become entangled with her during the past year mention has been made of one whom she had been unable to bring to his knees. This was George Underwood, a young man much engrossed in business and so steady on his pins, to use a slangy phrase, that it was very difficult for any one to bowl him over. He was not a woman's man, never danced, and, as for an affair of hearts, it had not occurred to him that it could be played as a game.

Gwen had tackled him just as she had tackled the others, not having looked upon any of them as a probable husband. Underwood's attention was not easily secured, and when it was secured there was no favorable response to Gwen's advances. In vain she had endeavored to batter down that indifference which stood between her and his heart. When trying to secure an entrance she would be miffed at a commonplace remark about the weather or some other event equally far distant from what was uppermost in her mind. The consequence was that when she made her resolution on that New Year's morning she had but one regret—she would be obliged to leave Underwood unfinished.

Mr. Underwood was in control of a large business that brought him often in contact with Mr. Caruthers. Occasionally he had come into the latter's home of an evening to talk over some business enterprise, and Gwen had lain in wait for him as he was about to depart. He was past thirty and was beginning to consider himself too old for girls still in their teens. Consequently when Gwen wished to hold him for the rest of the evening she was obliged to resort to subterfuge. She would ask for his opinion on some matter upon which she was in doubt or beg him to help her out for the rest of the evening at a game of cribbage. Once she asked him to play at "hearts" with her in a tone that would have made any other man suspicious of her at once; but, whether Underwood understood her or not, he gave no responsive sign.

Gwen never saw Underwood, who eschewed social functions, except on these visits to her father. The first time the former called after the resolution she locked herself in her room. One would have supposed that instead of his having cause to be afraid of her it was she who was afraid of him. At his second call, during which an important business matter kept him with her father till 10 o'clock, on hearing him in the hall about to take his departure she went down on purpose to see if he showed any disappointment at not having seen her at the time of his last call. The business matter he had been discussing engrossed his attention, and he went out with simply a "Good evening."

"Papa," said Gwen to her father the next morning at breakfast, "I am thinking of making one exception in my New Year resolution. In case I do how about the car?"

"The only exception, so far as the car is concerned, is marriage."

Gwen pouted. It was evident that marriage was not to be considered in the case to which she referred.

Mr. Underwood did not have occasion to call on Mr. Caruthers again for six months. Then he came intending to remain only long enough to secure the latter's signature to a document.

While the two men were talking in Mr. Caruthers' smoking den Gwen was waiting in the drawing room for them to end their conference, for she desired to speak with Underwood before he left the house. In this instance the meeting was unusually prolonged, and every now and again Gwen noticed that the words were spoken in a low voice, for the door of the smoking room was but partly closed, and when they were uttered in an ordinary tone she could hear something of what was said. What she was waiting for was to ask Mr. Underwood what kind of car she should select, for New Year's day was approaching, and she was anticipating her promised reward.

Now, there was great risk in Gwen's consulting the only man who was likely to make her break her resolution upon the character of the prize she was to win by keeping it. Underwood seemed to be oblivious to her having any other intention than what appeared on the surface. It is not to be asserted that Gwen did have any other intention. It is quite likely that if she had she would not admit it to herself.

This was in November, and but six or seven weeks remained for Gwen to keep her resolution and win the car. Therefore it is not surprising that she should be thinking about what kind of car she would ask her father to buy for her. Underwood gave her the points pro and con of different cars and recommended a make that he used himself as one very easily handled. Would she like to try his car? She thought she would, but feared for her resolution. However, the time was so nearly up that she concluded to venture.

The afternoon appointed for the drive Indian summer weather prevailed, and there was a genial languor in the air. Gwen had been "good" for ten months. With so indifferent a person she did not think it dangerous to put out a feeler. For the first time she received a response. She tried hard to stop, but the ruling passion was too strong for her. She went further and was met halfway. Presently Mr. Underwood, not waiting for a new advance, plunged into violent lovemaking, followed by a declaration.

New Year's morning came round, and Mr. Caruthers said to his daughter, "Well, Gwen, can you assure me that you have done nothing during the past year to draw any man into a proposal?"

Gwen looked first at the ceiling, then at the floor, then out of the window, but made no reply.

"You don't mean, sweetheart," continued the parent, "that you have lost your car?"

"I don't know."

"If you have I'm very sorry. I have put aside $5,000 for the purpose."

"Five thousand!"

"Yes."

Gwen was silent for awhile, then said, "I'm afraid, papa, that in order to win I'll have to get married."

"Don't do that unless you can give the man you marry your heart."

"I'm not quite certain about that."

"Whom have you drawn into your net?"

"George Underwood—only I fancy he drew me into his net."

"George is a splendid fellow."

"And the car he uses is a splendid car."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Why, you see, papa, when the end of my probation was coming and I was thinking what kind of car I should have I asked Mr. Underwood the kind he would recommend. He recommended one he used himself and offered to take me out in it. I just thought I would try him a little teeny weeny bit. Giving him an inch, he took an ell."

The father burst into a laugh and, taking his daughter in his arms, hugged her.

"Well, sweetheart," he said, "what are you going to do?"

"I can't possibly give up the auto."

"How about marrying George?"

"Oh, I suppose I'll have to swallow him."

"Good! When you make up your mind tell him so, and I'll order the car."

"I've told him already."

There was another kiss, and the parent went away to telephone his congratulations to Underwood. Desiring the young man for a son-in-law and having been asked by him for permission to pay his addresses to Gwen, Underwood had been apprised of the situation and enabled to take advantage of it.

And now an excellent husband and a numerous progeny have removed all temptation from Mrs. Underwood to flirt, and she is narrowly watching her oldest daughter, fearing that she may inherit her mother's delinquency.

When some men attempted to do things it looks like driving a railroad spike with a tack hammer.

This is the 525th day that the British Empire has been at war with Germany

FINANCE AND WAR.

A luminous and timely paper of more than common interest was read before the Royal Colonial Institute at the first meeting of the present session, by Mr. Ellis Powell. Mr. Powell, who is well-known as the author of a work on "The Evolution of the Money Market," chose for his lecture an important chapter of the same great subject—the alliance between the British Empire and the Money Market. From the moment when the war broke out it was recognized that sound finance would be the mainstay of Great Britain and her allies in the tremendous conflict. The enemy knew this and had done his worst to bring about financial disaster in London. That his machinations failed was due to the fact that the Empire was protected by "The adamantine bastions of modern finance." In tracing the development of that gigantic organism in relation to the British monarchy, Mr. Powell fixed upon the period that saw the Black Death, the battle of Crecy, the reign of the Second Richard and the rise of Wycliffe for its first manifestations. With its beginnings the commutation of feudal dues from payments in service or kind to money payments was closely associated. By the year 1450 the change was practically complete. With the change money began to be "a socially invigorating and inspiring force." But for nearly two centuries more the British people continued to be but backward pupils in the school of finance. They were slow to comprehend the principles of aggregation and investment. Instead of investing, they hoarded. Just as fast as coin was put into circulation it vanished from sight. Down even to the close of the Tudor regime, English wills give amazing illustrations of this habit. Mr. Powell cites a will of 1597 in which Richard Bellasis, bequeathing £64 to his sister, explains that the money is "within a litelle poursee of silke ribbon, within a littell lether bagg, which is put within a white lether showe, and lieth in the west end of the highest floore of the presser in my stodye at Morton where the glasses stand." The testator also mentions £500 "in current coine of goulde of several sorts all which is now lapped up in one several thinne piece of lead." Another sum is in a hollow place in a wall, and another in an "ould barrell in the storehouse." There was, indeed, one form of investment among the wealthy. They put much of their money into gold plate, and thus the craft of the goldsmith grew into the business of the bankers. At a time when safety for money deposits was not easily attained, their shops became trusted repositories of wealth. About the beginning of the 17th century it was becoming usual to receive interest for money deposited. It became a loan bearing interest. In 1571 the maximum was ten per cent. In 1624 it fell to eight, and twenty years later to six. In the last year of Queen Anne's reign, it was reduced to 5. In 1824 the usury laws were all repealed and people were left to make their own bargains.

A stage of great interest and importance in the development of finance was reached about the middle of the 16th century when "aggregated capital took the joint-stock form. The individual dies; the company lives from age to age." The merchant adventurers of England first banded themselves together for the discovery of lands, dominions and seigniories and for the extension of commerce in the reign of Queen Mary Tudor. Before the close of the 17th century three great corporations on the pages of Imperial history had been organized—the East India, the Royal African and the Hudson Bay Companies. "In the existence of these early Empire-building companies," says Mr. Powell, "lies my justification for speaking of a three hundred years' alliance between the Empire and the Money Market. Imperialism and joint-stock enterprise are twins, born in the same era—the 16th century—and of the same parent, Finance." During the 17th century the goldsmiths developed into bankers, and what Avebury called the Union Jack of Commerce (the cheque) became known in the mechanism of exchange. The Jews, who returned to England in the Cromwellian regime after an exile of 350 years, did much towards the accomplishment of the revolution, bringing that "capacity for subtle financial finesse which is not part of the racial endowment of the British people." In 1694 the Bank of England was founded, the sum of £1,200,000 having been subscribed in a few hours. A noteworthy provision—quite intelligible to those who carefully read the history of the Stuart period—was to the effect that, if the Bank advanced any money whatever to the Crown without the special permission of Parliament, it was to forfeit treble the value of its advances. The country was then undergoing the strain of a war, and then, as in later times, the Bank rendered adequate help. Gradually the Bank won recognition as the Banker of the Government. After 1751 it was tacitly admitted that the Bank of England alone should be entrusted with the management of the public debt. Still there was no formal contract. While it was banker to the Government, it was never a Government bank; nor does the Government own any bank stock. "But the fact of being banker to the Government and necessarily in its financial confidence has been one of the most powerful of the many influences which have combined to build up the primacy of Threadneedle street." The country bankers look upon the Bank of England as their model, and their knowledge of the bank's high standards had a moral effect which they could not resist. They were the better and stronger for the discipline of the stern schoolmaster."

The prestige of the Bank of England from Culloden to the Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars was constantly increasing. When Waterloo was fought, it was no longer to be challenged. It dominated London and held the financial supremacy of the world. On the finance of which it was the centre depended British success in the Napoleonic struggle. Fifty years after Waterloo the Overend-Gurney crisis and its crash occurred and twenty-five years later the Baring trouble, and its remedy. Twenty years later the Bank of England inaugurated periodical meetings of the great bankers. Thus was organized an inner cabinet of finance. Four years afterwards the nation, the Government and the banks were face to face with the most trying emergency that the Empire's history has known. Then, says Mr. Powell, was demonstrated to the world magnificently and conclusively "the beneficent power of modern finance as a bulwark of civilization." And that Mr. Powell's seemingly reasonable optimism may be justified and his best hopes fulfilled is the earnest prayers of millions of people within the British Empire and beyond its confines.

"GANOOK."

The present war is beginning to remind one of the story of the fight between an Irishman and a German that took place before Serbia exploded a bombshell in Europe.

The two battlers agreed before the fight that when either had had enough they should cry out "Ganook," which in the German language means enough. They went at it hammer and tongs, and within a few minutes the German had the Irishman thoroughly whipped, but the Irishman never said a word and the German continued to pound him. Finally the Irishman turned on the Teuton and gave him an awful drubbing, and the German yelled out "Ganook! Ganook!" The Irishman paused and looked at his opponent and then blurted out, "Begorra, I've been tryin' to think o' that word for the last fifteen minutes."

In the early stages of this great war, if the Allies had known any word that would have brought about peace, they undoubtedly would have used it, but as it was they had to take a severe beating before they were in any shape to fight, and now that they are beginning to crowd the Hun it is not surprising that they are beginning to hear a faint echo of the German calling "Ganook! Ganook!"

GLIMPSES INTO THE PAST

From The Daily Intelligencer, Jan. 10 1868.

The school elections are as follows:—

Ketcheson Ward — Messrs. Thos Wills and Merrick Sawyer.

Baldwin Ward—Messrs. Jas. Smith and W. A. Shepard.

Coleman Ward—Messrs. Geo. Walton and E. J. Sisson.

Samson Ward—Messrs. F. McAnnany and Chas. L. Coleman.

A terrible affair occurred at Owensburg, Tenn., when Sheriff Parkington attempted to arrest an old man named Duncan. Duncan drew a pistol and shot off the Sheriff's thumb. Parkington's son then fired, killed Duncan, whose son coming up at the moment fired, killing young Parkington instantly. Seeing his son slain, Parkington then shot young Duncan through the heart. Owing to the extensive relations of both parties, further trouble is apprehended.

Not Strange.

It is strange why the London Globe should think that "nothing has been more remarkable in this war than the whole-hearted manner in which the overseas dominions have come to the assistance of the mother country in men, money and material." "We be of the blood," and should our conduct have reflected supineness or indifference, it would certainly have been a potent indication of our unworthiness of the high heritage to which we proudly lay claim.—Hamilton Spectator.

As It Should Be.

The British War Office has at last announced the establishment of a rule by which the soldier in the ranks who serves his country in battle is to get his deserts. Officers' commissions are to go to the men who have served their time in the ranks, with preference given to those who have seen active service in the various fields of fighting. This is as it should be. There has been far too little promotion from the ranks. Many privates and N.C.O's who are given medals for bravery and ability would be better rewarded and the nation better served if they were placed in positions in which their bravery and ability would be utilized to greater advantage.—Stratford Beacon.

English Navy and American Trade.

The other day when the British authorities seized the United States mail coming from Europe we were angry. We cried out loudly and rightly, perhaps, against this high-handed proceeding.

England has interfered with our sea rights to a certain extent, at certain points and in certain ways. But it cannot be denied that, on the whole, the British navy has rendered inestimable service to our commercial interests.

She has restricted our trade with Holland and Scandinavia, and our German trade is non est. But the big sea highways are open and our total volume of overseas trade has grown enormously. Our export returns are the biggest in the history of this country and at the present time the United States leads the world in exports.

This we could not possibly have done had the British navy not patrolled the seas and policed its waters.

It is fitting that we insist that the emergency measures adopted by Britain shall be revoked as soon as possible. But it is extremely imprudent and foolish to keep dogging a power without whose protection of the seas our commerce would have been reduced to a beggarly trifle.—Buffalo News.

The Poets' Corner

A Song of the Sword.

I am the Sword;
Yea, babble of peace as ye will,
I am the Master still;
For mine is the ultimate word,
When I speak, naught else is heard.

Since ever the world began
I have been lord of man;
When the first anvil rang
'Twas of the sword it sang,
And the forge of Tubal roared
As he hammered the ruddy sword.

Sceptre and orb and crown
At the flash of my wrath sink down,
While the bat spreads dusky wings
O'er the urns of mighty kings
That I broke and cast aside
And crushed in their pomp and pride.
For those I love I crown,
And those I hate, cast down.

Potent to slay or shield,
Lord of the stricken field,
Where flaunting pennons stream
And sparkling lances gleam,
Men come to be judged by me
And I utter the Last Decree,
For I am the Sword,
And, babble of peace as ye will
I am the Master still.

SECURE AGAINST BLOCKADE.

No Navy In the World Big Enough to Patrol All Our Seaports.

Apropos of blockades the United States occupies a unique position among nations. A blockade of its seaports is absolutely impossible. There are not ships enough in the world to achieve it. Between Bangor, in Maine, and Corpus Christi, in Texas, there are forty ports connected by rail with the vast network of iron rail which extends over all parts of our country.

There are forty ports where cotton and wheat and cattle and canned and salted foods could be placed on shipboard, and a foreign power could no more blockade all of them at once than it could prevent the shad and the salmon from swimming up our rivers to spawn.

In the event of war we would be immune from invasion except from Canada. Invasion of any great nation, or at least continued armed occupation of the soil of any great nation which is separated by an ocean from its adversary, is practically an impossibility. There might be some places where foes could land, but there would be no place where they could re-embark, for those who came would stay. A foreign flag would never float over any interior city.

Fascinated.

The woman sitting opposite me in my hotel dining room spoke French to the waitress fluently, but there was an untidiness about her letter "r" that betokened English, and a wateriness about her eye that I thought betokened liquor. She was aged and—for all the world—she was "Sairey Gamp." She ate her tripe flauntingly. And she ate it voluptuously—not sectioning it with knife or fork, but rolling it omelette wise about her fork like an Italian with macaroni, and I followed each mouthful with my hungry eyes and opened my own mouth slightly each time and thrilled at her dexterity as when I watch a motorcar being lowered into the open hatchway of a ship.

Oddest Parasite In Creation.

The royal Bengal tiger is infested with one of the strangest creatures that ever lived. It is said to be a fact easily demonstrated or proved by one who has access to a zoological collection that the web of the foot of tigers of the above named species is inhabited by a bloodsucking insect about the size of a common flea which is a perfect counterpart of a tiger in every particular, shape, claws, tail and stripes included.

Cynical.

The Maid—I found a four leaved clover this morning. There's an old saying that the finder will be married within a year. The Bachelor—Indeed! I was under the impression that the finding of a four leaved clover was an omen of good luck.

"It's as good as you'll find in these parts," retorted the native, with justifiable local pride.

A Painter's Troubles.

The desire of the Bank of England officials to discover forgers has sometimes led to curious mistakes. On one occasion the painter, George Morland, in his eagerness to avoid his duns, retired to an obscure hiding place in Hackney, where his anxious looks and secluded manner of life induced some of his neighbors to believe him a forger of notes then in existence. The directors, on being informed, dispatched some dexterous detectives to the residence, but Morland's suspicions were aroused by their movements in front of the house and, thinking them bailiffs, escaped from the back to London. Mrs. Morland informed the visitors of her husband's name and showed them some unfinished pictures. The facts were reported to the directors, who presented Morland with two twenty-pound notes by way of compensation for the alarm.

The Jellyfish.

The bay of Naples abounds in medusae, or jellyfish, often growing as large as two feet in diameter and weighing fifty and sixty pounds. Some of them shine at night with a greenish light and are known as noctiluca (night lanterns) by the natives. The jellyfish sometimes make migrations in great groups, sometimes so large and so thick as to impede the navigation of vessels, like the floating plants in the Sargasso sea of the tropics. These shoals of medusae, as they are called, may be so dense that a piece of timber plunged in among them will be held upright as if stuck in the mud, and ordinary rowboats cannot force their way through them. Their migrations have never been explained. They are irregular and occur at no particular season of the year and under no particular influences.

Old English Bribery.

Bribery, according to an expert on the subject, first became a recognized mode of securing votes in the reign of Charles I. It was afterward improved upon by George III., who lost no opportunity of enforcing its claims as a good vote getter. "If," he wrote to his chief adviser on one occasion, "the Duke of Northumberland requires some gold pills for the election it would be wrong not to satisfy him." The king was not altogether selfish in this matter of spending money, for the gold pills came out of his own medicine chest, the civil list, whereas his successors drew upon the secret service cash for the corruption of the voters.—London Chronicle.

Pursuing an Elephant.

Any one who has once followed a traveling elephant will not show any undue haste to repeat the amusement, said a man who has hunted big game in Africa. The elephants sail along at an average pace of six miles an hour, regardless of the country, and stop for a bath or a short siesta perhaps once every three days. Anything more exasperating than following very fresh spoor at a dog trot hour after hour in a blazing sun, only to find at a late hour in the afternoon that one was forty miles from camp, with no food or water anywhere in sight and that the elephant had increased his lead from one mile to ten, it would be difficult to imagine.—Exchange.

Shall Woman Propose?

Of course women should propose. It is women who change their entire lives by matrimony; it is women who take on colossal responsibility by matrimony. The woman should surely be allowed to choose the man for whom she feels herself able to work and give.

Men propose; men have had it all in their own hands up to now, and if they have married the wrong woman they have only themselves to blame for it.—Women of the World.

Nutmegs as Medicine.

A drowsy state after meals is what we should welcome, for it is the most favorable condition for good digestion. Nutmegs may produce it because their effect is to increase the flow of gastric juice. The nutmeg is much used by doctors as a remedy in weak digestion. If one has a keen appetite he does not need nutmeg, for appetite is the most powerful stimulant of the flow of gastric juice. If the appetite is not good the digestion will be feeble, and then the addition of a little nutmeg will be found of benefit.—London Answers.

The Gentle Bloodhound.

No real reason exists for the common belief that the bloodhound is a fierce animal, ready to tear the person whom it may be tracking to pieces. It is, on the contrary, rather noted for its gentleness, even seeming timid, unless especially trained to attack. The origin of the breed, according to Count Le Couteulx de Canteleu, the greatest living authority on the subject, is from the St. Hubert of St. Hubert's abbey in the Ardennes. It dates from the earliest ages, and the breed certainly existed in the time of the Gauls. As regards the name bloodhound, the Count Le Couteulx believes that when fox hunting in something like its present form was instituted it was found that the sleuthhound was not fast enough for the purpose, and the present foxhound was evolved from various material, and about this time it became usual in speaking of the old hound of the country to call him the bloodhound, meaning the hound of pure blood (as might be said of a blooded horse), to distinguish him from the new hound or foxhound. There is only one breed of pure, genuine bloodhounds, and that is the English.

Geometry.

Plato is said to have written over his door. "Let no one ignorant of geometry enter here." Today such a restriction would reduce his visiting list. Perhaps outside the professional mathematicians he would have no one at all. All the artists, the philanthropists, the historians, to say nothing of those ladies and gentlemen of leisure whose critical faculties are so importantly developed nowadays, would certainly be absent and, worse still, would suffer very little at their exclusion. Yet, going back into the centuries for guests, a distinguished company might have been assembled of those who without being famous merely for mathematical studies, were known to have understood and loved the subject. The Greek philosophers would have been there in a body, Alphonse X., Omar Khayyam, Albert Durer, Leonardo da Vinci, Descartes, Pascal, Napoleon and Lewis Carroll.—Exchange.

Preparedness.

Obadiah, trying to cross the field where the bull was, attracted the attention of the beast, whereupon began a foot race of great personal interest to Obadiah. His neighbor, Silas, saw the race start in a fair field and saw Obadiah putting his best foot forward and mending his gait at every step in an eagerness to make the creek, a good mile away. Obadiah, legging it at the peak of his effort, managed to make the bank a scant few feet in advance of the bull and essayed to leap the thirty feet between the banks. He landed in the middle of the creek. Silas observed this dispassionately and looked back over the mile of field with a judging eye. He hitched his shoulder and spoke:

"You cert'nly can't spect to jump that creek, Obadiah, 'thout gittin' a longer runnin' start 'n that."

Bleeding by Bowshot.

That all diseases can be cured by bleeding is still firmly believed by several savage tribes and especially by the Papuan negroes. When one of their physicians becomes convinced that it is necessary to bleed a patient he goes several feet in front of him, and then, drawing his bow he fits a sharp pointed arrow to it and, after careful aim, fires the arrow into the vein which he desires to open. The arrow, it is said, invariably goes straight to the mark, and the thorn or splinter of glass with which it is tipped does the work as successfully as a lancet. Moreover, the patients never show the slightest fear, since they are convinced that from the moment the arrows pierce their veins they will begin to recover.

True to the Pole.

The needle of the compass does not always point directly north. It is subject to daily and yearly variations, as well as those which require centuries to complete. The needle is, however, "true to the pole," although it shifts thus every hour in the day. It does so only in obedience to the laws which control its action. Variations which are constantly taking place in the terrestrial magnetism produce corresponding changes in the needle.

Mercury's Accident.

"What's the matter with your office boy?"

"He hurt himself while running when I sent him on an errand the other day."

"Come off! You don't mean to say"—

"I do. He never did the errand, but he found out why a horse had fallen down in the street.'

Can This Be True?

"Why is it that you never hear of any female after dinner speakers?" asked the old fogy.

"I suppose it's because a woman tells all she knows before dinner is half over," replied the grouch.

"Old Grabber ought to be satisfied with the money he has."

"He is satisfied—so much so that he wants a lot more of exactly the same kind."—London Tit-Bits.

Echo of Sound.

An echo is a sound reflected from a distant surface. Sound is produced by waves or pulses of the air, and when those waves come in contact with a cliff or wall or other opposing surface they are reflected like light or heat, and the returning waves cause a repetition of the sound. The word echo is of Greek origin. According to ancient mythology, it was the name of a mountain nymph, daughter of the air and the earth. Echo was one of Juno's attendants, but her loquacity displeased Jupiter, so she was deprived of the power of speech by Juno and permitted to answer only when she was spoken to. Afterward Echo fell in love with a beautiful youth named Narcissus and was changed into a stone, which still retained the power of voice. Milton personifies her thus:

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen
Within thy airy shell,
By slow Meander's margent green,
Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair
That likest thy Narcissus are?

Diamond Back Terrapin.

To select a real diamond back terrapin amateurs should be guided by these distinguishing and characteristic markings: It is of a greenish, dark olive color, sometimes running to spotted gray, yellow on the plate which surrounds the shell and has concentric dark stripes along the plate on both shells. The sides of the head are a dirty white, sprinkled with small black spots. The bottom shell is of whitish yellow. The males are much larger than the females and have the concentric streaks much better defined. The female has the more delicate flesh. The male can be distinguished by his toe nails, which are much longer than those of the female.

Thunder at Sea.

The Astronomical Society of France has again taken up the discussion which has been before it on several previous occasions, and that is the statement that thunder is never heard at sea. The statement was originally attributed to Baron von Humboldt, and it has been frequently questioned, but those who insist that they have heard thunder at sea have also stated that the peals were not so loud as on land. A large number of seamen have been found to agree with the scientist, although it is suggested that the other noises prevailing on shipboard during a storm may be the reason why the thunder often passes unnoticed.

Maker of Dictionaries Not Envied.

Can any one envy the maker of dictionaries? To Sir James Murray the readers were drawn in, those who were to garner words. Some hundred thousand "works" were examined by a staff of assistants with two eyes and a bit of brain, and they may have got the spelling right. But think of the task of the searcher, going through the books he loves in the search for a word! And missing all else. For the man with the demand upon him would read the Bible with one eye for misprints. No such torture for the lover of literature could be devised like the making of a dictionary.—London Chronicle.

The Word "Slave."

An interesting instance in history of the twisted application of the names of a people is afforded by the case of the word "slave." Now, the Slavi, tribes dwelling on the banks of the Dnieper, derived their appellation from "Slav," meaning noble or illustrious. In the days of the later Roman empire vast numbers of these Slavs were taken over by the Romans in the condition of captive servants, and in this way the name of the tribes came in time to carry with it the idea of a low state of servitude, the exact antithesis of its original meaning and one that has survived to this time.

Courtesy.

Shall courtesy be done only to the rich and only by the rich?

In good breeding, which differs, if at all, from high breeding only as it gracefully remembers the rights of others rather than gracefully insists on its own rights, I discern no special connection with wealth or birth, but rather that it lies in human nature itself, and is due from all men toward all men.—Carlyle.

The Gobelin Factory.

The Gobelin factory was founded in 1515 by Francis I., who scoured Europe for the artists and the makers of beautiful things who could bring luster to the capital of France. Under his auspices came Leonardo da Vinci, and he it was who laid the foundations for the collections of statuary and paintings that have made Paris famous. The Gobelin tapestry factory was among the least of his undertakings.

The Pessimist.

"I've had an offer for my house. A man wants to pay me $3,000 more than it cost me."

"You'll accept, of course."

"Yes, but I'm afraid the man's relations will find out he's crazy before I can close the deal."—Exchange.

Parnassus Grass.

The beautiful grass of Parnassus, which is found in marshy quarters of Great Britain, derives its name from its supposed origin on Mount Parnassus.

CHAPTER XXVIII

Annunciation

The next day, as though in atonement for a week of rain, came in warm, windless, and full of sunshine. The long galleries and mossy shingled roofs sent up blue clouds of mist; the ground smoked like a furnace. All the birds of the forest awoke at once. Crows, jay-birds, thrushes, red-birds, yellow-hammers, and mocking-birds chattered in a community of domestic joy, and hopped from limb to limb, carrying in tight-closed beaks small bits of straw and moss, more precious now than the most thrilling of songs.

Truth wondered whether it was the effect of the day or whether indeed her grandmother's morning greeting hinted of tenderness unfelt before. Certainly the minute inquiries about her health were unusual.

During that day no reference was made to the conversation of the previous night, not even when Truth saw a thick letter intrusted to Nickey's care.

Avoidance suited Truth's mood. The agony of mind through which she had passed brought, as reaction, a sort of desperate turning to impersonality. She threw herself into the arms of the day, more than content to wander, unthinking and unremembering, among budding shrubs and springing grass. The warm and perfumed air intoxicated like a drug; realities dissolved with the mists of morning.

The following day shamed the first for brightness. Immediately after breakfast Mrs. Dexter announced her intention of airing a certain old trunk while the sunshine lasted. Truth was fascinated by the provocation in her grandmother's smile. Could it be entirely her own fancy that gave that secretive sparkle to the old lady's eyes, that quizzical, almost jocose intonation to every spoken word?

Mrs. Dexter, like all good Southern housekeepers, had two great housecleanings a year. One took place in Autum, in which summer draperies, hall mattings and linen chair-covers were scrubed or boiled, according to their kind, after which neat straw casings received them for the winter. Summer garments were "rough-dried" and stored away in "deer-tongue" and chipped cedar wood. Andirons were repolished and set into place; quilts exhumed from scented nooks, winter clothing unpacked, sunned and hung, ready for use, in the big wardrobes. The spring cleaning was, naturally, a reversal of this entire process; but in both the old house underwent a scourge of scrubbing-brushes, and yellow soap. Particular care had always attended the order of procedure; so many days were given ta "beating," so many to scrubbing, and the last allotted to examining and repacking old trunks. When, therefore, Truth heard the order given to bring from the remotest attic closet the most venerable of all these sarcophagi of memory, she was justified in feeling something more than ordinary surprise.

The old lady bustled upstairs, her keys jangling as she went. Following her appeared the entire household force,—Uncle Norah, Nickey, Poline, the maid, Aunt Big Mary, and, as a recruit, long Sam Turner of the stables.

When at last the heavy box stood in Mrs. Dexter's bedroom, and the servants had vanished, Truth, with an effort at interest, remarked, "What a queer, old-fashioned trunk it is, with that round top, and the brass nails! I don't seem to remember seeing that one before."

"No, it has not been brought down often. It was my weddin-trunk. We thought it very fine in those days."

With the opening of the lid Truth's interest increased. Across the inside, on the curving top, a procession of fashionable belles of the period appeared, simpering "Amelias" in unbelievable hoop-skirts, and with small ruffled parasols held daintily.

Truth laughed. "Did you ever dress like that, grandma?"

"Indeed, I did! I have such a dress and bonnet in this very trunk, the one I was wearing when your grandpa first saw me." A faint flush stole into the withered cheeks. Truth laughed again, teasingly, at which the blush deepened.

The old lady stooped over and began turning up the corners of articles folded in the upper tray. "There's nothing here but old letters and a few Confederate souvenirs. Now help me lift out the till. It's heavy! Carefully, dear!"

In the next "till" lay the dress of which she had spoken,—a pretty silk of cherry color and black, in tiny checks; very small and plain in the waist, but with a skirt like a circus-tent. The bonnet was crushed beyond recognition of a shape. The cherry bows showed streaks of faded yellow.

Something indescribably pathetic lives in old trunks. They are the true lurking-places of memory, the strongholds of the past. Museums and Art Galleries may shelter long lines of classified antiquity, but in a trunk the only method of classification is love. Useless things here are the precious; and the history of a broken heart is often written in a worn-out glove, a tawdry valentine, a little pair of toeless boots.

Truth kept her eyes lowered as the old lady lifted this dress, smoothed its wrinkled folds in silence, and laid it back.

Under the light, shallow tray the main part of the trunk appeared. Truth's attention flew to a large box of green pasteboard, very shiny, and with corners battered to a brown pulp.

"What's in that big green box?" she cried.

"What we're after," said Mrs. Dexter, importantly. "Come, help me lift it on the bed." Mrs. Dexter panted a little, more in excitement, it would seem, than from exertion. "It is for you to open, Truth."

"Me!" said Truth in surprise. She lifted the cover warily, as Pandora might have lifted her box. The odor of camphor and stored years flooded the room. Under a layer of tissue lay the long, white robe of an infant.

"A baby's dress!" said Truth in a tone of hushed wonder.

"That is not all. Take it out!"

Underneath spread a white petticoat, embroidered almost to the band, then a yellow flannel shirt, also heavily worked. A little cap came next, a tiny shirt, a jacket of faded pink, and last, a pair of tiny slippers of quilted white silk. Truth's hands trembled until she could scarcely hold the things. A faint embarrassment crept over her. "Why, grandma, you never showed me these before!"

"You might not have appreciated them before," rejoined the other, with a sort of chuckle.

"But whose were they. Why have you kept them so long?"

"This is a christening set. You wore it, and John, your father, before you. Such hand-work cannot be bought these day. Just look at that little shirt! It is like spider-webs!"

"Or meshes of moonbeams," said Truth, dreamily. She caressed the exquisite fabric in silence, and then thrust two fingers through the armholes. "I wonder why," she said at length, "baby-clothes makes you feel so funny,—with a sort of happy ache at your heart!" Mrs. Dexter watched every expression of her face as a chemist watches a changing fluid. Something in the old lady's shining eyes made Truth drop her own. She stooped to return the little garment, and, in doing so, caught sight of an old rattle, a bauble of pearl and tarnished silver. One of the four bells was broken; the remaining three gave out a stiff, flat tinkle. Truth toyed with it an instant, then threw it to the bed. "It sounds like the laughter of dead children," she said with a shudder.

Mrs. Dexter took it in her hand. "Not dead children, only dead years," she said with gentle reproof. "Our loved ones cannot die, for they live in our hearts. Look, Truth! Your first little teeth were cut on that handle. You can see the scratches yet!"

"I don't like sad, old things," said Truth, petulantly; "I like live, new ones!"

"That is good news," said Mrs. Dexter gravely, in a voice which she strove hard to make natural, "for it is about new ones that I was going to speak this morning. This is only a christening set, you see. All John's other baby-clothes I gave away during the war, and yours, poor child, were not worth perserving. We had lost everything, then. But we've got these as a beginning, and the best thing for us now is to add new ones as fast as we can."

"New ones!" echoed Truth, incredulously. The strange light burned again in her grandmother's eyes. A fit of trembling came, apparently without cause. "I—don't—know what you—mean—by new ones!"—but even as she spoke the angel's wing touched her.

Mrs. Dexter threw out both arms with a cry. "Oh, my baby! my Truthie! Have you never guessed?"

Truth stared a moment as one bereft of reason, then fell to her knees. The agony of dread and love and joy was almost too much. The old dizziness swept down, but this time it was with a feeling of physical rapture She could not meet Mrs. Dexter's eyes for the very poignant sweetness of her shame.

The innocence in which many young girls of the Suoth are still reared would seem incredible to their more advanced Northern sisters. Matrimony is a romantic mystery, nothing more! and realities which in themselves are pure, being of God's determination, seem to these poor vestals something to be endured in shame and silence. Absurd if may be, and archaim, and, in some sense, cruel; yet something may be said for a system which, in this pragmatic age, can yield the possibility of a new Annunciation.

CIVIC IMPROVEMENT LEAGUE OF CANADA

The Conference of the new Civic Improvement League of Canada, to be held in Ottawa on the 20th inst., is likely to be one of the most important municipal gatherings that have ever been held in the Dominion. The Conference will be held in the large Railway Committee room of the House of Commons, and representatives are likely to be present from all the nine provinces. Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, and other large cities will be officially represented. Among the principal speakers will be Sir John William (Chairman and the Hon. J. W. Hanna, Provincial Secretary of Ontario.

It is anticipated that municipal questions will be dealt wth under three main heads, namely:

Municipal Government and Finance, Immigration, Unemployment and Public Health Housing, Town Planning and Local Improvements.

It is agreed that there is urgent need for discussion of the many civic problems that have already arisen and are likely to arise in the future as a result of the war. Great interest has been aroused in the new movement in all parts of the Dominion and there is extraordinary unanimity with regard to the need for a national organization to study and discuss municipal problems.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ALL THE WAY

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

THE VALUE OF TRUTH

Truth in business is just as important as truth in every-day life; truth creates confidence, establishes good-will and builds a reliability that will not be wrecked by the storms of competition.

Through three generations people have learned to place reliance on the advertised words of Scott's Emulsion, because they are untarnished, unexaggerated truisms about a household remedy of real and actual worth.

The popularity of Scott's Emulsion is increasing as intelligence advances, because in these days of adulterations it continues to guarantee pure cod liver oil medicinally perfected with glycerine and hypophosphites to build strength, improve the blood and strengthen the lungs. It is free from harmful drugs—a wholesome food-tonic, truthfully advertised.

A Common Sense Decision

The Story of One Born to Society

By MARTHA V. MONROE

David Bartlett, from the day he began to talk, showed that he would be a stutterer. As soon as he grew old enough to be taught anything his parents made every effort to overcome a blemish that was sure to seriously interfere with his career. But despite the fact that they placed him under the care of various persons who pretended to be able to cure him, the defect remained.

The greater the loss from an imperfection the more aggravating the case. From early boyhood David gave promise of future prominence could he be freed from his unfortunate impediment. In schools he showed an originality that surprised his teachers. In college it was admitted that were he able to speak easily he would be a leader in debate. He made one attempt to address his fellow students, but so lamentable was his failure that he never tried again. On graduating he was assigned one of the principal parts because he was entitled to the honor, but the college authorities well knew that his defect would compel him to decline it.

By this time Bartlett was a man among men and received from them the forbearance and sympathy due him. In his childhood it had been different. Children who do not realize the misfortunes of others are cruel to one another. From the time David was old enough to have playmates he received now and again jests and laughter upon his misfortune. Boys are more unsparing of one another than girls, and, though David's immediate companions learned to pass his defect unnoticed, no sooner was he thrown in with a strange boy than his first failure of utterance was received with laughter.

This drove him from playmates of his own sex, and, being a boys' boy, he did not care to be relegated to the companionship of girls. There was one girl, however, whom he favored because she was not favored by girls of her own age. Mildred Swayne suffered from a misfortune similar to that of David Bartlett. She was born with a contraction of certain muscles of the face which, when she was pleased or amused, brought a contortion instead of a smile.

Those persons who have similar defects are apt to shun one another. The reason for this may be more easily understood than expressed. It is enough to say that it springs from sensitiveness. David must have overdone this sensitiveness so far as Mildred was concerned. At any rate, he rose above it and showed his sympathy for her by juvenile attention to her. He was not ashamed in children's gatherings to pair off with her, though he knew that his doing so subjected him and her to being considered two unfortunates whom others would not care to favor. Mildred, notwithstanding her boy friend's impediment, was very proud of his attentions and always stopped him for a chat when they met.

Nowhere do we find more pure selfishness than in that society which considers itself the elite and into which those who are without its pale are striving to enter. Favors are not bestowed simply from liking or admiration, but for an expected return, the returns usually being invitations. David Bartlett was not in a position at the age of twenty-two to entertain his friends. He was also handicapped by his speech impediment. Nothing remained but intellectual and moral worth, a very poor stock with which to shine in what is called society. David's parents had occupied a social position in their younger days and expected him to do the same. His manner would have entitled him to such even without his brilliancy, but he found that his inability to return favors gave those who were really his inferiors an advantage over him, and his defect of speech caused him to be shunned wherever it was possible without gross rudeness. Therefore, notwithstanding the desire of his mother that he should occupy that social position to which he was born, he one day resolved that he would not accept another invitation to a society function.

David disappeared from society without being missed. Indeed, his dropping out was rather a relief to ladies who were old friends of his mother and who felt obliged to invite him to their houses. This is not surprising. Charity there is in the world, but there is always a well defined dividing line between it and sacrifice. Soon after David began to decline invitations he disappeared from the scenes of his childhood and youth and was forgotten by all except his parents, a few intimate friends and Mildred Swayne, who, having finished her education for a teacher, entered upon her duties in a grammar school.

* * * * * * *

"Oh, heavens," exclaimed a girl at an evening social function, "there's that David Bartlett! I haven't met him anywhere in an age. I must slip out or I'll have to speak to him, and if I do I shall have to endure him for the whole evening unless some one comes up to take me away from him."

"It's two years since he left home. I understand that he has been cured of his stuttering."

"You don't mean it! How did he do that?"

"No one knows. Some say he cured himself. Some say he was cured by a process that he is pledged not to reveal. No one can get any information about the process except those who suffer from an impediment of speech. To such persons he will reveal his method, but to no one else."

David Bartlett had returned to his home cured of his defect. Occasionally he would pause for a moment while speaking and seem to be going through some mental formula, but even this was growing less and less frequent. He had been studying the profession of the law during his absence and soon after his return was admitted to the bar. Those society ladies who had known him before his departure did not long shun him, for he was admitted to be one of the most entertaining men in society.

While social position is gained or maintained by a rendering of what society demands, it is a mistake to suppose that its requirements are those things which can alone be bought with money. A society composed of those who have nothing but wealth to recommend them is very dull. The success of favorites in society has often been due to conversational powers. David Bartlett was full of ideas that he knew how to express in a manner to insure their appreciation. While he had suffered from his defect ladies had tried to get out of his way. After his cure many a woman, bored by a man who knew nothing out of the sphere of his occupation, on seeing Bartlett approach would draw him on with a smile in order to exchange him for her companion.

Bartlett entered the legal world as a junior partner of a law firm, but soon established a firm of which he was the head. His principal work was in court, where he was recognized as one of the best men at the bar to present a case, and his eloquence gained him an enviable reputation.

Naturally, from having been shunned, especially by those unmarried women who were seeking to make a marriage for an establishment, Bartlett came to be considered a catch. He was not only prominent, but making money. While he was not interested in punishing those who had shown the least consideration for him while he had suffered his impediment, it was but natural that he should feel no great affection for them. On his return to society he found a number of young women who had not found partners—at least partners such as they were looking for—and among these ladies were several who were not abashed at attempting to charm him. Not by word or deed did he indicate to such that he remembered their attempts to shun him when other and more desirable parties were at hand.

As Bartlett advanced in his profession and was known to be receiving large fees, so did the struggle on the part of a number of spinsters for his capture increase. Nor was this struggle confined to those who wished to wed him in order to be at the head of his fine home. Being a man naturally captivating to women, there were those who gave him their hearts without the asking.

Presently a rumor spread through the social world that he had surrendered. It was whispered that a certain widow who possessed a large fortune had agreed to unite her emoluments with the rising fortunes of the intellectual attorney. Then followed an admission on Bartlett's part that he had become engaged, but he did not name the lady. Society was agog to learn if the widow was to be the bride, and those women who had hoped for themselves tore the said widow, figuratively speaking, in pieces.

One day it was rumored in the social circle that Bartlett's cards were out. This was not considered probable, for no one of the elite had received them. But the suspense was soon ended, for the cards turned out to contain an announcement of the marriage of David Bartlett and Mildred Swayne.

Who was Mildred Swayne? Nobody knew. Then some one informed some one else that Mildred Swayne was a teacher. To this was in time added that she had suffered from a facial blemish that had been removed by surgery.

Bartlett was married—there could be no mistake about that—and since he had sent cards only to relatives and a few intimate friends—a very few of them in society—society could not call upon his wife, and he was no longer in the swim; he was a social suicide.

And so the waves of the social ocean closed over the talented Bartlett. As to his wife, she had never been in the swim. No one could understand why one with such a fine future before him could wreck it by taking a nobody for a wife. Bartlett thus stated the case to an intimate friend:

"Society was of no use to me. Nearly every unmarried woman in it was hunting for a man who could give her the means to keep up a fictitious appearance. I wished and needed a wife of a different kind. My interest in life is confined to my home and my profession. Why should I waste my time with people who care nothing about me and whom I care nothing about?

"I have married a woman with a heart that is overflowing with tenderness and sympathy, a woman who will be not only a true friend, but a congenial companion as well, a woman whose worth I can fully appreciate and who will be faithful unto death to the man into whose keeping she intrusted her future life. Oh, that more marriages were like ours!"

Reporting A Battle

An Experience of a Newspaper Correspondent

By MILLARD MALTBIE

"Kitson," said the editor in chief to me when the pan-European war broke out, "you must go to Europe at once to report the big fight that's on. Take the first steamer that sails, and don't fail, for it may be the last. The ships by which you must cross the ocean fly either the British or the German flag, and the cruisers of each will be trying to capture the other's vessels."

"Which army shall I accompany?"

"Any army. Go where there is the severest fighting."

My chief's surmise that the ship on which I sailed might be the last proved correct. At any rate, it was the last for awhile. I reached England when the Germans were attacking Liege and asked for permission to go over with the British troops that were being sent across the channel. I was refused. No newspaper correspondents were to be allowed with the army. I lost some time trying to convince the war office that the world was hungry for news of the fighting, but made no impression. I crossed the channel as soon as I could find a boat to take me and reached France at a time when the Germans were sweeping southward toward Paris.

How I got to the scene of the fighting I wouldn't like to say. I went by motorcar till the Germans took it away from me, then bought a horse cheap. The owner expected hourly some cavalryman would take it without paying for it, and when the animal was taken from me on the same terms I walked.

The great scene of my life was one morning when I reached an elevated point where I could look down on the battle raging between two lines, each so long that, though I was raised several hundred feet above them, I could not see either end of either army. Near by the thunder of heavy ordnance, the b-r-r-r-r of machine guns, the rattle of rifle firing, sounded like a storm, while on either side the sounds grew fainter and fainter in the distance, like rolling thunder dying away. Directly beneath me was a battery of large cannon screened from the enemy by a thicket. On a knoll slightly in advance of it stood an officer with a telephone receiver to his ear and a transmitter at his lips, giving the gunner the range. They were firing beyond the point they intended to hit, and he was doubtless giving them orders to reduce the distance, for I noticed that with every shot their shells exploded nearer to the French lines till at last they burst in a field where infantry were standing under arms and the shrapnel scattered among them caused frightful gaps in their ranks.

Above aeroplanes were moving hither and thither, some darting away to the east, some to the west and some coming from both east and west. Doubtless those moving on long distances were carrying news of the battle on the wings to the commander in chief in the center.

At that time the Germans were entering French territory and soon began their rapid movement toward Paris. Before nightfall the roar of battle had been moved so far southward that it now sounded like the mutterings of a storm that had passed. My work consisted of seeing the fighting, reporting it and sending my communications to my paper. So I remained behind to attend to the last two parts of my duties. About sunset, seeing beneath and in advance of me a hamlet, or, rather, the ruins of a hamlet, one house of which seemed to have been but little damaged, I descended from my perch, intending to use the remaining house for shelter and a place to write my dispatch.

I found the house in better shape than one would have supposed. True, several shells had made openings in the walls, but had not exploded within. Some of the furniture had been knocked into kindling wood, but there were a bed and bedding which had not been even disarranged. It occurred to me that after I had finished my scribbling, in case no opportunity occurred to reach a point where I could send it, I would use that bed for the night.

I found eatables, lights, almost any article I needed. So, having helped myself to the contents of the cupboard—cold meat and bread and butter—I lighted a kerosene lamp and wrote out a description of the fight I had seen.

When I had finished my work I went outside to reconnoiter, undecided whether it would be better to attempt to send off the report at once or wait till morning. I stood alone, surrounded by ruins. All was still except for an occasional distant boom and the creak of ambulances, farther on, taking up the wounded. A young moon cast a dim light over all. I walked down the street that separated the ruins and saw not a living thing. But here and there I passed a corpse of a soldier. Two, the one wearing the French uniform and the other the German, lay near together, the German having fallen upon the Frenchman so that they seemed to be sleeping in an embrace. A German boy—he looked no more than seventeen—was sitting with his back against a stone wall, where he had bled to death from a wound in his chest. He had doubtless been thinking of home.

Rather than remain among these grewsome scenes I preferred to take my dispatch to a station where I would be permitted to send it, but I knew not which way to go, and if I moved about in the dark I was liable to be shot. So I returned to the house where I had prepared it with the determination of sleeping on the bed I had seen till morning. Throwing myself on it dressed and without turning out the lamp—I did not relish darkness in such a place—I tried to sleep, but the exciting scenes I had witnessed during the day and the grewsome scenes about me kept me awake for awhile; then, tired with the exertion I had been put to, I fell asleep.

But not for long. I dreamed a shell had exploded above me, and I woke up in a tremble. And now I saw the first living thing that appeared to me in this wrecked abode. A door stood ajar, and in the opening was the face of a girl peering at me. On it was an expression of dread. The moment she saw that I was awake she drew away and closed the door.

Starting up, I ran to it and pulled it open. I could see nothing, but heard steps descending a pair of stairs.

In a twinkling I understood what it all meant. When the tide of battle had surged over this house the inmates had hidden in the cellar. I called out: "Je ne suis pas Allemand, mademoiselle. Je suis Americain." (I am not German. I am American.) Then, taking up the lamp, I descended the stairs. Huddled together was an old man, an old woman and several children. The girl I had seen stood between me and them.

Never have I seen a more pitiable sight. These people were living in a cellar, into which little light permeated. The old persons and the little children suffered most, the former being chilled by the damp atmosphere, the latter deprived of proper food. They had evidently entered their place of concealment in haste, for they had no bedding or other articles to make their imprisonment less distressing than it might otherwise have been.

I stood looking at them, pitying them; they looked at me, supposing that an enemy had discovered their retreat and expecting I know not what calamity. My first thought was to reassure them.

"The soldiers are gone," I said in French. "There is no danger. Come upstairs."

"Are you sure, monsieur?" asked the girl.

"Come and see for yourself."

I retraced my steps, and she followed me, but on reaching the floor above stood looking about her, as if dreading to see some fierce creature who would butcher her. As soon as she was satisfied that there was no such person about she called to the others, who came straggling up, looking furtively about them.

It was some time before I could quiet them so that they would communicate anything to me, but presently I gleaned from the girl that they had been in the cellar nearly two days, during which time they had had nothing to eat. They were all, especially the children, nearly famished. I helped them to get out what eatables there were at hand, and in a few moments they were eating ravenously, though before the girl began to eat she returned to the cellar and brought up a bottle of wine. For there are few persons in France but drink the wine of the country.

The family insisted on my occupying the only bed that had escaped being wrecked, but I resolutely declined, taking my blanket to an upper room, where I could see the stars through a hole in the roof made by a shell. There I stretched myself on the floor, feeling that if the dead were without the living were within. Consequently I went to sleep and slumbered till the sound of distant cannon awakened me, and I knew the slaughter had recommenced.

I decided to spend the day hunting an opportunity to send off my report, and after partaking of a breakfast of what was left in the larder I sallied forth. But I did not get very far. Guns, provisions, ammunition, were being hurried forward along the roads, and I concluded when evening came to find a place between thoroughfares to spend the night. So I repaired to the house I had occupied the night before.

I was disappointed to find the family gone. But when I reflected that they had nothing to eat I saw that their going was necessary. Not caring to spend another night amid such lonely surroundings, I determined to look for other quarters and found them in a barn that had escaped being leveled by shot or fire, though the uhlans had taken the contents for their horses. I succeeded in scraping together enough hay to make me a bed, on which I slept quite comfortably.

The next morning I had no difficulty in reaching a point where I could send my reports, for I was arrested by the French and hustled off to Calais. There again I met with grewsome sights, for the place was full of wounded.

Finding that reporting battles and fighting my way to the battleground without any assurance of being permitted to stay there was discouraging, I concluded to make a virtue of necessity and chose another field for my labors.

The war has changed much since then. There are more men, more guns, more shells, more aeroplanes. And that new kind of fortification, the trench, has become the principal defense in military engineering. More men are upon the air and more down under the sea. They fly higher and dive deeper. If so great have been the changes within a few years, what shall we have in another quarter of a century?

It isn't that the Germans hope to be able to hold Egypt, but what they want is to get one of those twenty-two mile guns within range of the Sphinx.

HE WASN'T MAKING MONEY.

But Still He Had a Good Reason For Congratulating Himself.

He was a renter, and at least every other season he was occupying a different farm. By a friend's advice he had moved the year before into an entirely new field, a dozen miles from his usual haunts, and had not been seen for several months. When the friend did see him at last it was quite by accident, business taking him into the old man's neighborhood. The farmer hailed him from the cornfield and came out to the fence.

"Hello!" said the friend. "Is this your farm?"

"Yes; and I jist come over to tell you, sir, that I'll be ready to pay part of that claim of your'n before long."

"You must be doing well."

"I think I'm doin' fust rate, and I'm powerful obliged to you, sir, for headin' me this way."

"I am always glad to help if I can."

"I knowed that, sir, and that's why I come away over here so far from home. It's kinder strange to me, but as long as I am doin' as well as I am I am goin' to stand it."

"Are you making any money?"

The old man's face brightened perceptibly. "No, I ain't sir," he replied hopefully, "but I'm losin' it slower'n I ever done in my life before."

LIKE A SUBMARINE

The Fur Seal In Many Ways Resembles an Undersea Boat.

ITS HABITS IN THE WATER.

Although It Can Swim Only When Submerged and Must Rise to the Surface Every Few Minutes, It Is a Marvel of Speed.

We have come to regard the soaring albatross or the condor as the prototype of the aeroplane. When we look for a natural model for the submarine we find it well made in the body of the fur seal and, fully suggested by its method of progression in the sea, for it travels there only when wholly submerged.

Unlike, however, the "unterseebote," the fur seal is not fitted for swimming on the surface; it only rises there to survey, to breathe and to sleep. It never attempts to swim with head above water on any course, no matter how short. It rises when undisturbed or not alarmed, looks about with head and neck well stretched up above the surface of the sea, fills its lungs with air (literally compressed), turns its head down and with its powerful anterior flippers drives itself below the surface to the depth of six or ten feet, then ahead on that level. Thus submerged the body of the seal glides through the water as swiftly as a swallow in the air—it is a vanishing streak to our eyes.

How long it remains thus submerged when traveling no one has any definite knowledge, but the best consensus of opinion gives it a rise at intervals of every three or four minutes to breathe—that is, a pause of less than two or three seconds, with barely more than its nose and eyes above the surface, for exhalation and renewed inhalation—when down goes the trim body to speed ahead again.

When our submarines were first brought out a trip of more than 300 miles from base was the utmost limit of their cruising. Today they have been so perfected that they can cruise safely more than 3,000 miles from their base. Therefore in this connection it is interesting to know that the fur seal makes a submarine journey in the north Pacific ocean of more than 5,000 miles from its base on the Pribilof islands, in Bering sea, and then returns.

An animal which can not only make such an extended journey, but can steer its course over an uncharted waste from point to point, month by month, with positive regularity and in perfect time, must be a fine type of swimming machine, and it is.

There is to be observed a close resemblance between the cigar shaped submarine boat and the body form of the fur seal. As we view them laterally, this resemblance is complete. They are both driven ahead by feathering screws, and they are both kept on the level of their submerged course at a given distance below the surface by rudders.

Then we observe that the periscope, to which the submarine craft owes all of its efficiency, is duplicated exactly by the seal's nose and eyes which are all that it ever lifts above the surface when startled and in flight of passage.

Again we note that the fur seal as a submarine has a great advantage over the human boat—it has eyes that can look ahead and around under water—how far we do not know, but it is reasonable to assume that the seal's eye can see as far under water as the eye of a camera can, which we have the evidence of in good records.

Then, too, it also has an acute sense of hearing under sea, for we know that the whirring of a propeller's screw will drive all the seals away for miles around a steamer. We know this because some of the early pelagic sealing vessels were fitted with small auxiliary screws, and these, when put into use, had to be removed.

With reference to the powers of destruction, of course our fur seal boat has no torpedo tubes, but it can and does "shoot its mouth off" at fish with a deadly certainty.

In this connection it is interesting to note that seals do not catch fish by pursuit of them—not at all. They shoot down from above upon the backs or up from below to strike at the bellies of their finny prey.

How fast these phocine submarines can speed up under the stimulus of excitement or fear no one knows. But it is well known when a vessel is coming down before a gale of wind from the islands, logging fourteen to sixteen knots, that a bevy of fur seals will often follow the ship for hours and repeatedly swim by it, swim around it and then renew the chase and circling of it.—Henry W. Elliott.

Why He Missed Her.

"So you're little Willie Woodby?" said the new minister after Sunday school. "I called to see your mother yesterday, but, unfortunately, she was not at home."

"Oh, yes, she was," replied the boy, "but I guess she took you for the installment man. You look somethin' like him."

A Possible Solution.

"How can a man be as stupid as that fellow and live?"

"Some of the men at the club have a theory that he was raised on a vacuum bottle."

BLUNDERS OF AUTHORS.

Some Queer Things of Which Fiction Characters Are Guilty.

For many years a favorite pastime of the literary dilettante has been to ferret out mistakes made by celebrated authors. Writers of the highest standing have been guilty of making "bloomers," such as Flaubert's assertion that "the two adversaries were placed at an equal distance from each other." Mistakes of this sort have been excused on the ground that the authors were working under pressure of inspiration and were therefore likely at any time to make minor errors.

Stories of today do not, as a rule, appear to be written under the stress of temperamental excitement. Yet, in spite of their seemingly cool sophistication, they are not lacking in curious mistakes. A short list of these errors has been compiled by a writer:

I screamed in silent rage.

A girl tore her eyes from the stage, but her ears still lingered.

"I will never speak to you again as long as I live," hissed Dolly. (Just try to hiss it!)

Her feet were swollen from standing in wet, salty water.

Like Adela, he had dark brown hair, with enormous black eyebrows, a mustache and a short beard.

What, therefore, was our surprise to find Tish sitting by the fire in her bath robe and slippers with a cup of tea in her lap and her feet in a tub of water.

The Long And Short Of It!

TALL Men, Short Men and Stout Men frequently find the Clothes question quite baffling!

Those who have worn our Special Sizes for such proportions know that the solution here is easy.

The worried ones are invited to try on our Suits and Overcoats, in Slim, Stout and Extra Sizes, just to see how easy it is to find a fit.

If you think it necessary to have your Clothes made to order, then you have not given this Store a trial.

We have all our sizes cut in several shapes to accommodate just such cases as yours. We are positive that we can

Fit You To A "T"

WEAK FROM GRIPPE

HOME MISSIONARY TELLS HOW SHE RESTORED HER STRENGTH

"I am a Home Missionary, was weak and run-down after a hard spell of La Grippe. I had headaches, indigestion and pains in my chest, and was tired all the time. A friend asked me to try Vinol and the result is I am free from those troubles and I feel well and strong and able to go to work again." Mrs. Hattie Johnson, Towanda, Pa.

The reason Vinol was so successful in building up Mrs. Johnson's health is because it is a constitutional remedy which contains peptonate of iron to enrich and revitalize the blood, the nourishing properties of beef peptone and the healing medicinal extractives of fresh, healthy cods' livers, all combined in a delicious native tonic wine, without oil.

We wish every person in Belleville who is suffering from a weakened, run-down, devitalized condition, would try our Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit them. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

Officers Installed

The following officers of Belleville Lodge No. 297 Royal Templars of Temperance were on Thursday evening last installed:

Past Select Councillor, Bro. Fred Henry; Select Councillor, Bro. John Henley; Vice-Councillor, Bro. B. O. Frederick; Financial Sec., Sister E. E. Bowen; Rec.-Sec., Sister E. McMichael; Herald, Sister A. Bowen; Vice-Herald, Sister Maguire; Inside Guard, Sister Bennett; Outside Guard, Bro. Pauley.

Belleville Lodge No. 297, Royal Templars of Temperance is certainly in a very prosperous condition, having initiated some thirty new members the last quarter.

The elected representatives to Grand Lodge are Bro. B. O. Frederick and Sister E. E. Bowen.

Letters to the Editor

We are at all times pleased to insert letters upon subjects of local or general interest. It must, however, be understood that we in no way identify ourselves with our correspondents' opinions.

All letters should be written on one side of the paper only, and should be as concise as possible. They must be accompanied by the name and address of the sender, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

January 8th, 1916.

Editor Intelligencer.

There appeared in your paper a letter in which a gentleman makes several grave accusations against the committee appointed by the County Council to deal with the repairs on O'Brien's bridge and we, the committee referred to, welcome the opportunity thus offered of vindicating ourselves of these charges and at the same time giving to the ratepayers, through the medium of your valued paper, some explanation of the difficulties encountered in this work and the steps we have taken to fulfil the responsibilities devolving upon us in connection therewith.

Under the direction of the Council we made a careful examination of the condition of the bridge and found that the south pier had settled to an alarming extent, shearing off some of the bolts and rivets of the steel superstructure and rendering the bridge unsafe for use by the public. We therefore, closed the bridge and immediately took steps towards accomplishing the necessary repairs.

Our first action was to ask Mr. Allen, a resident engineer, to make examination of the bridge and advise us as to the best method of executing the repairs in such a manner as to ensure a sound permanent structure, and deeming the problem one that called for considerable expenditure we did not rely soley upon Mr. Allen's judgment, but consulted with Mr. W. A. McLean, the Provincial Engineer of Highways for Ontario, an engineer of high reputation as proven by his having been elected president of the Good Roads' Association of America, and with Mr. Bishop, a celebrated bridge and railroad engineer of Montreal, and the written opinion of both these engineers agreed with that of M. Allen, that the only safe course to pursue was to raise the two steel spans resting on the damaged pier, drive a cofferdam of steel sheet piling around it, and remove the old pier and the mud and debris upon which it rested until a solid foundation was reached upon which a new pier could be built. We also have had two other experienced engineers visit the bridge at no cost to the county and both these men agree that the course pursued is the only way to make a safe permanent job.

The engineer's report we submitted to the Chairman of the Finance Committee who called a meeting of some of his committee who were convenient, along with the reeves of three front townships which are more directly interested in this work, and they directed us to proceed with work along the lines of the engineer's report.

This we immediately did, and engaged the services of Mr. Allen as superintending engineer to go ahead with the work.

When the weather became too severe to allow the repairs to be proceeded with economically and with good results, we, after due consideration of all the circumstances, decided to close the work until spring, presuming that the ice would be in condition to drive over during the winter months.

After the steelwork was raised, relieving the pier in question of its weight, it was found that the pier could be moved perceptibly by the use of a crowbar, proving beyond all doubt that the foundation was insecure and that we were justified in immediately taking the course recommended by the engineers to save the bridge from complete collapse and to protect the lives and property of the public who use it.

The evidence of the sheared rivets and bolts on the steelwork is alone, in our opinion, sufficient to refute that of Mr. Daniel Poucher and others who according to Mr. Brintnell affirm that the pier has not settled any for the past two or three years, and Mr. Brintnell's suggestion that the pier which "had settled a little on one end could have been levelled up at very little expense," though poor economy but doubtless well-meant, would in our opinion be simply putting additional weight on the already insecure foundation, thus precipitating disaster to the bridge.

Mr. Brintnell further denounces our actions in procuring the necessary equipment to perform the work of repairs, alluding to this as being sufficient to "build a railway bridge of ordinary dimensions." Anyone at all familiar with this class of work will treat this statement with the contempt it deserves. Does Mr. Brintnell think that steel filing can be driven with a sledge hammer or holes drilled in concrete with a brace and bit?

Mr. Brintnell also states that he does not lay the blame entirely upon the committee, but partly to the ratepayers themselves for putting such extravagant and reckless men in charge of county affairs. Had the county foreseen Mr. Brintnell's engineering and business abilities and selected him as one of the County Council and Committee, no doubt he imagines the so-called-blundering and reckless expenditure would have been avoided.

Signed, BRIDGE COMMITTEE.

* * *

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir.—There appeared in your paper on the 5th January last, a letter written by Mr. D. Poucher of Thurlow, setting forth charges of wasteful extravagances, carelessness and incompetencies of a character rarely met in municipal affairs in connection with the repairs to O'Brien's bridge near Plainfield.

I am also informed that these extravagant repairs—only repairs mind you—will cost the taxpayers of the county about $20,000. We are constantly told that there is wastefulness in the expenditure of public money in the northern part of the county, but surely nothing has ever occurred equal to the charges in this piece of repair work.

There has been so much said on this matter and there are such wide spread feelings of dissatisfaction about it that in the interests of the taxpayer and all concerned there ought to be an investigation under the Municipal Act by a county judge. In this way the real facts could be got at and a repetition of such a thing in the future avoided. Any attempt to cover it up will only make the taxpayer justly more suspicious and properly more dissatisfied.

The County Council meets this month, let them turn the searchlight upin this $20,000 of repair work.

ALEX. MOORE,
J. P. of Thurlow.

SHELLS ROLLED ON HIM

KINGSTON, Jan. 8.—James Bedore, employed on the manufacture of shells at the Locomotive Works, was severely injured while at work Friday night. In some manner the shells that were piled near where he was stnding began to roll and Mr. Bedore was caught beneath them. His leg was badly broken and his back also severely injured, which necessitated his being hurriedly taken to the Hotel Dieu.

CRABS IN FULL DRESS.

Some Species Are Fond of Finery and Clothe Themselves Carefully.

Many of the crab species of shellfish clothe themselves. Some species dress elaborately by taking small pieces of different colored weeds and sticking them on the shell, so as to look like a stone covered with weed. They spend hours, with the utmost perseverance, in making these pieces adhere, by trying the same piece over and over again till they succeed. They have a fine sense of symmetry and always put a red piece on one limb to match the red piece they have put on the other, and a green piece to match a green piece, though how they know red from green in the dark pools where they live is hard to say, unless it is by taste or smell. When once their dress is completed it improves the older it becomes, as the weed actually grows on them.

Another species, with like habits and a most decided love for finery, was described at a meeting of the Linnaean society, as clothing themselves with bits of bright colored seaweed, sponges, and so forth. If the crab be despoiled of its garments it at once proceeds to clothe itself again with care and deliberation, manifested not only in the selection of its articles of apparel, but in the proper shaping of them by means of its pincers.—London Spectator.

STARTING A BRIDGE.

The Boy Who Was a Good Kiteflier Came In Handy.

Some years ago there died in Nebraska a man named Walsh, who as a boy started a suspension bridge. When Walsh was about ten years old the first steps for the construction of the suspension bridge at Niagara were taken. The first thing necessary was the stretching of a single wire across the chasm. The engineer in charge had thought of a way to get it across.

"What boy is the best kiteflier in town?" he asked.

The Walsh boy was named as the best kiteflier in the town of Niagara Falls, and the engineer accordingly asked that he be brought to him. He was made to understand that he must fly his kite across the Niagara river. He flew it across and allowed it to come down on the other side. Men were there to seize it. Then the engineer attached a wire to the string on his side, and the men on the other side detached the kite and by means of the string drew the wire across. By this, in turn, a cable was drawn across, and the bridge was well begun.

The Attorney In England.

The use of the word attorney denotes a belated mind. Since Nov. 1, 1875, attorneys have ceased to exist, their title merged by law into that of solicitor of the supreme court of judicature, says a writer in the London Mail. The name had long been used as a term of abuse. Johnson observed of an acquaintance that "he did not care to speak ill of any man behind his back, but he believed the gentleman was an attorney."

Archbishop Trench in 1859 noted that the word attorney was going out of favor and that the lower branch of the legal profession preferred to be called solicitors. So when the judicature act of 1873 was before parliament a clause was inserted abolishing the obnoxious title. But with our delightful conservatism we still honor the "attorney general."

A Good Substitute.

She—Why do all the men flock around that foolish Miss Sweetthing? She hasn't a grain of sense. He—No, but she has a sense of discretion. She doesn't require any of her admirers to display any more intelligence than she possesses herself.

Donkey-like.

Redd—What kind of an engine have you got in your new car? Greene—A donkey engine, I guess. It's awfully stubborn.

Spontini's Decorations.

Casparo Spontini, the composer, regarded himself in the light of a demigod, and when inspirations crowded upon him he donned a wide, togalike gown of white silk with a border of gold and a fez of white silk embroidered in gold from which a heavy tassel hung down. With great dignity he sat down before his desk, and if a grain of dust was visible on the paper on which he penned his music he rang the bell impatiently for his servant to remove the obstacle. Spontini owned so many medals and decorations that they could no longer be accommodated on his breast. At a grand musical reunion at Halle an old musician remarked to a comrade, "See how many decorations Spontini has, while Mozart has not one." Spontini, who overhead it, replied quickly, "Mozart, my dear friend, does not need them."

Novel Rabbit Catcher.

Crabs are put to a curious use on certain parts of the Devonshire foreshore. They are used to catch rabbits. Having located a promising burrow, the snarer takes a crab and affixes a short length of lighted candle to the back of its shell. The behavior of a crab which finds itself in a narrow inclosure is well known. It begins to run. It therefore starts away up the burrow at top rate and presently the rabbit is horrified at the sight of a jog trotting flame coming to his sanctuary. Off he goes for the other exit, only to find himself, when he emerges, in a trap.—London Spectator.

His Mental Incapacity.

The Court—So you ask divorce from this man on the ground of mental incapacity. What proof have you that he's insane? The Woman—Who said he was insane, your honor? The Court—Why, you say he is mentally incapable. The Woman—Yes; incapable of understanding that I'm boss.

An Unusual Case.

Stranger—Seventeen years ago I landed here in your town broke. I struck you for a dollar. You gave it to me, saying you never turned a request like that down. Citizen (eagerly)—Yes? Stranger—Well, are you still game?

Window Boxes.

Before putting earth in window boxes whitewash the inside of the box. This not only keeps a wooden box from rotting, but prevents insects.

A Woman's Right.

"And how long have you voted?"
"Twelve years."
"And how old are you?"
"Twenty-two."

To travel hopefully is better than to arrive, and the true success is to labor.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Takes Things Easy.

"Does any one think your son has a future?" "Yes—the life insurance companies."

She Valued Her Head.

Henry VIII. after the death of Jane Seymour had some difficulty in getting another wife. His first offer was to the dowager Duchess of Milan, but her answer is said to have been: "I have only one head. If I had two one should certainly be at his service."

His Feat.

"Your friend had quite an acrobatic promotion."

"How's that?"

"Went up over a lot of other people's heads."

Still on High.

The moon boasted.

"And yet when I left the earth all the wiseacres said I would come down like a stick," she cried.

Josh Billings used to say that when a man begins going downhill all creation seems greased for the occasion.

Sir John Lubbock's Ant.

In the biography of Sir John Lubbock, later Lord Avebury, is an amusing story of the notice accorded to an odd pet in the Lubbock family. One of two illustrious queen ants, sovereign of one of the colonies upon which Sir John based his famous studies of the ways of the little creatures, attained the venerable age of fourteen years and then died. Several scientific journals spoke of her decease, and the news penetrated to France, where a distinguished French journalist, in whose mind, insufficiently acquainted with the possibilities of English orthography, ants and aunts were evidently confused, offered profuse condolences to Sir John "on the loss of his aged and valued relative."

Outwitting the Court.

"I understand that when Dibbles and his wife separated they parted the best of friends."

"So they did, unluckily for Mrs. Dibbles."

"Why so?"

"Dibbles pays her alimony every month and then borrows half of it back."

A Matter of the Future.

"When does the last train leave for Dobbersville?" asked the old lady at the ticket window.

"I don't know, ma'am," answered the elderly ticket agent, "but I don't suppose either of us will live long enough to take it."—Exchange.

SPORTING NEWS

HOCKEY

The Intermediates of Queen's University play against the local team tonight, and a fast game is assured. Queen's has an A No. 1 team, and the Belleville boys without much practice is going at top-notch speed. Every hockey fan should be present to-night to cheer the boys to victory.

Simple Enough.

A manufacturer of some patent compound came into the laboratory of an analytical chemist one day with a bottle containing an unwholesome looking mixture.

"I would give £20," he said to know what would make the water and oil in this mixture separate."

The chemist looked at the bottle.

"Very well," he said; "write out your check."

"Check?" the other echoed.

"Yes, your check for £20. You say you are willing to give that, and for that price I am willing to tell you what will make the water and oil separate."

The visitor hesitated a moment and then wrote a check for the sum named. The chemist carefully deposited it in his pocketbook, and then quietly dropped into the liquid a pinch of common salt. Instantly the water and oil separated, and whether the client was satisfied or not, he had got what he wanted, and he had paid his own price for it.—London Tit-Bits.

What Memory Is.

The correct way to increase the productivity of the memory is to link every new thing with an understood thought already in hand. Merely to memorize the Bible and thus to be able parrot-like to speak it "by heart" is not memory. Intellectually and emotionally to appreciate and understand one psalm or proverb is memory. To know where to put your finger on the right verse or passage of the Bible on your table is practical and useful recollection. Dictionaries, directories, encyclopedias, indexes and reference books do the mechanical part for you. Reason, association, adaptability and the perception of relationships are better than much Latin and more Greek, however beautiful and instructive these may be in themselves.—Exchange.

The Marriage Yoke.

The dull boy in the class unexpectedly distinguished himself in a recent history examination. The question ran, "How and when was slavery introduced into America?" To this he replied:

"No women had come over to the early Virginia colony. The planters wanted wives to help with the work. In 1619 the London company sent over a shipload of girls. The planters gladly married them, and slavery was introduced into America."

The Planets.

Taking our earth as standard, the two planets nearer the sun—viz, Mercury and Venus—are designated as inferior and the five which are farther from the sun than the earth—viz, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune—are termed superior. As established and accepted by astronomers, Mercury is 35,951,105 miles from the sun; Venus, 67,193,688 miles; earth, 92,894,800; Mars, 141,342,690; Jupiter, 483,313,340; Saturn, 886,108,900; Uranus, 1,782,742,060; Neptune, 2,788,761,300.

Too Bold.

There is a local legend concerning Salisbury cathedral, in England. The cathedral is celebrated for its lofty spire, and the legend is that once upon a time a prisoner found guilty of some capital offense was sentenced to death and had the option given him of being executed in the usual way or of throwing himself from off the cathedral spire. He chose the latter, and, wonderful to say, he escaped death. Some time afterward he wagered he would do it again. He did, but this time his body was dashed to pieces.

Origin of "Argonaut."

The term "argonaut" comes from the legend of Greek mythology relating to the celebrated expedition headed by the hero Jason in search of the golden fleece. Naut is Greek for ship, and the vessel which bore Jason and his party was called the Argo; hence the gold hunting expedition was called the argonautic expedition and Jason and his followers argonauts, for the legend says the vessel was the first that ever sailed. Her name, Argo, has been given to one of the constellations of stars in the southern hemisphere.

The Time to Marry.

Hepsey, the maid of color, had told the mistress she was to be married.

"Well, Hepsey," said the mistress, "I'm sorry to lose you, but I suppose it is all for the best. How long have you known the man?"

"About two weeks, ma'am."

"My! No longer than that? Don't you think you ought to wait and get to know him better?"

"No, ma'am," exclaimed Hepsey. "Ef I knowed him any better I sho' never would marry him."

That First Submarine.

Speaking of undersea boats, a correspondent reminds me that we can go back further than Cornelius Van Drebbel for the first submarine. Alexander the Great is said to have used them, Pliny mentions something of the kind and as early as 1579 an English gunner, William Bourne, patented a submarine boat fitted with "leather joints so contrived as to be made smaller or larger by the action of screws, ballasted with water and having an air pipe as mast."—London Standard.

Rameses I.

Rameses I. was the first king of the nineteenth dynasty in Egypt and ruled for a brief period about B. C. 1355. Beyond the fact that he waged war in Nubia, where he left an inscription and constructed some of the buildings of the Karnak, little is known of his reign. His mummy was found in 1881 at Deir-el-Bahri. His son, Seti I., built the Memnonium at Karnak in honor of his father's memory.

Old Postal Rates.

Our postal rates in 1824 were excessive. To send a letter thirty-six miles the cost was 6 cents. For over 400 miles the uniform rate was 25 cents, and as the mails were transported by stage coaches, the process was a slow one.

Didn't Raise Them.

A young housewife who lives in a suburban town went to the village store to make some purchases.

"These chickens look very nice," remarked the customer. "How much are they?"

"One dollar apiece, madam," was the prompt response of the obliging proprietor. "You can't find better poultry for the money in the whole country."

"One dollar," thoughtfully mused the customer, and then added: "Did you raise them?"

"Oh, no, madam!" was the hasty assurance of the misunderstanding storekeeper. "That is the same price I offered to sell them for yesterday."—

A Graceful Compliment.

Some famous compliments have been paid to members of the sterner sex, and one of the most gracefully turned was that uttered by Boileau, who, when the virtuous De Mesmes, president of the parliament of Paris, was elected an academician, congratulated him in these terms: "I have come to you, sir, in order that you may congratulate me on having you one of my fellow academicians."

WOMAN ATTACKED BY CHINESE LAUNDRYMAN

Serious Charge Against Quon Should of 311 College Street

TORONTO, Jan. 10.—Information of an alleged attempt of a Chinese laundryman to criminally assault her on Friday night was given to Crown Attorney Corley by Fannie Bender, 38 Ulster street, the victim, and the partial corroboration of her details by Peter Brown, 87 Chestnut street resulted in a warrant being issued on Saturday for the arrest of Quon Should, 311 College street, the laundryman mentioned in the woman's complaint who was arrested by Detective Holmes, and who will appear toiday in the Police Court on a serious charge

Mrs. Bender states that on Friday night she visited the laundry to obtain some goods left with the laundryman. At the time the store was deserted. A slight delay occurred, which was followed, the woman claims, by an attack by Should, who dragged her into a room at the rear of the store.

Her screams for assistance brought Brown from College street, who says that he was forced to not only fight Should but to withstand the attacks of three other Chinese before he could drag the woman into the street.

Belgian Consul Further Assured

OTTAWA, Jan. 11.—Mr. Goor, Belgian Consul-General to Canada has just received further assurance from the neutral members of the Belgian Relief Commission, through whom the relief to the thousands of famine-scourged Belgians is dispensed, that not an ounce of the supplies and food that has gone into the country has fallen into the hands of the Germans.

The Germans have violated all the laws that have previously governed warfare, all the laws of God and men, and have resorted to barbarity in its cruelest forms, but one trust they have kept and that is their pledge to leave untouched the food that is supplied Belgium. The invaders have robbed Belgium of the food she had stored, and of the means the people had of purchasing food, but they have not prevented the food from entering the country through neutral channels.

Mr. Goor's information comes direct from officials in Belgium, and has been communicated to the Treasurer of the Belgian Relief Committee's offices at 59 St. Peter street, Montreal. With this renewed assurance that wheat sent from Canada does not go to feed the enemies of the Empire, it is anticipated that many more will join the already large number of Canadians who have contributed the bags of flour, each of which keeps one Belgian family alive a month.

CHURCHILL COMMANDS SCOTS FUSILIERS

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Major Winston Churchill, former First Lord of the Admiralty, who resigned his subsequent Cabinet post of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and went to the front with his regiment, has been appointed to command a battalion of Royal Scots Fusiliers at the front in France.

According to Reuter's correspondent at British Headquarters, this will prove a stepping-stone to the command of a bridge, which is said to be Mayor Churchill's immediate ambition.

Says War Will End in One Year

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 10.—Frederick Palmer, the famous American war correspondent, who recently returned from the British front in France and Flanders, in addressing the London Canadian Club at noon today, predicted that the war would be over within a year, with the Allies the victors.

Mr. Palmer declared that a year ago the Germans were winning, although the British did not realize it, but that the advantage was now entirely with the Allies.

CROWDS RUSH TO COLORS TO AVOID CONSCRIPTION

Lord Derby's Plan Again Opens For Enlistments—Many Single Men Offer Themselves—Opposition to Bill Fast Fading Away

95,000 IRISH ARE ALREADY ENLISTED

Ireland Excluded From Measure—Redmond to Retire—Irish Nationalist Displeased Over Conscription Bill- Wants Ireland Included

LONDON, Jan. 10.—(Special.)—The Lord Derby recruiting scheme was reopened to-day for voluntary enlistments pending the passage of the military service bill. Despite bad weather, big crowds besieged most of the recruiting offices, many of the applicants being single men who wished to escape the stigma of conscription.

When the military service bill comes up in the House of Commons for second reading to-morrow, David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, is expected to be the star speaker in its defence.

94,997 Irish Enlisted.

The exclusion of Ireland from compulsory service led to a request for the numbers of the men available for military service and of those actually recruited in that country. This information was communicated in tht House of Commons to-day.

The men between 19 and 41 years of age available for military service in the four provinces of Ireland on last August 15 were approximately as follows: Leinster, 174,597; Ulster, 169,489; Munster, 136,637; Connaught, 81,392.

Up to December 15 the returns show enlistments approximately as follows: Leinster, 27,458; Ulster, 49,760; Munster, 14,190; Connaught, 3,589.

Thus it will be seen that the provinces of Leinster, Munster and Connaught, with a total of 392,626 men available for enlistment, have contributed 45,237 men, or 11.5 per cent., while Ulster, with 169,439 men eligible, has a record of 49,760 enlistments, or 29.6 per cent.

In Connaught there were 3,589 enlistments out of 81,392 men eligible, or only 4.4 per cent.

Opposition Melts Away

The strongest convictions are felt on every hand that the bill will pass the Commons when a vote is taken. In fact, followers of Premier Asquith declare that opposition to modified con scription "is melting away."

The Premier announced this afternoon that two days would be allotted to debate on the military service bill when it comes up on second reading.

Leaders of the Miners' Federation to-day threatened to call a general strike if the Government proceeded with its plans for conscription. Various districts have already voted on the matter, and all have rejected the Government plan by an overwhelming majority.

Quakers Dissatisfied

The Quakers are dissatisfied with the provisions of the military service bill because of "conscriptions objection." At a meeting in London representing the entire sect resolutions were adopted which were sent to Premier Asquith, setting forth that a large number of Quakers were not prepared "to accept compulsory service whether combatant or otherwise under military authority," and to compel them to accept such service would be "a violation of the freedom of conscience."

Redmond to Retire

LONDON, Jan. 10.—John Redmond's retirement from the leadership of the Nationalist party, and possibly from Parliament ,is extremely probable, according to The Morning Post's Dublin correspondent, owing to grave differencces of opinion within the party, especially on the question of military compulsion.

Mr. Redmond would have been in favor of applying the national registration scheme, the Earl of Derby's scheme, and Premier Asquith's compulsion bill to Ireland," the correspondent adds, "but strongly opposed compulsion in any form, either for Ireland or England ,and assumed a peremptory tone which would seem to indicate that he has a strong following."

How They Grab German Subs.

(Canadian Press Special)

ATHENS, Jan. 11.—A story which Lord Kitchener told during his visit here and which has not hitherto been published made a particularly deep impression here, "When the manoeuvres of the great fleet were had about a month ago to the north of Scotland," said Lord Kitchener, "Eight German submarines of the newest and strongest type went out with the purpose of getting to the fleet and playing havoc with the manoeuvres. One came to grief in our North Sea net. Others worked through and approached the fleet. But there was another net heading them off. They tried to break through, and get around to an opening. but there was none. Two more were lost in this effort. Finally the remainder decided to return to their base at Heligoland. But they could no longer find a way out. The gate into the net had been closed. Two more were lost desperately trying to get through. The remaining three finally were forced to come to the surface and surrender themselves. We took them intact, crews, submarines and all."

AVIATOR'S WIFE SUES

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Mrs. Claude Grahame-White wife of the well-known aviator, who is now a Flight Commander of the Royal Naval Air Service, has filed a petition for the restitution of her conjugal rights, an action which ordinarily is the prelude to a suit for divorce.

"Claude Grahame-White and Dorithy Cadwell Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bertrand Leroy Taylor of New York, were married in Widford, England, in June, 1912.

Boy Rescues Younger Lad

OIL SPRINGS, Ont., Jan. 10.—Cries for help from the river nearby reached the ears of 16-year-old Wright Evoy as he sat at his desk in school here this morning. He leaped from the room and got to the river just in time to rescue 10-year-old Gray Andrews, who had broken through the ice while skating. Evoy plunged into the icy water and brought the younger lad to shore.

A move already is on foot to secure a Royal Humane Society medal for Evoy.

MONTENEGRINS MAKE BRAVE DEFENSE

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 11.—A statement issued last night by the Montenegrin Consulate says the Austrian offensive continues to be pushed energetically against all the Montenegrin fronts and particularly to the north and east there has been desperate fighting. Although greatly outnumbered the Montentgrins were able to repulse the enemy several times, killing such numbers that a movement to recapture lost positions the Montenegrins were forced to climb over masses of bodies. Nevertheless, it was necessary to evacuate Berane, and after four days, fighting on the Mount Lovcen front, by resorting to asphyxiating gas the Austrians occupied the Montenegrin positions at Kouk and Retatz.

A REMARKABLE EWE

A ewe belonging to a well known Dorset prize sheep breeder, of Powerstock, has just given birth to four lambs, all of which are living and doing well.

Foe's Credit Has Collapsed

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Far more impressive than the new Russian advance as an indication that Germany and Austria are on the eve of disaster is the fall of the German mark and the Austrian krone, and the coincidental appreciation of the Paris cheque and the pound sterling in all neutral countries.

The slump in the mark and the fall in the Austrian krone in New York are gratifying to bankers here. The financiers of Holland, Scandinavia and Switzerland are at one with the bankers of America in their belief that the practical collapse of Hun credit, indicated in the recent sensational declines in the rate of exchange, foreshadows the beginning of the end.

In Stockholm, according to the correspondent of The Morning Post, German and Austrian values are now the lowest on record, while the rate for francs and pounds sterling is advancing steadily.

The same newspaper's Berne correspondent telegraphs that the remarkably sudden fall of the mark there in a few weeks from 108 to 92 is the chief topic in Swiss financial circles and the cause of grave misgivings in Germany. The fall of the Austrian krone in Switzerland is also distressing the pro-Germans, who, as a result of the illuminating fact that 60 Swiss francs can now purchase 100 Austrian kronen, plainly see the writing on the wall.

The Daily Telegraph's financial expert, reviewing the steady and now alarming fall in German credit with the only countries with which she can deal, as her fleet is bottled up and her sea-borne commerce. nil, says:—"It means the Huns will have to pay through the nose from this time on for whatever they need. Therefore the process of exhaustion will proceed more rapidly than ever.

"In fact," he sums the situation up by saying, "while her vast armies have come to an impasse, if not worse, in all the theatres of war, and her navy is a burdensome mockery, the silver bullets that are being directed against Germany in every money market in the world are steadily hitting the mark and hastening the inevitable."

Soldier Charged With Bigamy

WOODSTOCK, Jan. 10.—Pte. Edward Gooding, a member of the 71st Battalion bugle band, now stationed at Galt, was in Police Court this morning charged with bigamy. Gooding was arrested at Norwich yesterday and brought to Woodstock. He is in jail on remand.

He went to Galt with the bugle band over a month ago. While the band was stationed there he visited Woodstock and went through the form of marriage with Miss Stella Munro of this city. When he overstayed his leave of absence the authorities here were communicated with, when the fact of his recent marriage became known. It was found that the records at the armory gave Gooding as a married man, whose wife and two children lived at St. Mary's. He will appear before the Magistrate in a week's time.

LOTS OF ARRESTS IN YOUNGSTOWN RIOTS

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Jan. 10.—Believing that the situation is well under control following three days of tranquility after the rioting Friday night, preparations are being made to re-open the plants of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., in East Youngstown and Struthers.

The round-up of persons who are alleged to have participated in the looting Friday night, continued yesterday. Nearly 250 foreigners were arrested, while wagon loads of articles of every description found in their homes, and varying from shoes to dressed pigs, were brought to the East Youngstown police station.

The property loss from fire, incident to the rioting, is estimated at one million dollars.

Comparative Calm Succeeds Successful Russian Advance—Loss Exceeded 175,000— Planned to Relieve Pressure in Balkans

Headquarters of the Franco-Belgian Army in Flanders, Jan. 10.—Basing my opinion on the visible evidence of the defensive organization in Flanders, I can positively state that whatever violent attacks the Germans may be preparing against this sector of the front they are bound to fail with heavy losses.

Prophecies in this war have been invariably wide of the mark: therefore I will not attempt to make a guess as to the length of the titanic struggle, but I must record the impression, overwhelmingly borne in upon me after a few days of detailed observations on the spot, that the armies I have seen quartered here are implanted in this region so completely, so solidly, as to indicate that they expect to stay not months, but for an indefinite number of years.

Maze of Fortified Trenches

Although the headquarters war bulletins during the last twelve months have been remarkably silent regarding the activities of the opposing forces here, it would be a mistake to imagine that they have been sitting down idly.

At the battle of Yser, when the German drive was definitely broken, the French had here practically nothing to speak of in the way of defensive works. Since the tens of thousands of soldiers, working night and day, have transformed the whole country into a maze of fortified trenches, barbed wire obstacles and battery and machine gun shelters.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—General calm prevails along the eastern front. In Galicia the Russians are consolidating their guns, the enemy having ceased their costly counter-attacks and confining their activity to artillery and hand grenade attacks in a vain effort to prevent the Russians fortifying the positions won.

Street Fighting

The struggles for possession of Czartorysk (Volhynia) and Czernowitz (Bukowina) were particularly fierce, Czartorysk changing hands several times before the Russians, pursuing the Austrians from street to street, drove them out with the bayonet.

The Austrian official despatches persist in misrepresenting the true situation, and claim to have repulsed the Russians. These reports come through Berlin, and are entirely at variance with the Rusian official statements regarding the fighting.

Exceeds Dardanelles Losses

The Hungarian newspaper, Pester Lloyd, estimates that the losses on both sides of the Bessarabian battles so far exceeds 175,000, or more than the total British losses in the whole Dardanelles campaign.

Another Hungarian newspaper states on the authority of a staff representative that the fighting on this front has been the bitterest and bloodiest in the history of the war, both sides sacrificing men in a manner without a parallel in military annals.

Planned to Relieve Allies

According to The Times' correspondent at Petrograd, who is visiting the Russian Headquarters, the Russian offensive was secretly planned in order to relieve the pressure in the Balkans. Early apprised of this gigantic offensive in eastern Galicia, the Germans, he states rushed reinforcements across the Danube to the relief of their Austrian allies, leaving the Bulgarians to pursue the offensive in the Balkans.

FRENCH SUCCESSFULLY REPULSE ATTACKS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 11.—The afternoon statement:— Between the rivers Somme and Oisse our artillery has been active. An enemy detachment attempted to carry one of our positions in the sector of Armancourt in the region of Roye. It was repulsed by our fire. To the west of Soissons our trench guns destroyed a depot of rockets in the neighborhood of Autreches. Latest information received from Champagne confirms the fact our artillery fire, our trench defences and our counter-attacks completely set at nought an important attack undertaken by the enemy, in which at least three German divisions took part.

Counter attacks and hand grenade fighting by our men during last night drove the enemy from the outposts position he had occupied, with the exeption of a small rectangle to the west of Mainsons De Champagne, where his small forces are maintaining themselves with difficulty. Our general fire and in particular our artillery fire, inflicted very heavy losses on the Germans.

Three of our aeroplanes, equipped with guns, engaged yesterday in several fights above the German lines near Dixmude with enemy scouting eroplanes of Fokker type. One of our machines, attacked by a Fokker machine, had to desend but the enemy aeroplanes of Fokker type. One of our of ours, which fired on it with a machine, had to descend but the enemy tres and brought it down.

A Toronto Aviator Killed in England

Lieut. Gorden Duke and a Warrant Officer Victims of Accident

LONDON, Jan. 10.—A double flying fatality occurred at Eastbourne to-day, Lieut. Gordon Duke, a Canadian, and Warrant Officer Fraser being the victims. The two naval airmen went up from the local aerodrome at about 2.15, and after flying one and one-half miles the machine became very unsteady. Suddenly it made a dive, nose downwards, from a height of about two hundred feet and crashed to the ground in a brickfield. Both aviators were killed.

Lieut. Gordon Duke, the Canadian aviator who is reported killed, was a son of Mrs. Robert Duke, 2,133 Gerrard street east. He trained at the Curtiss Aviation School. Lieut. Duke was born in Toronto nineteen years ago, and before the war was employed as a clerk wth the civic street railway. He joined the aviation school on August 16, 1915, and after completing his course went to the front attached to the naval wing.

Conscription Bill Gaining Ground

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The debate on the second reading of the military service bill began in the House of Commons this afternoon. The opinion was generally expressed in the lobby that the vote in favor of the bill in the second reading would be even greater than on the first reading and even stated that the minority vote would dwindle down to a negligible figure. It is believed that a small number of the radicial party will follow their leader, Sir John Simon, to the end. Some of these members have already been requested to resign by their constituents.

BRITISH ADVANCING IN MESOPOTAMIA

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A British force in Mesopotamia under General Aylemer is proceeding up the Tigris to the relief of Kut El Amara is still halted at Speik Said, some twenty miles from Kut El Amara, according to latest advices received by the government, but the halt is due to weather conditions and the necessty of removing the wounded by river. This announcement was made in the House of Commons this afternoon by Austen Chamberlain.

British cavalry forces have located the Turks six miles to the eastward of Kut El Amara. This is the position from which the Turks were originally driven by General Townsend in the battle of Kut El Amara.

KINGSTON

Lieut. Nolan Arrested

MONTREAL, Jan. 10.—Lieut. John Nolan, who belongs to a regiment training at Kingston, was arrested at the Ritz-Carlton here Saturday on suspicion of having been implicated in the disappearance of jewelry valued at $3,000. Nolan was a guest at a wedding at Brockville at which the jewelry disappeared.

It is reported in the city that Lt.-Col. Ketcheson of the 80th Battalion is laid up with a heavy cold. The grippe epidemic is playing havoc in Belleville as it is here and in other places.

Capt. Watson, of the 80th Battalion, was in the city on Saturday, and returned to Bellville on Saturday night. He is suffering from a heavy cold, but still full of his old vigor and keyed right up for the interests of the 80th Battalion.

Major Wilson, D.A.A., and Q.M.G., went to Belleville on Saturday to spend the week-end at his home.

The guard furnished the munitions factory is giving the artillery much more work. Guard work on the water front is a cold and uninviting job by day or night, and yet the men are doing their work cheerfully and with the spirit of a real soldier.

Military men are experiencing much difficulty in getting places to room and board in the city. Every place seems to be filled to capacity.

Why Roman Meal is Best For Your Child

The intestinal muscles must have waste to properly develop. The growing muscles and organs must have abundant nutrition. The teeth and bones, nerves, muscles, organs, and blood must all have abundant inorganic salts. Roman Meal is filled with branny waste which gives the intestinal muscles exercise, preventing constipation and indigestion. It has more inorganic salts than any other known food. It's the most nutritious food sold. Ask your doctor. Do not stir Roman Meal porridge. At grocers, 10c. and 25c.

Roman Meal is made by Roman Meal Co., Toronto, and your grocer can procure it from any wholesaler.

Hashish.

There was a terrible secret society in the east which was organized for wholesale and systematic murder. Its members called themselves "Hashbasin"—whence, by the way, came our word "assassin"—and used to get up courage for their deeds of atrocity by doses of the drug called hashish. This is obtained from Indian hemp, and it is from the seed vessels that the substance is taken which yields the poison so famed in history and romance. It is a vivid green and when taken produces the most extraordinary visions and hallucinations.

Yes, It Could Be Done.

Pat Whelan, the new lodger, was engaged lacing his boots in the kitchen His landlady, standing near, remarked "Pat, would you like an egg for breakfast?"

"Faith, ma'am," replied Pat grimly. "I heard of a man who ate two and he is alive yet."

The Pinnacle of Sacrifice.

"I love you so much, my darling," cooed the clinging young thing, "that for your sake I would even forego a church wedding and consent to be married by a justice of the peace!"

And greater love than this hath no woman.

A donation of $5 for hospital work was received by the Chapter from the Locomotive Engineers through their secretary, Mr. LaVoie.

67 GERMAN TRAWLERS BAGGED IN ONE DAY

British Officer Laid a Shrewd Trap And Captured an Entire Fleet In the North Sea

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—Charles Bigelow, a New York merchant, with a branch office in Liverpool, who arrived in New York on the Adriatic, told of the recent capture of sixty-seven German steam fighting trawlers by the strategy of a British naval officer. The captured fleet is now at anchor at Dover.

"About a month ago," he said, "the commander of a destroyer which had been out to the North Sea fishing fleet found three German fishing trawlers on the ground with the British and French boats. He went on board to see if they had any guns, and finding nothing suspicious he told their skippers to go ahead. Three days later he picked up the fleet again, and found eleven Germans there instead of three, and repeated his former program.

"Two weeks later the same commander found that the number of German trawlers had increased to fifteen, and still he did not interfere, although he made sure that they were not armed. On December 20 the commander, leading a squadron of five destroyers, visited the North Sea fishing fleet, and captured sixty-seven trawlers, which were taken into Dover. I do not know what the value of the vessels is, but they will be very useful to the Admiralty for mine sweeping. The cargoes of fish brought $15,000 at Dover.

"I asked the commander why the British and French fishermen permitted the Germans to fish on their ground, and he replied that, by international agreement, fishermen had been immune from attack until the present war started."

W. W. Price, a New York broker, who returned on the Adriatic from a visit to Paris and London, said he left the French capital on Dec. 27. He met several Americans, but did not hear anything about the warnings said to have been sent to passengers intending to sail on the Lafayette.

"Americans who wish to learn what this war really means to the people of the belligerent nations," he continued "should take a trip to Europe now. The daily sight in Paris of the wounded, maimed, and blind officers and men in the streets is the most pathetic spectacle I have ever seen. London is more depressing even than Paris on account of the darkness of the streets and the fog, with its accompaniment of drizzling rain. I have been going to Paris yearly for the last twenty-five years, but never imagined that it would be possible to see the once gay city in such a pathetic state.

"The spirit of the British and French people under all their trouble is really magnificent, and they have only one idea from the highest to the lowest—to go on with the fight, no matter how long it lasts. There is no talk of peace."

Another passenger on the steamer was the Hon. Mrs. Lyndhurst Bruce, formerly Miss Camille Clifford, whose husband was killed early in the war.

ONE-THIRD OF SOLDIERS PAY GOES TO THEIR KIN

OTTAWA, Jan. 10—(Special)—The amount of assigned pay or separation allowance now being sent out monthly by the Militia Department to dependents or relatives of the men at the front totals about $2,000,000.

There are some 90,000 names on the list of recipients. The total monthly roll of the department is now something like $6,000,000. Consequently about one-third of the pay earned by the men on active service is assigned to the kin they left behind them.

ROYAL YEAST

Constantine And Wilson, The Same

ATHENS, Jan. 10.—via Paris, Jan. 7, (delayed).—"I hope you will make the people of the United States understand that I am no more pro-German than your President," said King Constantine to the Associated Press correspondent today. "I am pro-Greek, just as your President tried to be only pro-American.

"It is one of the saddest evidences of the blind hatreds and prejudices evoked by this war that people who should and in their sober senses do know better insist upon imputing to others motives which they never could conceivably have entertained."

The King's statement was made in communicating to the correspondent an important declaration of his policy which he had given to a representative of the Lokal Anzeiger of Berlin. This declaration was made with a view to clearing up any misunderstanding respecting his intentions which may exist in Germany.

Gallipoli Troops Entirely Withdrawn

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Official announcement of the allied evacuation of the Gallipoli Peninsula was made by the war office tonight in the following statement: "On the night of Jan. 8-9, the complete evacuation of the Gallipoli Peninsula, prepared in detail some days ago, was perfectly carried out by the English commandant and the commandant of our expeditionary corps. It was effected without the loss of any French material beyond six emplaced marine guns, which were useless, and are included in the seventeen pieces which the English announcement reported destroyed.

"The enemy opened fire at 6 o'clock in the morning, when the embarkation ended."

Lusitania Dispute Practically Settled

Final Agreement Draft Sent From Washington to German Capital

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Special—The United States Government and the German Embassy believe tonight that the controversy over the sinking of the Lusitania eight months ago, with the loss of 115 American lives, is virtually at an end.

All that remains now, it may be said on the highest authority, is for the German Government to give approval of a draft of the final agreement between the United States and Germany.

This draft went forward to Berlin to-night over official State Department wires.

A reply from Berlin is expected within a week. There is not the slightest doubt in diplomatic circles that his reply will be an approval of the terms of the draft agreement.

President Wilson gave final approval to the proposals submitted by the German Government, and to-day returned to the State Department the written suggestions made by the German Ambassador, Count, von Bernstorff, with a few minor changes in phraseology which were not considered to have changed the basic proposals.

Secretary Lansing afterwards saw the Ambassador.

It can be stated on the highest authority, however, that the agreement contains a practical disavowal that meets the wishes of the United States without stultifying Germany.

Admits Act's Illegality

This will carry with it admission of the illegality of placing lives of Americans in jeopardy from submarine operations. It will not, however, disavow Germany's legal right to sink the British liner when that action was explicitly ordered as a reprisal, and since the United States itself has declared the British food blockade, which called for the the reprisals, "illegal and indefensible."

There has been no disagreement over the question of reparation. From the beginning of the Lusitania negotiations, it is said, Germany has acceded to the demand for indemnity.

It was reliably stated to-night that the ability of the United States and Germany to reach an agreement on the delicate question of disavowal was due to the fact that the demands of the United States were made while Germany was continuing submarine warfare in the war zone as a "reprisal." The United States contended that only disavowal of the principle that submarines had the legal right to sink merchant vessels without saving lives aboard would give sufficient future guarantees.

Count von Bernstorff, in his conversations with Secretary Lansing emphasized the fact that Germany had given up its submarine campaign in the war zone and had also given every assurance of future conduct that could be asked.

Announcement to-day that the Ancona note to Austria, which was held up by the Persia case, is being prepared, was taken as another favorable indication on the early solution of the pending submarine controversies.

He disposed of two pieces in Toronto according to his own story for $330 and the remainder of the jewelry was found in his possession. He had arranged to sail from Quebec for Swedtn when his flight was halted by the Montreal detectives. He is in jail on one week's remand.

In the latter case the allegation is violation of the law regarding hours of sale to soldiers.

After Death.

It is irrational to think death ends all, for then life is gone and annihilated, and it is just as though it had never been. A life can in nowise be destroyed by death. What has once been experienced is an eternal and indelible constituent of reality never more to be erased or altered. It is a foolish doubt which Karl Moor expresses with the pistol in his hand, "If the paltry pressure of this paltry thing makes the wise man and the fool, the coward and the hero, the noble and the villain, equal"— That cannot be. Death severs the thread of the earthly life, but the content of life can neither be altered nor annihilated by it. Reality is eternal in its essence. Nothing that is real can, to quote Angelus Silesius, ever perish and cease to be.—Professor Friedrich Paulsen.

Boiled Nettles.

The countryman knows more about economy than the townsman when it comes to a matter of vegetables. A correspondent reports a conversation overheard in a village inn in Hertfordshire in this present year of grace. Vegetables were under discussion, and spinach was mentioned. "Not bad," one gourmet admitted, "but give me nettles," and inquiry has shown that the two are not dissimilar in taste. Another forgotten "vegetable" is the primrose. Primrose pasties were once a popular dish in Lancashire.—London Standard.

Letters From Belleville Boys At the Front

The following letter has been received by Mrs. (Dr.) Yeomans from her son at the front.

Belgium, December 4, 19195.

Dear Mamma:—

This will probably be the last letter which you will receive from us before Christmas,—if you do get it before, which I hope you will. So before I mention anything else at all, I want to wish you all the merriest possible time at Christmas and the happiest of New Year's. Don't let the fact of our being away bother you in the slightest, but think of us as sitting, comfortable and happy, in a cosy hut before a good fire, with nearly all we could desire, and far more than we need. This time next year we will be home, and the only Germans left will be in museums or in zoos.

Last week I received from Ann St. School another scrapbook with a lot of news in it. They are mighty interesting to us I can tell you, and whenever I get one it goes the rounds of the Belleville boys in the battery. It is the only news of any kind, outside of your letters, that we get of what is taking place.

There was a long description of the reception given to Ed Blaylock, and I was sure glad to see they turned out well for him. He is one chap who deserved all they can do for him. He was one of the finest all-round fellows that left home at all, and he has had far the hardest time of it. I was within seventy-five yards of him when he was wounded, and was with him for some time after until the stretcher bearers took him away. Terrible though his wounds were —and I have not seen anyone before or since who appeared to be in quite so bad a mess —he set his teeth and stood it, and when they were taking him off he waved his hand as though nothing was the matter at all.

Your Christmas parcels came and were certainly well fixed up and thoroughly enjoyed. Every gift as it was taken out seemed to me to be about the most thoughtful of gifts. Mary's hickory nuts were certainly welcome. They seemed to add a new touch to the whole parcel and I could just imagine Mary cracking them with the hammer and that old iron, occasionally hitting her thumb a discouraging whack, and perhaps cracking two for every one that went into the bag (or perhaps she made Asa crack them for her). The gifts of all the rest were just what we wanted.

I was sorry to hear of the death of Mr. Lynch. You sent me a paper with the article marked. He will certainly be missed. I was even more sorry to hear about poor Cecil Bowyer. He was such a nice chap, very quiet and reserved, but as warm hearted as one could find. He was in the same class at school as I was for a long time.

Here's wishing you all succes with the Local Option campaign. It has aroused quite a lot of discussion even out here among the Belleville boys.

The Rainbow Shower boxes which you mentioned have not come yet, but I expect will be here soon. They do not charge for things like that at all.

Give my love to all and wishing you all the merriest Christmas.

December 14th.

I am down in the trenches on duty, but last night Ted called up from the battery and said there was a letter waiting for me from you. It's maddening when there is a letter waiting for one that way that it is impossible to get at; but I'll enjoy it to-night.

Everything is O. K. with us in every way. The water and mud are terrible—up to one's' waist in the trenches —but we are quite used to that by now and treat it as a very trivial matter.

I think there is about one country where the mud is halfway considerate, and that is Canada. I shall always think of mud when anyone mentions Europe to me after I get home. They certainly have lots of it in Flanders anyway, and in England. Every kind too—thick, thin, clayey, loamy, slippery, sticky, slimy and any other varieties that are made. They keep them all here and it's all first class too —none of your cheap kind. When the mud here is sticky, it sticks, and it almost takes "all the king's horses and all the King's men" to pull you out again. Likewise when you suddenly strike a patch of slippery variety, look for bumps! They're sure to come. The most unpleasant way to strike mud though, is in combinations of different kinds. F'rinstance,—you step off a spot where there is none, (if you can find one) into the umd, which happens at that particular step to be "sticky." Of course, you only put one foot down at a time, but when that foot strikes "sticky" it goes down a distance and makes absolutely no attempt to come to the surface again. Your next step with your other foot carries you to some slippery mud. Imagine the consequences!—— Slip goes foot number two—stick stays foot number one—and you indulge in a few gymnastics (and often a few vivid remarks as well) before invariably making a landing on the point of your nose, the tip of your left elbow, and the palm of your right hand. These latter may of course land in some of the numerous other varieties. (Consider the unpleasantness, for example, of your nose landing in some "slimy") but as a rule three varieties are the most found clumped together. When I get home I shall be pleased to point out to you the consistencies and varieties of the mud on Front street.

By the time you get this I suppose all the winter pleasures will be in full swing, skating both on the rink and on the bay. Hockey and driving seem so far away now as to be novelties to us, but I think I should still be able to skate.

We have not had a snow flake here yet, but I suppose we will have some before long. I believe it lasts half an hour sometimes.

Please give my love to all, and I shall write again soon,

Your loving son,

PAT.

LUNG TROUBLE

Was never cured by dosing the stomach. The two organs are not connected. If they were, food swallowed would choke you. For lung and bronchial troubles you must breathe the cure; and you can't breathe cough syrups, tonics and syrupy compounds! Peps provide the rational treatment for coughs, colds, bronchitis and lung troubles. Peps are tablets made up of Pine extracts and medicinal essences, which when put into the mouth turn into healing vapors. These are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes —not swallowed down to the stomach, which is not ailing.

On the face of it, now, does this not sound more reasonable than drugging the stomach? Try one box of Peps. A trial will cost you only 50c., and the good you will reap—well, health cannot be expressed in money terms. Be sure of the article when ordering from druggist or store. Just four letters

Drug Proof?

If there ever was a human being who was not in some way susceptible to drugs he's never been heard of. Yet, in spite of the warnings of reputable physicians, many persons with whom tea and coffee disagree continue their use and take into their systems the drug, caffeine.

The 1½ to 3 grains of this drug, in the average cup of tea or coffee, taken regularly is often the cause of headaches, nervousness, biliousness, heart flutter and many other ailments.

The sure, easy way out of tea and coffee troubles is to quit both the tea and coffee and use

SURPRISE PARTY

On the evening of Jan. 7, 1916, a party of nearly one hundred people, young and old, assembled themselves at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Ketcheson, 5th Con. Sidney, and presented Miss Alma with a handsome china cabinet in honor of her approaching marriage. The following address was read by Miss Alma Fox.

Dear Alma:—Knowing that the time is drawing near, when you are to leave your pleasant home to enter a new home, we, your friends, have met tonight to express the good-will and the esteem which we bear toward you.

From early childhood your face has grown familiar as, week by week you have met with us in social and church life; and as the years have passed one by one, since as a child you entered our Sabbath school, we have learned to admire your ability and willingness to enter into any work that came to hand.

To say that we have any regrets at your approaching marriage would not be true, for it is a joy to know that you are to become one of the "homemakers" of our fair Canadian land and we believe you are well qualified "to keep the home fires burning." It is a grand satisfaction to know that your marriage will cause no separation from old friends; that from time to time we shall see your cheery face among us.

To show in a practical way that we value your friendship, we offer you this cabinet, but of greater importance is the sincere wish that you may possess that rare faculty of seeing the silver lining in every cloud, and the happiness so soon to be yours, may endure through all the years of your wedded life.

Signed on behalf of,
Scott's Church,
"Sidney Circuit.",

Miss Alma made a very modest reply of thanks in a few well chosen words. A very pleasant evening was spent in music and games. A splendid lunch was provided, to which ample justice was done.

The party dispersed, all expressing their thanks for the jolly evening.

"Weekly Ontario, please copy."

MONTENEGRO'S ARMY.

For days following the final repulse of the Serbian army statements were issued in Berlin and Vienna announcing the determination of the Austrians to continue their triumphant march across the Montenegrin border and crush the gallant little force which under King Nicholas has so bravely defended its country from the Hun. Whatever the final result may be, it is an encouraging fact that so far the Teuton plans have miscarried. The Austrians have crossed the border into Montenegro, but they have not crushed the Montenegrin army. And it is the belief of military critics that they will not be able to crush it unless they are strongly reinforced.

Europe has no better fighters than the Montenegrins. Gladstone once described them as the bravest people in the world. They are living up to their reputation in this war. For years they have been in the thick of armed strife. In the Balkan strife the soldiers of Montenegro fought so successfully that the area of the little kingdom was increased 2,129 square miles. They are now fighting for their lives—women as well as men—and there will be no surrender. They know what happened to Serbia; and they are grimly determined to save their country from a similar fate. The Montenegrin women are of Spartan mould and they rejoice in their ability to take their places on the firing line along with their husbands, sons and brothers. Like the women of Serbia they have sacrificed all for their country.

The outdoor life of the men and women of Montenegro has stood them in good stead in their struggles against hostile forces. The population, which is roughly estimated at 516,000, is mainly pastoral and agricultural, Cettinje, the capital, having a population of less than 5,600. The war strength of the army at the beginning of the present conflict was estimated at 40,000 but doubtless it is much greater at the present time. Military observers have declared that every available man is at the front, as well as every woman who is able to stand the hardship. According to the law of 1910, "every Montenegrin subject is liable to military service from the 18th to the 62nd year of his age, that is, for a total period of 45 years." Those who are not strong enough to take part in the actual fighting are employed in some other military capacity. From King Nicholas down the Montenegrins are a patriotic, fearless and determined people and if they can hold out until help arrives from Italy they may be depended upon to take an important part in the Balkan campaign now being so carefully planned by the Allies.

FINANCING A WAR.

Some idea of the cost of the war is furnished in tables prepared by the Journal of Commerce on loans that have been made by the belligerent and other nations since the outbreak of hostilities. The total is $30,537,380,000. Among the Allies Great Britain is credited with $6,265,000,000; France with $7,931,000,000; Russia with $3,148,000,000; Italy with $415,000,000; Belgium with $100,000,000; Japan with $26,000,000, and Serbia with $18,000,000. The total of these loans is $17,903,000,000. Germany is credited with $9,270,000,000; Austria-Hungary with $250,000,000, and Bulgaria with $30,000,000. The total here is $12,281,000,000. In addition to these strictly war loans are loans amounting to $353,380,000 which neutral European countries have been obliged to make because of the war.

To these loans must be added the extra interest burden, which amounts to a large item. Before the war the principal governments could borrow money at low rates. example, Great Britain could borrow well below three per cent. The war loans are put out at a much higher rate, in some instances running to seven per cent. Furthermore, there must be charged the heavy burden of inflation of currency, as in Germany. The effect of this will not be felt in full force in Germany until the war ends and international trade is attempted. Gold is the single medium of exchange that the world accepts.

It is almost incredible that such an amount of money has been raised in less than a year and a half of war, yet we know that this amount, enormous as it is, has been largely spent and that fresh loans must be made as long as the war lasts. Dr. Helferrich, of the German Imperial Treasury estimated a few days ago that the war was costing between $80,000,000 and $83,000,000 a day. As yet there has been no such thing as impairment of the credit of any of the leading nations involved in the war, though, of course, no test has been applied to the Teutonic powers. It is true that American bankers are slow in the matter of Russian loans—that is, large ones—but that is not because any fear is felt as to the resources of the Russian Empire. It is a matter of the character of the security, rather than anything else. The credit of Great Britain and France is practically limitless, though the strain and hazards of the period naturally force a demand for higher interest rates.

Current Comment

A Hard Task.

The statement is again made in London that, regardless of any conquests which Germany may make on land, no German trade ever again will be permitted on the high seas till Germany has paid suitable indemnities for this war. In other words, before Germany can win this war, she must destroy British sea power.—Buffalo Express.

Unfair Treatment of Prisoners.

The announcement of the Red Cross Society that Canadian prisoners of war in Germany have been condemned to two years in jail for refusing to make munitions for the Kaiser's armies should prove a fresh stimulus to recruiting throughout the Dominion. Neither the British nor any of our Allies would think of compelling prisoners of war to assist in the slaughter of their own compatriots. Every week paints the Hun in darker colors. The civilized nations grow more and more convinced that the barbarous Central Powers must be deprived of their ability to ravish their neighbors and menace the world's liberties. The work of crushing the Vandals is one that calls imperatively to Canadian manhood, and we have no doubt that the full 500,000 troops, asked for by the Prime Minister, will be forthcoming.—Toronto News.

Northern Ontario Has Great Future

British Columbia Mines Do Not Compare With Those Up North

The profits of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company were under $1,000,000 in 1915. This company owns the smelter at Trail, B.C., also the Le Roi, Centre Star and War Eagle gold mines at Rossland, B.C. It also works silver lead mines at other points in British Columbia, including the St. Eugene, Sullivan, Molly Gibson, Richmond Eureka, Silver King and several others. When the Rossland "boom" was at its height in the closing years of the past century most of these were considered famous mines and no doubt they were the best lode propositions we had at that time known in Canada. But all the mines of Rossland, B.C., have not produced at the rate of $2,600,000 per year during the past ten years, and the most important mine outside of Rossland, namely, the Hedley, yields under $900,000 per year, of which less than $400,000 is profit. It will be readily seen that these properties do not compare favorably with the much younger mines in Northern Ontario. It is in fact highly probable that the Hollinger alone will in 1917 yield more gold than all the lode and placer mines of the Pacific produce. It is not now being worked to over half its capacity. Then with sufficient development and equipment the Acme and Dome can exceed their present outputs by 300 per week or more.

Prior to the discovery of Cobalt interest in mining stocks was largely confined to those of British Columbia and western Ontario. Now it is all centred in the new north. Here we find the greatest nickel mines in the world, the richest silver ore ever found in place, and what is in all probability the greatest of the world's gold fields. And there is no instance in all the world where different metals occur in such large quantities in such close proximity to each other. From the geological point of view it marks the greater mineral possibilities of the old igneous formations of the base over the summit of a mountain chain. For northern Ontario was once the seat of the earliest mountain range, now largely weathered away, while the Rockies are of yesterday in geological time. They are also mixed with sedimentaries, while at Porcupine all the gold bearing rocks are of igneous origin and have cooled much more slowly than those which form recent mountain regions. This makes for greater permanence and a more even distribution of the precious metal, while the extensive shearing which we find at Porcupine assure us many large and often irregular ore bodies.

HAVE YOU A HUSBAND

child or friend, who is suffering from eczema, or other skin disease, or an obstinate sore that has defied medical treatment? If so, that is a case for Zam-Buk.

Mrs. B. Ellis, of Castleton, Ont., writes: "My husband suffered intensely with a running sore on his foot. The sore penetrated to the bone, and the inflammation was so bad that he could not sleep at nights. After spending a lot of money and trying every remedy we heard of, with no result, I read of a cure which Zam-Buk had effected in a similar case, and got a box.

"Within two hours after the first application the pain was eased; and with perseverance the inflammation was drawn out, the swelling reduced, and before long the sore was entirely healed."

Zam-Buk also cures ulcers, abscesses, eczema, poisoned wounds, pimples, cold sores, chapped hands and chilblains.

Children's First Shoes.

Let the first shoe be on the order of an Indian moccasin, and as the foot grows it should be fitted from tracings.

Have the child stand upon a piece of paper and trace the outline of the foot with a pencil.

Use this as a guide when buying his shoes, and you will never make the mistake of getting them too small or ill fitting.

Getting Gamy.

Perturbed Diner—What on earth is the matter with you this evening, waiter? First you give me the fish, and now you give me the soup. Waiter (confidentially)—Well, to tell the truth, sir, it was 'igh time you 'ad that fish. After the soup it'd ha' been too late.—London Mail.

Quite Satisfied.

In old age Boswell said to Johnson, apropos the dictionary, "You did not know what you were undertaking." "Yes, sir," was the answer, "I knew very well what I was undertaking and very well how to do it and have done it very well."—London Standard.

Turtle Eggs.

Turtle eggs are an acquired taste with most people, although they are not so with bears. They have a rough yellow yolk and a white like any other egg, but you can cook them for a year and the white part will remain liquid. Notice a curious dimple in the side of each one. If you squeeze it out the dimple appears on the other side, and you can never get hold of a turtle egg which hasn't got a dimple in it.

A FEW NOTES ABOUT THE RED CROSS MOVEMENT

If there is anyone who can with good title lay claim to the name of Canadian, it is the Indian who is the descendant of the original inhabitants. It is only natural therefore that they should have especially ardent feelings of patriotism in this present period of crisis. Indeed in this matter there are few of us who cannot take humble lessons from our Indian compatriots, who in all the Indian reserves have given many generous contributions—large indeed considering their financial means—to the Red Cross and Patriotic funds.

Their attitude and enthusiasm is very eloquently expressed in a letter sent by the Indians in Split Lake Man., to Mr. John R. Bunn of the Department of Indian Affairs accompanying a donation of $37.50 for patriotic purposes. It reads as follows:—

Split Lake Reserve

We, the Indians of Split Lake, wish to manifest our loyalty by giving a small contribution to the Empire in this her hour of trial. We regret the circumstances will not permit us giving very much, and we hope that the amount of our offering will not be taken as an adequate showing of our loyalty, and we wish the spirit in which the contribution is made rather than the amount to be remembered. So that everybody share and share alike, we have agreed to give twenty-five cents (25c.) per head, this to be deducted from our treaty money.

May the Great Spirit give the victory to the King and Country, and more especially to the King who has never neglected even the poorest of his Indian subjects.

For our country's welfare we pray.

The Japanese Colony in London

Members of the Japanese colony in London have arranged in aid of the British Red Cross Society an exhibition of Japanese art, which was recently opened by the Japanese Ambassador. Queen Mary has loaned two pieces, a lacquer cabinet presented by the Emperor of Japan on the occasion of the Coronation in 1911 and an oblong box presented by Prince Sadanarus Fushimi.

The Information Bureau of the Canadian Red Cross in Cockspur St., London, England, has become one of the busiest places in the Imperial Metropolis. Occupying a strategic position in the very heart of London it has given to the English people striking evidence of the solicitude and zeal of Canandians and the Canadian Red Cross for our sick and wounded.

Here with four floors of office space at her disposal, Lady Drummond presides over the activities of 103 voluntary lady helpers who are distributed through the various departments.

The Enquiry and Visiting Department under the direction of Miss Erika Bovy and Miss Taylor, has a voluntary staff of 48. This Dept. selects visitors to visit the wounded in the hospitals and to make reports on their condition. Six ladies are busy in transcribing this information to a card index system. From this reports are made out to relatives in Canada by a staff of ten. This department also handles all inquiries about men in hospital or missing. It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of this work.

Another department handles all matters connected with prisoners of war. Twenty-seven ladies are busily engaged in packing parcels for Canadians in prison camps in Germany. A parcel is sent each week to every prisoner on the list.

The Countess Pignatorre with two other ladies is in charge of a newspaper department which sends Canadian news to the men in hospital.

Another department which has done much to endear the Canadian Red Cross to convalescent soldiers is the Drives and Entertainment Department the work of which is as its title would indicate. It enlists the sympathy of Canadians in London and hospitable English people, and provides carriage drives and various forms of hospitality and amusement for men who are sufficiently far advanced in convalescense to leave the hospital for short periods.

This Information Department is doing a remarkable work for our Canadian wounded. It gives a warm personal touch to the work of the Society in England and makes our wounded feel that the Canadian Red Cross is in every sense a personal friend to them.

CLOTH AND CLOTHES.

Why Some Garments Keep and Others Easily Lose Their Shape.

Every one—in this country, at least—wears clothes. They have to. Consequently every one is more or less interested in the question of clothes.

It is not so easy to know good cloth as it seems. Many people, depending on texture, feel, weave and so forth, think that they are judges of cloth. And when, after buying what they believe to be a good piece of cloth, it does not wear well they are greatly surprised.

The durability of cloth depends largely upon the length of the individual fibers. If the fibers are long and curling they form a close and strong weave. The cloth does not crack or wear out at the seams or folds because of the length of fiber, nor does it rub as easily by surface wear because it is more springy or elastic. Short fibers, on the other hand, have much less binding quality because they do not intertwine.

The difference between two suits or dresses in "keeping their shape" is largely due to this same thing. A really first class cloth, properly made and fitted, hardly ever requires pressing. It is elastic, and if it is hung up after having been worn for a day or two it will go right back into shape. The constant sending of trousers to the tailor to have a "crease" put in is a sign that the cloth was not made of long fibers.

If you want your suits or dresses to wear well and to look well first make sure that the cloth is woven from long fibers.

Dead Languages.

Dead languages are ones that once were in common use, but are now no longer spoken unless by scholars who have studied them. The ancient Sanscrit, Greek and Latin have been dead many centuries as common speech, although still used to some extent for religious, scientific and literary purposes. Coming down to more recent times, most of the Indian tongues, of which there were many when the white man came, are now dead. All languages have their periods of growth, maturity and decadence, followed by death.

Quick Change.

Critical Husband—This beef isn't fit to eat. Wife—Well, I told the butcher that if it wasn't good I would send you around to his shop to give him a thrashing, and I hope you'll take some one with you, for he looked pretty fierce, and I didn't like the way he handled his big knife. Husband—Humph! Oh, well, I must say I've seen worse meat than this.

Only the Truth.

"Poor Maud: She thought she'd captured a rich stock dealer."

"What gave her the idea?"

"Why, she heard that he helped to send wheat up last week."

"And did he?"

"Yes; he works in a grain elevator."

A GLIMPSE OF SWINBURNE.

Bayard Taylor Called Him Perverse, Willful and Unreasonable.

In all important respects except one I found him to be very much what I anticipated, writes Laura Stedman in the North American Review, quoting Bayard Taylor's impression of Swinburne. The exception is instead of being a prematurely blase young man of the world, he is rather a wilful, perverse, unreasonable, spoiled child. His nature is still that of the young Shelley, and my great fear is that it will never be otherwise.

He needs the influence of a nature stronger that his in everything but the imaginative faculty—such a nature as Byron's was to Shelley. * * * He has a weak moral sense, but his offences arise from a colossal unbalanced affectation. This, or something like it, is a disorganizing element in his nature which quite obscures the organizing—that is artistic—sense. What I admire in him, yet admire with a feeling of pain, is the mad, unrestrained preponderance of the imagination. It is a godlike quality, but he sometimes uses it like a devil. He greatly interests my intellect, but does not touch me magnetically.

He could have no power over me, but on the contrary, I felt that I should be able to influence him in a short time. I had a letter from him the other day which shows that he feels an intellectual relationship between us. Now, this is not a question of relative poetic power, but of a certain diversity of qualities, and I don't mean to be egotistic in saying that I might perform somewhat of the same service for him as Byron for Shelley. I feel that (if it is not already too late) I could help him to some degree of poise, of system, of law; in short, art.

In this sense he moves my deepest sympathy, for I see now the matter that might be molded into a splendid poet relapsing into formless conditions. It is sad. It is tragic, and if this fancy of mine be foolish, there it is, nevertheless. Without this sense of giving assistance a week alone with Swinburne would be intolerable to me or any other human being.

Central Asia.

The people living in the cotton belt of central Asia represent a conglomerate of all the races and nations that in ages past have inhabited these regions, from pure Aryans to full fledged Mongols. They all adhere to the Mohammedan faith and speak various dialects of the Tartar-Sart-Bokhara language except in the southwestern part, where the influence of the Persian language is felt.

Serfdom.

Serfdom was abolished in Russia in 1861, in England in 1600, in France not wholly until the French revolution, in Prussia in 1702, in the rest of Germany 1781, in Denmark 1700 and in Brazil 1867-88. There is now practically no legalized serfdom anywhere on earth.

An Exception.

"No man would approve of the recall as applied to himself."

"Oh, yes; an actor would!"

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHS.

How a Man Talks When He Shows Them to a Friend.

Here's the way the average man shows his little book of amateur photographs to a friend:

"This is supposed to be my wife, but it ain't very good. Let's see the next one. Well, that's the baby, but the sun was wrong. On this page is a family group. I took it myself, and it would be a good picture if three of 'em hadn't moved. Oh, yes! Here's one my wife took of me. Looks like the dickens, don't it? She ain't used to the camera, but notice how I'm grinning.

"And d'you see what a good background I'm posed in? I'd just got back from the office, and she just had one film left and thought she might as well snap me and finish up the roll—you see, I didn't have time to comb my hair or—what? Why, the one on the next page is a freak thing my next door neighbor snapped, showing his baby falling out of an upstairs window. Not much good—he didn't have a good light, and the baby was falling too fast to be quite in focus. Now, here's another one of me—my wife never could get the hang of the camera, but people say the wink is natural. I had quite a bunch of 'em printed because she wanted 'em to give around. Oh, those pictures are pretty fair. We took them at the lakes. There's people you don't know in 'em, and you'll hardly be interested. Well, hey, Mary, what's become of that one with me in it? I wish you'd keep all these pictures together. You monkey with this book till all the best ones get lost out!

"Well, I guess the rest won't interest you. We keep 'em because they're good souvenirs. Lot o' my wife's friends posed in the grand canyon, and such. A professional photographer don't get the personal touches that make these snapshot pictures nice to keep. Now, just take that one of me you saw back there. It's not much good as a likeness, but they tell me there's something characteristic about it—what? Why turn back? It's on page 3."

Cannon and Thunder Compared.

The comparison between the sound of cannon and "heaven's artillery" is hackneyed enough. But the human invention can at least claim great superiority as regards the area over which it is heard. There is no doubt about cannon fire being heard well over 100 miles away. The guns of Waterloo were heard at Creil, fifty leagues distant from the battlefield. But it is doubtful whether thunder can be heard at a greater distance than twenty miles. When the church steeple of Lostwithiel was destroyed by lightning, to the accompaniment of such a roar of thunder that the oldest inhabitant could not remember, Smeaton, the engineer, who was about thirty miles distant, heard not the slightest noise.—London Standard.

The Aurora Borealis.

Many people believe that the aurora borealis is a phenomenon peculiar to modern times. But this is not true. The ancients used to call it chasmata, bolides and trabes, names which expressed the different colors of the lights. The scarlet aurora was looked upon by the superstitious barbarians as an omen of direful slaughter; so it is not unusual for descriptions of bloody battles to contain allusions to northern lights.

Have a Purpose.

A life without a purpose is a languid, drifting thing. Every day we ought to renew our purpose, saying to ourselves, "This day let me take a sound beginning, for what I have hitherto done is ..."

Cheerfulness is like money well expended in charity—the more we dispense of it the greater our possession.—Victor Hugo.

HIS SANITY TEST.

It Cured Morgan Robertson of His Morbid Obsession.

In the course of his psychic studies Morgan Robertson, the well known writer of sea stories, had acquired a belief that he would some day go insane. This preyed on his mind so at intervals that he would figure out schemes to test himself and determine if he really had lost his mind.

We finally induced him to go to Bellevue hospital, mainly for a rest.

With a cunning that was as amusing as it was pathetic he took advantage of it in a way least expected. He insisted on going alone.

Arriving there, he told the physician in charge of his belief that he would some day go insane. He would give no particulars, and that explained why none of us heard from him for two weeks. They had placed him in the psychopathic ward!

It was a week before he knew that they thought him an insane patient and had him under observation. The experience thoroughly cured him of his morbid belief—fad, it really was.

One afternoon, soon after his discharge from the hospital, Robertson joined a party of us in a billiard room, where one of his friends had just won the tournament cup.

"How goes it, Morgan?" one of his friends inquired.

"Boys," he announced in that bellowing bass voice, "I'll never have to write another line. I'm no longer a slave to magazine editors. My books are selling, and I have here"—he reached into an inside pocket—"a certificate showing that I am not insane." He was deadly serious.

A few of the party, unfamiliar with the eccentricities of Robertson, began to edge away. To them it was uncanny.

"Still," one of them suggested in a side whisper, "he's got something on us at that. We've got no certificate."—Bozeman Bulger in Metropolitan.

Backing Him Out.

Sir Herbert Tree's wit is well known among his friends, and they tell some very good stories about his funny remarks at rehearsals.

Once during the rehearsal of a certain play Sir Herbert asked a very young and by no means brilliant actor who fancied himself greatly to "step back a little." The actor did so and Tree went on rehearsing. A little later the famous manager repeated his request, and the youth obeyed again.

Shortly afterward Tree once more asked him to "step a little farther back."

"But if I do," complained the youthful one ruefully, "I shall be completely off the stage."

"Yes," answered Tree quietly, "that's right!"—London Globe.

Tale of the Cranium Desert.

"Popper, tell me a real hair raising story," said the small boy.

The fond parent looked up hopelessly.

"I can't, my son; I've tried everything," answered the baldheaded father.—Exchange.

Managing John.

"You really must impress upon John the folly of his line of action."

"What's the use? He won't pay the least attention to me. He'll only listen to fools now." (After a short pause.) "You speak to him."—Exchange.

Facial Foliage.

"Do you think whiskers would improve my appearance?"

"I hardly know, old chap. What variety do you contemplate cultivating, the kind that bristle or the species that droop?"

Self Reliance.

"Never complain about what you can't help," said Mr. Optim.

"And yet," replied Mr. Pessim, "there's no excuse for complaining about anything else."

"Truth Dexter"

By

SIDNEY McCALL

CHAPTER XXVIII—Continued

The two women sat, entwined in a wordless embrace, for many long, blessed minutes. Then Truth put out a shaking hand toward the little robe. With her face bent over its folds she whispered, "Mummie, was this why you said things were going to come out right?"

"It was, my precious."

"But," Truth's cheeks burned deeper, "how will he ever know? You couldn't—"

"But I have!" cried the old lady in triumph. "Of course I worded it in the most delicate way, and was perfectly circumspect in all my phrases,—but that was the letter I sent to the station by Nickey yesterday morning. I didn't dare to trust the village post-office; Mr. Calvert is growing so careless."

Truth's face went down into the baby's robe; the red of her cheeks tinged the cambric into a nebulous dawn. "I wish I felt sure it would make a difference."

Mrs. Dexter drew the fluffy golden head to her breast as she answered, "We have to trust our Heavenly Father for all great blessings, dear; but I am an old woman and know more of life than you. I do not believe it possible for me to have liked and respected a man who could be heartless enough to desert you after he hears this sweet secret, even if he had been tempted before to think of such a terrible sin."

"But he wasn't going to desert me, grandma. I am the wicked one, for I came away from him!"

Mrs. Dexter's brow grew troubled. "That was a terrible step to take, my child, but you had a noble purpose in taking it. After all, it is merely a misunderstanding. God is not going to let the malice of a bad woman, or the love of gold, come between those whom He has joined."

"But just supposing that He should," persisted Truth, "would you think that I had been wicked?"

"That is a hard question. I have always considered marriage the most sacred of human relations,—but, in these strange circumstances, I cannot say I would think you were to blame."

"But still you feel that Van will—be good, don't you?" The entreaty in her eyes was almost unbearable.

"Indeed I do! I feel as sure that all is going to turn out right, as I do that God is just and kind. Now don't worry about it another minute. Fretting is the very worst thing you could do. You must fix your mind on bright and good and noble things. Won't you try to do this, darling, for mummie's sake?"

"I will try," said Truth. "And I know I can succeed. The world is so beautiful that nobody can be really unhappy in it, no matter what happens!"

The two sat together in silence, each with separate engrossing thoughts; then Truth rose and bore the long, green box in triumph to her room.

CHAPTER XXIX

The Last Grin of The Budha

Craighead's lonely struggles toward a solution of this unprecedented domestic problem must be passed over lightly. At one moment he felt himself a lion that has been betrayed into a showman's hands, and must maintain an artificial existence of distasteful luxury by going through the antics of a tame poodle; at another an ordinary thief or fortune hunter, who has been caught in the act, and now must either disgorge his booty, or stand in the public stocks.

His strongest feeling against Truth came from what he called her unreasonable, unpardonable, idiotic prejudice. In his heart he knew that Mrs. Dexter would uphold her granddaughter, and so the elder lady, also, came in for a share of disapprobation. "Talk of Puritan narrowness!" he once cried to himself, "this goes ahead of witch-burning and self-torture in one. I wonder why good women have such a devilish longing after self-sacrifice. The present case is Puritanism of the worst type, mixed with a virus of negro superstition. They think the Colonel died because of the money, and are afraid to keep on using it. I'll be well rid of the whole affair!"

In calmer moments the pathetic honesty of the two women stirred him, as he recognized the strange unworldliness of their view. He thought of Truth's determination to teach, that she might not only support herself and her grandmother, but pay back what had been spent in repairs for the Big House. Van could not forbear a smile. "I must warn old Noah to keep accounts to himself," he muttered.

At no time had the temptation to keep the fortune for himself occurred, though he had thought of more than one plan by which he might seem to yield to Truth, and give up the money, while at the same time he left the bulk of it in a way to be easily regained. The impossibility of this, however soon made itself apparent to him. Truth might be innocent, but she was no fool. She would inquire into matters for herself.

Again, the blame of the whole situation would be thrown upon Orchid. "If it hadn't been for her cursed hints that the beastly money had played a part in my matrimonial affairs, Truth would never have been driven to take this stand. She might have fretted a bit, for a few years to come, but polish and wider experience would have kept her from making an ass of herself. It isn't the Colonel at all,—she only wants to see whether I care for the money or her, and hasn't the logic or wisdom enough to recognize that I must, necessarily, put her own interests before mine. Why couldn't Orchid have stayed in England!"

More than once, however, such waves of disgust and distaste of the whole problem swept down upon him that he was tempted to solve the riddle by harshness, to write or wire to Truth, "Have your own way," and trust to luck for the future. The game wasn't worth the candle. He did not want to give Truth up; people would talk, Orchid plume herself for the rest of her natural life, and, after all, it would be a caddish thing. But the moment in which he should say "I give in," was bitter to contemplate. To most strong men this is the severest of all tests and Craighead was unusually self-willed. No, it would not be right to Truth should he yield without making at least one powerful effort to convince her of her folly. He had already jotted down many headings for an irresistible and convincing letter that he was going to write her. The first two sheets lay, indeed, already written, though undated, in the drawer of his "Hanover" desk.

In the very midst of these unpleasant cogitations came the news of Tom Wiley's death. Norton looked a little frightened as he repeated it; his eyes seemed to say, "What's going to happen next?"

Craighead was one of the honorary pallbearers, and was asked to be present at the reading of the will, on the following afternoon. This was the afternoon of the evening on which Truth had read the announcement in the paper.

At this mournful function Craighead heard that Orchid was left sole heir to the immense fortune, and that he, Craighead, was one of the executors.

Two days later came what he had ben dreading most of all, a summons from Orchid herself. "Will you come this evening? I shall be alone from eight to ten. I must see you at once."

There was nothing for it but acquiescence. During the day he kept his mind as much as possible from the coming interview, but Norton and the office boy observed that he was in "the deuce of a temper." He wrote several more pages of his letter to Truth, and the expressions he used were not conciliatory.

A few moments past eight he entered the familiar doorway. James, the footman, once so gorgeous in gold and green, was now a very crow for blackness. This gave a first sharp realization of the changed condition of affairs. James, he fancied, eyed him with suspicion. His voice had a lugubrious croak which matched well his inky livery as he requested the guest to "Henter the draw'n-room."

It was the same room, however, not changed in a single degree since he and Orchid had fought their last battle of wills. The fat, sleek Budha dozed in his corner, and incense rose thinly against the gleam of his bare chest.

Orchid came toward Van so quietly that he did not hear her footsteps. She sighed, and he turned with a start. Here was another surprise. Could this be orchid—this, the radiant, dazzling creature that had tormented his dreams as well as his waking hours? The woman who now stood passively before him was young, colorless and pathetic beyond all imaging. Her hair, usually an aureole of glittering strands, was brushed back into sleek smoothness and wound in a coil low at the back of her neck. The red and gold were faded, and it seemed only a little richer in hue than the brown of an average woman's hair. The long, trailing gown, all of crape, was opened the least bit at the throat, as if for easier drooping of the small, shining head. Her cheeks were absolutely colorless, her lips nearly so, yet there was something in her beauty that Craighead had never seen before,—something that made his heart sink.

Awkwardly he achieved a formal bow and muttered some set words of conventional sympathy.

Orchid ignored them.

"You sent for me?" he began tentatively.

"Yes, will you be seated?" She motioned to a seat near the fire, and placed herself upon a slight black chair of carved teak-wood. Against the dark branches her face was like a forgotten lily among charred stalks.

The gentleness of her mood disarmed Craighead, yet, at the same time irritated him. It was more threatening than emotion.

To be Continued.

NO MORE HORSES TO BE EXPORTED

The latest order in council says:

His Royal Highness the Governor-General in Council is pleased to order that the Order in Council of the 27th April, 1915, prohibiting the exportation of certain goods to all destinations abroad other than the United Kingdom, British Possessions and Protectorates, shall be amended by striking thereout the following articles, viz:—

"Animals, pack, saddle and draught, suitable for use in war."

His Royal Highness the Governor-General in Council, under and in virtue of The provisions of sections 242 and 291 of The Customs Act, is further pleased to order that the exportation of the undermentioned goods shall be and the same is hereby prohibited to all destinations abroad other than the United Kingdom, British Possessions and Protectorates, United States, France, Italy, Japan, and Russia (except Baltc Ports) viz:—

"Horses and other animals, pack, saddle and draught, suitable for use in war."

Help to Make Her Dream Come True

The agony of blood and tears which swept over Belgium has left nearly two millions of its people absolutely without food or money. Because they scorned to sell their national honor—because they dared to fight for the right, against odds that were overwhelming—because by their sacrifice they saved the day for us and our Allies—they are face to face with grim starvation.

The wives, mothers and children of King Albert's gallant soldiers, dream not of pleasures and luxuries, but of BREAD! They are helpless to provide it themselves—and the Belgian Relief Commission, efficient though it is, can only procure it for them with cash supplied by the voluntary contributions of people like ourselves. The is provided almost entirely by the British Empire and the United States, and administered by a neutral "Commission for Relief in Belgium", co-operating with the "Belgian Public Food Supply Society".

This Commission has for months been the sole means of providing food for the Belgian people—for the Germans positively refuse to feed their victims. Some 5,000,000 are still able to pay for the food, while nearly 2,000,000, absolutely destitute, must be fed free.

For money to buy food for these Belgians, the Commission appeals to us all. If we do not furnish it—if we sit back in plenty and let our heroic Allies seal their sacrifice with their lives—we shall be eternally disgraced!

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Preemption patent my be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

SEVEN YEARS TO SERVE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

One day in June, 1890, I was ordered by a circuit judge to stand up and receive my sentence, and when I sat down again it was with the knowledge that I had seven years to serve in prison. My crime? Well, let that go. I was only twenty-three years old then, and a young man is more easily led astray than an old one.

I expected from seven to ten years. I made up my mind to obey carefully every rule and regulation of the prison. No "good time" was allowed in those days, but if I conducted myself to the satisfaction of the warden for five years he would be quite willing to ask the governor to shorten my sentence. I had not been in prison more than an hour, however, when I made a change in my program. Such a loneliness came over me—I felt such a horror at being shut out from the world—that I determined to escape at the first opportunity.

I was a fine machinist, and after a while I was placed in charge of all the machinery in the prison—that is, I kept everything in repair, and it was an occupation in which I delighted. I had a little shop in the engine room, and I looked after my work so well that I soon had the confidence of the prison officials. The man who ran the big stationary engine was a "free man" or an outsider hired by the state, as was also the fireman. While both treated me kindly and well, they no doubt felt it their duty to watch me and report anything suspicious. My little shop had no door to it, and while working in it I was under the eye of the engineer—that is, if he sat in his chair in the usual place he could see my every movement. My room had a window looking out on the garden of the prison. From the first day I entered the little shop I determined to escape by that window.

The engineer came on duty fifteen minutes before I did and remained fifteen minutes later, while the fireman slept at the prison and was aroused about half past 5 o'clock. I had to leave the shop at 5:55 to march in to supper with my gang. To attempt to leave by daylight would be foolishness, as I would be seen by the guards stationed on the walls. I must have some excuse for lingering in my room until after dark, and I had just planned it when an unforeseen circumstance knocked me out. I was going to disable the donkey engine just before 6 o'clock, knowing that I would be called back to help repair it after supper, when the prison authorities gave the wagon contractor leave to occupy a portion of the garden with his lumber. A great lot of it was hauled in and piled up directly before my window, obliging me to use a lamp to work by and cutting off my chance to escape. I made some cautious inquiries and found that it was all green stuff and might be left there four or five years to season.

It was a bitter disappointment.

The prison had been overcrowded, and a new wing was being built. This took thirteen months, and I was one of the men transferred to it. I was put in cell No. 7, which was the last on the left hand side and at the corner of the building. I knew all about this wing before we occupied it. The east wall, which contained the window, was still in the prison yard, while the north wall ran along a public street. Under the window nearest my cell was piled a lot of wornout machinery and refuse lumber.

I had no sooner entered my cell than I determined to make it the basis of operations.

As the cement was not fully hardened, as I knew, I decided to tunnel out.

That week I spent in raising one of the flagstones in my cell, which was about three feet square, and then started the hole. I went down perpendicularly two feet and then drifted down toward the north wall at a slant so as to strike the foundation. I was, however, greatly troubled to get fresh air down in my tunnel, and the cramped position in which I worked kept me sore and lame. While working at night I had to be in bed regularly every hour as the guard came around and every morning the stone had to be replaced and the crevices filled in with breadcrumbs.

I knocked off work the next week, and it was well I did, as the guard came creeping along to the different cells at odd times during the night, and I should certainly have been caught. It got so at last that I couldn't work in the tunnel over fifteen minutes before the want of air drove me out, and along toward the end my breath failed me and I lost strength. I dug under the stones and upward about a foot on either side and then I was sick for five weeks. Before I got to work again June had come, and it was a dark and rainy night on the 22d of that month that I took a farewell leave of my cell and crawled into my tunnel. I had three or four feet of earth to dig away, and I was almost perishing for want of air as I got to the crust.

It was about half past 12 when I crawled out of the tunnel into the storm and luckily no one was abroad to catch sight of me.

I lost no time in getting away from the neighborhood of the prison, and long before my cell was unlocked in the morning I was safe with friends. Yes, I was hunted and a reward was offered for my capture, but they never got me.

POOR PULLMAN PORTERS.

Come to Think of It, Their Jobs Are Not Such Easy Ones.

George or Lemuel or Alexander of the Pullman car—whatever the name may be—has no easy job. If you do not believe that go upstairs some hot summer night to the rear bedroom—that little room under the blazing tin roof which you reserve for your relatives—and make up the bed fifteen or twenty times, carefully unmaking it between times and placing the clothes away in a regular position. Let your family nag at you and criticise you during each moment of the job, while somebody plays an obligato on the electric bell and places shoes and leather grips underneath your feet. Imagine the house is bumping and rocking—and keep a smiling face and a courteous tongue throughout all of it!

Or do this on a bitter night in midwinter, and between every two or three makings of the bed in the overheated room slip out of a linen coat and into a fairly thin serge one and go and stand outside the door from three to ten minutes in the snow and cold. In some ways this is one of the hardest parts of George's job. Racially the negro is peculiarly sensitive to pneumonia and other pulmonary diseases. Yet the rules of a porter's job require that at stopping stations he must be outside of the car—no matter what the hour or condition of the climate—smiling and ready to say:

"What space you got, guv'nor?"—Edward Hungerford

DIVORCE IN SCANDINAVIA.

It Is Very Easy to Obtain, and It Does Not Cost Anything.

In Scandinavia divorce by mutual consent is the recognized way. And husband and wife may reach this agreement when neither has violated any marital obligation. The law, you see, does not require them to wait until one has wronged the other. But when they have reached the point where they two know that their real union is ended they may secure a divorce for the asking. It doesn't cost anything. There is not even a lawyer needed. The process is simple. You notify a magistrate that you are separating. You are not required to go into details. You don't have to spread your marital troubles on court records and newspaper pages.

One reason is as sufficient here as when you entered into matrimony. You simply state that you no longer wish to continue the marriage. Then one party to the contract goes away for a year—in Finland it is for only three months. At the end of the period the magistrate hands you the papers that dissolve the marriage as quietly as it was made.

If, as rarely happens, mutual consent through the refusal of one of the contracting parties cannot be secured the process is a little longer, the probationary period of one year being extended to two. But there is always a way out. Sweden has no less than twelve grounds for divorce. It is accomplished in as dignified a way as any other partnership might be dissolved.—Mabel Potter Daggett in Pictorial Review.

NAVAL SIGNALING.

It Began In Ancient Days by Raising and Lowering Sails.

The origin of the idea of using flags by day and lanterns by night for signaling in the navy came into being as far back as the middle ages.

In those ancient days some one thought out a method of raising and lowering sails, the number of times they were raised or lowered indicating the letter that was to be sent. That proved very wearisome work and was superseded in the seventeenth century by the use of balls and cones hoisted in various positions on the masts and booms. At night different colored lanterns were used.

In the following century twelve flags were used, either singly or in combination, and these flags supplied all the signaling that was necessary in fighting, as "Make all sail." "Engage the enemy," "Chase the enemy" or "Anchor."

When the battle of Trafalgar was fought the signals were sent by light, guns and flares and flags, and it was not till after that battle that the system, invented by Sir Home Popham, was used and on which are based the present day methods of signaling.

The system of signaling from ship to ship by semaphore was due to a Frenchman named Chappe in 1794 and adopted in the British navy a few years later.—London Telegraph.

Dutch Barges In the Thames.

For more than two centuries there have always been some big, broad sterned Dutch boats lying in the Thames river, with baggy trousered Dutchmen smoking on board, quite calmly. It is the reminiscence of a Dutch conquest. Those boats have moored there, with their eels for London ever since William III. gave them the right of traffic. And if there wasn't a Dutch boat for a single second just below London bridge the ancient rights would be lost. But you will always find the calm Dutchman smoking on his "pitch."—Westminster Gazette.

HOME DECORATION

Some Expert Suggestions About the Furnishing of Homes.

SIMPLE, BEAUTIFUL LINES.

How Charming Effects In Wall Papering, Floor Coverings, Lighting and Harmony May Be Obtained Is Told In a Practical Way.

There are a great many people who can appreciate a beautiful decorative scheme for a home, but who cannot tell why they appreciate it and who could not duplicate it.

"How beautiful," they exclaim, "and how simple! One would think that any one could do it." However, "any one" couldn't, and that is just where the trouble comes in.

The first essential to good decorating is innate good taste. If this is lacking all the science in the world will not make up for it. The second requirement is the knowledge of some of the simpler principles of color, line, form and composition. This one may acquire if one is willing to take a little trouble.

"The first thing to do when you are confronted with the decoration and furnishing of a given room is to take an inventory of its color possibilities. It is this element that can materially strengthen or weaken the most carefully studied arrangement of form and line."

The psychological effect of colors, red being exciting, blue elevating and yellow cheering, is well known. All colors need modifying before they can be successfully used in home decorating. In selecting a color scheme for a room those colors should be used which have one of the primary colors as a base.

"For example, let us assume that we wish to decorate a room whose prevailing colors shall be buff—we find that in producing buff we have included a little yellow and red, some orange russet and citron. We are to apply these to a living room, the woodwork of which is dark mahogany. We would apply the buff, the prevailing color, to the walls; the russet to the floor. We would lighten the buff with a frieze of orange and the russet with a carpet of citron, and we would bring out the bright spots with a lamp or a leaded window in which pure red and yellow would bring the whole scheme into relief."

Yellow is an expanding color and makes areas seem large, hence its value in a small room. Red is a positive color and makes a room hold its true value. Blue is a contrasting color and makes a place seem smaller.

Perpendicular stripes on a wall paper or draperies will give the room height. Horizontal stripes in wall paper or draperies will give the room width. Small, disconnected spots or patterns in wall paper will dance and are seldom to be desired. Realistic flowers, fruits or birds in wall papers and draperies should never be used.

Floor coverings or treatments should be low in tone and should form a base for the room. Highly polished floors are uncomfortable to walk on and unpractical from every viewpoint. The natural finish of wood is dull, not highly polished. Oriental rugs should be chosen with great care and should be investigated with an eye to the real value, both in wear and color. If a worn rug offered to you as antique is less than $5 a square foot there is something wrong. Either the dealer is being cheated or you are.

Considerable attention should be given to the subject of lighting. The modern indirect lighting, excepting for use in the service part of the house is not opposed. For reading or for general lighting effects the softer, mellower direct light, shaded by either a silk or glass shade, is preferable. Arrangement of lighting fixtures in the home should be such as to give you light where it is needed. Other light is costly, both to the eyes and pocketbook.

In furniture it is well to avoid excessive carving—knobs, balls, spindles, spirals and curly curves. In simple lines and broad, graceful curves there are charm and dignity.

Extensive wall and floor spaces are needed to properly carry large furniture, such as divans, davenports and "overstuffed" pieces. In small rooms they crowd and complicate the rooms, making them look much smaller than they are. In small rooms a simple, light set of furniture of the straighter type is best, but if that cannot be obtained furniture of the Georgian period will be found very satisfactory.

Adam furniture is always painted. Sheraton is always inlaid with other woods and Heppelwhite or Chippendale always carved. These are the principal Georgian period divisions and should be chosen according to individual requirements.

Mahogany, genuine or imitation, and other highly polished woods should be avoided where wear counts. They are easily scratched, gather dust and finger marks and require much labor to keep them in condition.

Period furniture should be used only in the rooms fitted completely in the given period. In modern small apartments, with little wall space and miscellaneous woodwork, it has no place.

Potted plants and cut flowers are a means of decoration that can be both inexpensive and effective. A large Boston fern or a single rose in a slender vase gives life and charm not to be gained in any other way.

"Have nothing in your home that you do not know to be useful and believe to be beautiful," stated William Morris.—From "Good Taste In Home Furnishings."

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

Pretty Little Maiden Whose Country Is at War.

DAUGHTER OF KING VICTOR.

Princess Giovanna, Fourth Child of the Royal Family of Italy, Is a Bright and Interesting Youngster—Puzzle and Games For Little People.

Princess Giovanna, daughter of King Victor and Queen Helene, is the fourth of the five children of the royal couple. She was born eight years ago and is described as an unusually bright and intelligent child. Just now, as everybody who reads is aware, there is a great war waging in Europe, and Italy is mixed up in it. Not only is Princess Giovanna's own country involved, but that of her grandfather as well. The princess' grandfather is the king of Montenegro, and since the war began, a year ago last August, his country has been at war. Montenegro is one of the smallest kingdoms in Europe and has a population of about 500,000. The king's name is Nicholas. So you see the little princess lives in troublous times, many of her near relatives being soldiers.

PRINCESS GIOVANNA OF ITALY.

"Up Jenkins."

Up Jenkins is an amusing game, and it requires at least three on each side of the table. Captains are chosen for each side. The side that has the coin (a quarter is preferable) must pass it along its side, or pretend to pass it until the opposing captain calls "Up Jenkins," and those on the side with the coin holds their hands up high, tightly closed. The captain then calls "Hands down," and all bring their hands upon the table, palms downward.

The captain looks at the hands before him and orders each hand in turn off the table that he thinks has not the coin under it. If the coin is discovered to be in the hand last off the table the coin goes to the side of the captain who guessed correctly, but if he guesses incorrectly and the coin is under one of the hands he has ordered off the table, the side holding the money keeps it again and wins that game.

A certain time set is the only way to end this game.

Ants That Sew.

A writer in the Visitor tells of a party of German naturalists recently returned from Ceylon, who have reported the existence of a species of ant that has been observed in the act of sewing two leaves together for the purpose of forming a nest. This report confirms the observations of the English naturalist, Ridley, made in 1890. They saw a row of the insects pulling the edges of leaves together, then others trimming and fitting the edges and finally the completion of the work by still other ants, which fastened the edges with a silky thread yielded by larvae of the same species, which the workers carried in their mandibles. It is said that the sewing ants pass the thread-giving larvae like shuttles through holes in the edges of the leaves.

Lucky Boy.

An extraordinary accident is reported from the neighborhood of Maidstone, England. A lad, eight years of age, was flying a kite when he stepped backward into a forty foot quarry, to the great horror of the bystanders. Fortunately for the little fellow, the string of the kite was tight around his wrist, and the kite, acting as a parachute, effectually broke the violence of the fall, and he was only slightly bruised.

Rockaby Ocean.

Oh, the Rockaby ocean
  Has waves that are high,
And they break on the shore
  Of Go-Sleepy-By.
And each time I hear
  A soft, drowsy sigh,
And each time I see
  A little shut eye.

And when all the waves
  Are quiet again
So quiet on Rockaby
  Ocean, why, then
The little bed boats go sailing away,
  Sailing and sailing until it is day,
And the white moon of dreams
  Comes out in the sky
And shines on the little
  Bed boats that sail by,
And shines on the shore
  Of Go-Sleepy-By,
And tickles the lids
  Of little shut eye.

CARVING A TURKEY

Advice For Those Who Will Perform the Operation.

USUALLY DONE BY THE HOST.

With the Eyes of the Hungry Assemblage Glued on Him, He Nonchalantly Gives the Dexterous Thrust That Cleaves the Brown Bird.

To carve a turkey at the table requires no small amount of self possession. Though there are the decorations, the last football game and a thousand other topics of interest to keep the attention of the guests away from the turkey end of the table, there inevitably comes the dreaded lull when the carver, warm with the struggle he is having with a refractory second joint, pauses to find the eyes of the assembled company fixed upon him as if drawn by a magnet. Of course this usually happens at the most critical point of the operation. For the unskilled carver it is a decidedly embarrassing position, and the joint that you know perfectly well how to locate and sever becomes most obstinate and unruly until you are ready to believe this turkey was made without any joints. In sheer desperation you make a remark that will turn the absorbed attention in any direction but your own, and you are left to hack and hew the carcass as best you can.

To watch the practiced carver is really a pleasure, and his easy manner in removing joints convinces you that carving a turkey is the simplest thing in the world. But to carve a turkey skillfully requires something more than self possession and a knowledge from general observation, and that is a careful study of the bird's anatomy. The amateur carver is a cook's bete noire. To see his work of art ruthlessly hacked to pieces by an unpracticed hand is enough to put him in a temper, for the success of the viand depends largely upon the dexterity with which it is handled.

The host usually manipulates the carving knife and fork, particularly at the Thanksgiving dinner. There seems to be a tradition that on this day the bird in all its brown and savory splendor should be placed intact upon the table. A thin, sharp bladed knife and a platter of sufficient size to hold the fowl and its disjointed portions are necessary to enable the carver to work with neatness and dexterity.

Whether it is good form to sit or stand while accomplishing the work depends entirely upon the comfort of the performer. There is also a question as to whether the head of the turkey should be to the carver's right or left. This is also for the individual to decide, but generally the head is to the left, as the wings and legs are more easily disjointed with a stroke from left to right. If the company be small and the bird one of good size carve from one side only. The other may be reserved for slicing cold.

The first move of the carver is to insert the fork astride the breastbone, at the point, plunging it deep enough to secure a firm hold. Then remove the drumstick with one stroke of the knife, first cutting through the skin down to the joint, hitting it squarely. It is a little difficult to locate this joint, but by pressing the leg away from the side of the turkey it is readily found.

It is claimed that the expert carver does not remove the fork from the breast until he has quite finished. Be that as it may, it is quite necessary to use the fork in separating the thigh from the drumstick, and the hip is a favorite part with many.

To accomplish this make a V shaped cut toward the joint, holding the thigh against the side of the turkey with the fork. The drumstick drops off neatly into the platter.

The next stroke removes the wing. A deep cut through the ball and socket joint severs this with a part of the breast meat. To strike the joint squarely the first time requires skill, though sometimes it is done very neatly by pure luck, and this calls forth most favorable comment from the expectant and hungry assemblage. If the knife doesn't strike the joint at first, move it back and forth, pressing the wing away from the body, disclosing the ball of the joint, then cut through, and the wing is detached.

When this process is completed the disjointed portions are laid to one side of the platter or put on a separate plate, to allow of free space for slicing the breast meat.

How to Scallop Skirts.

Cut the skirt the desired pattern and sew up the seams. Then carefully baste a six or seven inch facing to the right side of the skirt bottom, the wrong side of the facing uppermost, being sure that it lies very smoothly. Take a strip of paper the exact length of one-fourth of the skirt edge and on it cut scallops along one edge, large or small, as desired, but of course making them come out even. Pin this on the skirt with the edges of the scallops about half an inch from the bottom of the skirt and draw the curves with tailor chalk or lead pencil. Repeat this all around the skirt. Then machine stitch carefully on the chalk line. Trim away to one-quarter inch of the stitching, slipping several times where one scallop joins another to give span. This is very important.

Next unbaste the facing and turn it back to the inside of the skirt, working out the curves of your scallops and basting again to hold them. Machine stitch again round the curves, or, if you prefer, merely press firmly. The upper edge of the facing should be slip stitched.

He Showed Them How to Do It

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

During the latter part of the last century a great deal of whisky was distilled in the Tennessee mountains on which no tax was paid. One day a man appeared among the government officials who were endeavoring to hunt down a man named Hardwick, who had been for some time running a still concealed in the mountains and had thus far defied every effort on the part of the officials to trap him.

"What's the matter with you fellows," said the newcomer, "that you haven't got Hardwick? He's got to be taken and right away."

"All right, Mr. Barker," said Williams, the man addressed; "we'll do the job under your direction. Lead on."

Half a dozen men having been collected for the purpose, Barker started up the mountain side, followed by the others, and after a long and difficult ascent came upon a woman sitting on a rock crying bitterly.

"What's the matter?" asked Barker.

"Matter? Matter enough. Look a-yere." Pulling up her sleeve, she showed a welt that had evidently been made by a lash.

"Who did that?" asked Barker.

"My husband."

"Who is your husband?"

"Jim Hardwick."

Barker opened his eyes and looked knowingly at his men.

"Where is Hardwick?" he asked the woman.

"Reckon he's gone up to the"— She checked herself. "Who air you uns anyway?"

"I don't mind your knowing that we're revenue men, and we're going to get Jim Hardwick dead or alive!"

The woman stopped crying and looked fixedly at the men.

"I don't want you to kill him," she said, "but"—

"You mean," said Barker, "that you'd like to see him punished for his treatment of you?"

"Reckon I would."

"I'll tell you what I'll do. You help us get him and we'll give you $100."

The woman's face took on a covetous look. Barker followed up his advantage. "Show us the way to the still and keep him talking till we can surround it."

"What'll you do with him?"

"We'll turn him over to you."

He counted out ten crisp treasury notes and handed them to the woman. She took them hesitatingly, as though she did not quite like the job.

Half an hour later the revenue men, led by the woman, had come to a ravine. She paused and said: "The still's up thar. Ef you uns stop this end of the ravin' he can't git out; you got him shore." Barker dashed forward, ordering the others to follow. Williams called to him to wait a moment—perhaps the woman was deceiving them—but Barker paid no attention to him, and he went on with the rest. They found the climbing difficult, but pushed on, Barker displaying an energy that put the rest to shame. Williams alone hung back, bringing up the rear. But nothing like a still appeared. Then the men began to tire of the difficult climb and one by one fell to the rear. Barker, coming to a perpendicular cliff, stopped, waiting till the others came up. Nothing was said till Williams joined them.

"Waal?" he said doubtfully.

"Where's the woman?" asked Barker.

All looked about for her, but she was not to be seen.

"I tell you, Mr. Barker," said Williams, "where I reckon she is."

"Where?"

"With that hundred dollars you give her. And I reckon the hundred dollars is whar the still is. And I don't reckon the still is in this yere ravine neither."

There was an ominous silence.

"I reckon," said Williams, "that we uns might as well go home. Before we could find the still—and I reckon we couldn't—the hull thing would be cleaned out."

"Do you think so?" asked Barker absently. He was thinking of the hundred dollars that he had given the woman, and that he had intended to charge up to the government, but that now he would not dare to mention, and it would be a dead loss to himself. He was soon convinced by the others that to try to find either the still or Hardwick or his wife would be like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Mournfully he led the way down the mountain that he had climbed with such high hopes. When he came to the place where he had first seen the woman, there she was in her cabin near by washing dishes as unconcernedly as if nothing unusual had happened.

"Did you uns git him?" she asked, with well affected interest.

No reply was made, and she continued:

"Waal, I reckon you didn't or you would have brought him along. Ef I didn't help you out I reckon I ortn't give you back the money." She handed Barker the hundred dollars, which he took shamefacedly, then without a word continued the descent.

"Gittin' moonshiners," said Williams to Barker, "ain't such easy work after all."

"No," said the man who had come to Tennessee to show them how to do it; "I can't say it is. Don't you fellows say anything about this affair, and I'll report to Washington that you work under serious disadvantages."

Baths In Finland.

One of the greatest trials a visitor in Finland has to endure is a Finnish bath. The method of procedure is unique. Divested of outer clothing and attired in a light and airy cotton garment, you are slung in a sort of hammock composed of cord above a large receptacle like the boilers in public laundries. This is almost filled with cold water, into which at the right moment is flung a large redhot brick or piece of iron, which, of course, causes an overwhelming rush of steam to ascend and almost choke you. Then when that process has gone on sufficiently long you are shaken out of your hammock, immersed in cold water, and after very drastic treatment you resume your raiment, sadder and wiser than before your novel experience.

The Cocoa Plantation.

A traveler in South America, where the cocoa tree is largely cultivated, speaks of the great care with which the young plants have to be protected from the sun, which if very strong is fatal to them. To secure this protection the planters shield them by banana trees and plantain trees, the broad leaves of which give them the needed shade. And even when they are fully grown they need protection, which is given by trees known as "immortels," or, as the planters call them, "the mother of the cocoa." Thus the whole cocoa plantation has a sort of canopy.

Held Responsible.

"That dog of yours seems to have human intelligence."

"He ain't that lucky," answered the proprietor of the dog. "If he was to lose his temper an' turn hisself loose to hurt somebody he wouldn't have a chance in the world of pleading insanity."

UNDERSEA CRAFT.

The Strength and the Weakness of the Modern Submarine.

The chief advantages claimed for the submarine include comparative invisibility when submerged, coupled with immunity from gunfire while in that condition. It carries a weapon against which no adequate protection has been found. It presents a small and difficult target when itself assailed by torpedo attack. Other elements in its favor are low cost, handiness, seaworthiness in rough weather, comparative immunity from floating mines as well as those laid in very deep water and the possibilities of use as a mine layer.

On the other hand, the submarine is handicapped by many disadvantages and limitations. Its radius of action is small. Its speed is low, about 14 knots on the surface and 10 knots submerged.

The periscope is useless during darkness, and to operate at that time the vessels must therefore come to the surface, thus rendering themselves very vulnerable to the attacks of surface craft. Once the submarine's hull is damaged by gunfire, ramming or otherwise, it is no longer able to submerge, and its usefulness as a war vessel is ended until repairs can be made.

When flying at an elevation of less than 1,000 feet air craft can usually see submarines operating near the surface.—World's Work.

SERPENT OF LERNAEA.

Scientific Basis For the Myth of the Many Headed Monster.

A noted surgeon suggests that the story of the many headed serpent of Lernaea, if a myth, is yet a myth with an altogether scientific foundation. The monster was credited with anywhere from nine to 100 heads, and, according to the legend, if one was cut off another immediately grew in its place. Some averred that each head was replaced by two.

The origin of this serpent, as well as its acts and its final destruction by Hercules, are entirely fanciful, of course, but some recent juggling in biological laboratories seems to show that the ancients may have got their conceptions of its form and being from what they had actually seen. Professor T. H. Morgan, for instance, has cut off the anterior end of an earthworm and excised a piece of the central nerve cord. This left the anterior nerve ends, and a head grew from each.

Dr. Van Dyune recently went much further in the case of a marine planarian, actually developing six heads upon the creature, each with its own eyes and apparently normal in its functions.—Exchange.

NOT THE WIG'S FAULT.

The Baring of a Bald Fact That Had Been Long Hidden.

One of the best known wigmakers of the city declared recently that he had won a wager with his barber by wearing a wig to the tonsor's shop and having it well trimmed before the man with the shears discovered his mistake. Whether this is an exaggeration or not the hair furnisher has a long list of additional stories to back up his claim that wigs can be made so natural that it is all but impossible to detect them as artificial head covering.

"Why," said the wig man as he pointed to a case in his Sixth avenue establishment, "there are wigs in there made of human hair that I would defy the closest scrutiny to detect as 'fakes.' Would you believe it, one of my customers, a well known man in this section of the city, wore one of these wigs from the night he was married for ten long years, and his wife never knew that he was bald? It is a fact, sir, a positive fact.

"In year and out for the entire ten he was so careful that his spouse never had the slightest suspicion. The way the discovery came about was—well, while it was painful to him it nevertheless had a gleam of humor in it. He bought a new wig, and I sent him the bill to his business address. He carried the bill home inadvertently, changed his suit, and his wife found the little telltale paper in his pocket. And he would not have been discovered then only his wife, sad to say, believed that he was paying for the wig of some lady, and there was a stormy time. He was forced to reveal himself as bald. But you will readily see it was not the fault of my workmanship. I wear one myself. Could you tell? Nobody could."

Almost Made a Word.

Has bad handwriting ever managed to add a new word to the language? There have certainly been some narrow escapes. A correspondent sent to Sir James Murray for the New Oxford Dictionary the mysterious word "brean," which he found in a story by R. L. Stevenson. It was presumed to be an obscure Scottish term, and the presumption lasted till Stevenson wrote back that the word he had written was "ocean." Had the author been dead "brean" would no doubt have figured in the dictionary as sanctioned by "R. L. S."—London Observer.

MATCH POSTPONED

An Eastern League curling match between rinks representing Belleville and Napanee was to have been played here yesterday, but had to be postponed owing to mild weather and the ice being unfit to play upon.

ATTEMPT AT BURGLARY

At an early hour this morning whilst the police were making a tour of inspection of the back yards and back premises of stores on Front street they detected evidence of efforts being made to gain entrances to two prominent business places by forcing open the back doors leading to the main part of the store. The would-be burglars had evidently been frightened off from some cause, or realized that they were unable to accomplish their purpose. The affair is being investigated.

SOLDIER ARRESTED

Last night about 9.30, Dr. Dolan, who resides on Victoria Avenue, came out of his office for the purpose of taking his horse and cutter to answer a call, but was surprised to find that the outfit which had a few minutes previously been left in front of his residence and office, was gone. Later the horse and rig was found in possession of Corporal Blockhurst, who is a member of the 80th Battalion. The corporal was arrested and a charge of horse stealing has been preferred against him. This morning the accused was brought up before Police Magistrate Masson and was remanded until to-morrow without any evidence being taken.

Alkali in Soap Bad For the Hair

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

HUMORS OF CASTE.

How Rules Governing Travel, Study and Dining Are Broken.

Though going to foreign countries by crossing the ocean is to break one's caste, hundreds of young Indians are now visiting Europe and America in pursuit of modern scientific and industrial education. Indeed, so numerous are the families affected that public opinion has compelled the Brahmans to ordain that no loss of caste shall result from going abroad for education.

It is not so much the going abroad that is objected to as the eating of forbidden food, as beef, pork and chicken or any food cooked by foreigners. To obviate partly this difficulty the Hindus organized a steamship line, the Indian Peninsula company, between Bombay and London. On board the ships of this line Hindu caste rules are studiously observed. This company intends to open a hotel in London for the caste people of India, so that Hindu students, merchants and travelers may go to London, reside for any length of time and still return home without breaking their caste.

Caste rules prohibit people of different castes dining together. These rules, however, are broken by the rising generation in schools and colleges. The students, defying the cold and calculating conservatives, use the school and college building for dinner parties, where Hindus and Mohammedans, Christians and Jains, Buddhists and atheists, break bread together. In Benares, the stronghold of Brahmanical orthodoxy, intercaste dinners are of common occurrence. The Indian leaders in reform have gone a step further. On a public occasion they dined publicly with Europeans in the town hall of Calcutta. These dinners are helping break down obnoxious rules and thus are establishing dinner table democracy.

Belleville Intermediates Win Fast Game From Queens—Whitty Sick With La Grippe Plays Star Game—Kingston Team Outclassed

HOCKEY

On ice that was of the soft, sticky variety, the Belleville Intermediates defeated the Queen's Intermediate tem of Kingston at the local Arena by the score of 6—4. The first period ended by score of Queen 2, Belleville 1; the second, Belleville 5, Queens 2; the third, Belleville 6, Queens 4.

Symons and Whitty, the Belleville defense men, were the pick of the home team, while Smith, the netminder of Queen's was the best of the college boys. Whitty deserves especial mention as he played a most brilliant game and although severely handicapped through an attack of the grippe, he played his position right through to the finish. Referee Lesuer handled the game perfectly and to the satisfaction of the large crowd that was present. The line up was as follows:—

Queen's—Smith, goal; Spence and Fahey, defense; Toland, rover; Cook, centre; Robinson, l. wing; McQuaig, r. wing.

Belleville—Phillips goal; Symons and Whitty, defense; Finkle, rover; Earle, centre; Mullen, l. wing. Mitchell r. wing.

Referee—LeSeur, of Toronto.

NOTES

Belleville had it over Queen's like a tent.

Whitty won the plaudits of every hockey fan in the rink. Ben always was a good sport and he fairly lived up to his reputation last night.

That little junior in goal plays like a veteran.

Every man worked like a trojan and the team gives promise of being in at the finish. Brock is surely giving the fans the best that Belleville has. Hats off.

CORNWALL AND THE O. H. A.

Why did Cornwall drop out of the O. H. A. The following may help to explan.

(Kingston Standard)

The cat is out of the bag. Cornwall dropped out of the O.H.A. on the plea that its best players had been stolen by Montreal clubs. Now the Cornwall club is arranging to play in Cleveland. It begins to look as though Cornwall realized it would be unable to qualify and took the other excuse as a means of sliding out. It is even stated that "Newsy" Lalonde and others are interested in the formation of an outlaw league, embracing Cornwall, Brockville, Cleveland and a couple of Montreal teams.

(Montreal Star).

CORNWALL, Ont., Jan. 10.—E. N. Runions, manager of the Cornwall Hockey Club, received a message today from Harry Shannon of Cleveland asking for a series of games in that city on January 14 and 15, but Mr. Runions has not yet given Mr. Shannon a definite reply.

Two prominent rink managers of Montreal want Cornwall to enter a new league with them and are also trying to get Brockville to join. They promise that a handsome trophy will be put up.

It is rumored that Newsy Lalonde is behind one of the organizations, Manager Runions is giving the matter his careful consideration, and the local hockey fans may expect developments in a few days.

ELECTRICS 8, COBOURG 5.

PETERBOROUGH, Jan. 10.—Special—The Peterborough Electrics were better stick-handlers than the Cobourg O.H.A. intermediates tonight and won 8 to 5. The visitors presented the locals with two goals and the Petes scored another brace during the Cobourg netman's term in the penalty box. The teams:

Cobourg— Goal, Butler; defence, Drumm and Guy; rover, Lavis; centre, Hart; wings, Delaney and Reedy.

Peterborough—Goal, Montgomery; defence, A. Coughlin and Spratt; rover, Evans; centre, Hamilton; wings, Kenneally and McMartin.

Referee—Lang.

ICE RECORD BROKEN

The pacing race record established by Grand Opera at the Toronto Driving Club's meeting over Hillcrest track did not last very long. At Dufferin Park yesterday in the concluding heat of the 2.15 pace the Teeswater gelding, Paddy R., set up a new mark of 2.11¾, beating the previous figures by a quarter of a second. The weather was very mild, and the rain had made the ice soft on top, though there was a hard bottom of ice.

◆

Overworked Runabout.

A writer for a farm magazine says an ordinary runabout can be made to run a circular saw, pump water, haul freight, drive dairy machinery, fill the silo, shred the fodder and crush grain feed. Possibly, but it would have little time in which to run about.

Charge Explained.

Judge—What's your charge against the prisoner? Complainant—Burglary. He stole $5 from me at the station. Judge—But for burglary there must be a breaking. Complainant—Well, your honor, when he took the five he broke me.

A Female Veteran.

He—Isn't that General X. and his daughter over there? He—Yes. They say that she has been through more engagements than her old father.

A cheerful and glad spirit attains to perfection much more readily than a melancholy spirit.—S. Philip Neri.

In Despair.

"Don't you find it an awful expense to have three marriageable daughters on your hands?"

"Yes, and the worst of it is I'm beginning to think they're not marriageable."

Queens Gets Another $50,000

KINGSTON, Jan. 11.—Queen's University has been enriched to the extent of $50,000 by the benevolence of Dr. Douglas, its chancellor, G. Y. Chown, registrar of the university, and Hamilton Cassells, of Toronto, chairman of the Board of Trustees, returned yesterday afternoon from New York, with the information that Dr. Douglas had increased his grant to Queen's library from $100,000 to $150,000.

Messrs. Chown and Cassells went to New York for the purpose of presenting the plans to the chancellor. After he had looked them over carefully he decided on the additional grant.

The plans are now ready and work will be commenced as soon as favorable weather sets in.

GERMAN WESTERN DRIVE IS COMPLETLELY CHECKED

French Have Beaten Back Teuton Attack in the Champagne District—Captured Trenches Are Regained

ALL IS QUIET ON WESTERN FRONT NOW

Every Attempt of Germans is Repulsed and Big Attack Falls Flat—French Defences Prove to be Inpregnable

All Quiet Now

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The official French report of this afternoon as received here by wireless follows: "There were no events of importance last night except in the region between the Meuse and Argonne, where our batteries dispersed groups of enemy sappers who were at work in the region of Malincourt.

Strong Attacks

PARIS, Jan. 11.—The German drive in the Champagne, backed by three divisions of troops, has been completely checked by the French, according to a statement from the War Office here this afternoon. It was also stated that, with the exception of a small portion, the trenches taken by the Germans have been reoccupied by the French.

An Important Victory

"The Germans attacked on scarcely a smaller scale than we did last September. They fought desperately, but our artillery was invincible. We gained a really important victory." Thus a French captain, wounded early yesterday morning, described the recent fighting in the Champagne, whose extent and importance Paris still does not realize. The German bombardment, beginning Saturday morning, increased steadily in intensity—during the last twelve hours four hundred thousand shells plus asphyxiating gas fell on an eight-mile front—until Monday morning, when the infantry attacked.

Repeated Efforts

The enemy first launched a strong attack on the hill forming the western finger of the Massiges hand. The defenders' fire rolled them, shattered, down the slopes. Then against a five-mile front, between Main and Courtine, forty thousand Germans charged, no longer in solid columns, but in four successive waves on the French system. " 'Twas a repetition of our September offensive," said the officer. "The only difference was that we had then silenced their artillery and machine guns, while now ours maintained the supremacy."

Artillery Wins

Under the fire of the French "75's" assault they literally melted. A mere fraction reached the holes in the French wire torn by the bombardment and occupied some three hundred yards of the front trenches, which were mostly recaptured in the French counter-attacks. With fully three-fifths of fifty thousand soldiers taking part in the battle killed and wounded, General von Einach paid dearly for one hundred yards of French trenches, representing the net gain of the offensive.

French Attack Fails

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—The failure of the French attack on the German position to the north of LeMesnil in the Champagne district, along a front of about one thousand yards, was announced by the War Office to-day.

MANITOBA WILL VOTE ON PROHIBITION SOON

WINNIPEG, Jan. 11.—Bills providing for the speedy trials of election contests, prohibition, compulsory education, repeal of the Coldwell amendments and women suffrage were introduced in the legislature tonight. Premier Norris introduced the woman suffrage bill. The liquor bill is the Hugh John Macdonald Act of 1902. With it was introduced a bill providing for the submission of the Macdonald Act to a referendum vote on March 15. This measure provides that a simple majority will carry the province for prohibition, and the electors will be asked to vote on the question: "Are you in favor of the Manitoba Temperance Act?"

Slew Wife Then Suicided

Amazing Recital of Crime and Intrigue in Case Heard in Ottawa

OTTAWA, Jan. 11.—The brutal murder of a wife by her husband, the husband's spectacular suicide forged documents, and the scene shifting rapidly from the peaceful town of Cornwall, Ontario, to Nome, Alaska; Butte, Montana; New York and the Pacific coast, were features of an amazing recital of crime and intrigue, which was revealed in the course of a case heard before the Supreme Court of Canada here.

Judgment has not been given in the case, but it is expected within a day or two.

The plaintiff in the case, Mr. S. C. C. Hedge, now residing in Cornwall, but formerly of Port Blakely, Wash., claims to recover from Charles Morrow, a farmer, living in Roxborough township, the west half of Lot Letter A in the Sixth Concession of Roxborough, containing 100 acres of land, on the ground that Morrow has no title to the farm, but that on the contrary the proper title to the same is in Mrs. Hedge. Both parties agree that the farm was the property of one Isabella M. Gilchrist, and the contest arose out of the checkered career of this woman, who was a sister of Mrs. Hedge and went west some years ago, living most of the time in Butte, Mont.

Got Power of Attorney

From the evidence given it appeared that in 1904 Miss Gilchrist went to Nome, Alaska. On her way out she met one Lee H. Johnston, who afterwards paid her some attention and married her in June, 1905. In September, 1905, Johnston induced his wife to execute in his favor a power of attorney, which the plaintiff in the present action alleges was confined in its operation to Alaska only. It was so drawn in the first place and when registered in Alaska was in that condition. This registration accrued in June, 1906.

The plaintiff says that her sister disappeared in October, 1905, and that she was foully murdered by her husband, Johnston. Nothing has been seen or heard of her since October, 1905. In November, 1906, Johnston saw the plaintiff in Butte, Mont. In December, 1906, (the appeared in Maxville with the power of attorney altered so as to make it applicable to the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada. He also had all the title papers n connection with the farm.

Says Price Falsely Entered

Charles Morrow, the defendant in the action, who had been for years tenant on the farm of the plaintiff, alleges that he and Johnston got together and the bargain was made, after which Johnston sold the farm for $2,700 although the documents made it appear that the price was $3,000. The papers were drawn by A. H. Robertson, a conveyancer, at Maxville, who made a copy of the power of attorney. Johnston then went to New York city, taking the original power of attorney with him, also the proceeds of the sale.

Difficulty having arisen in connection with the registration, owing to the lack of proof of execution of the power of attorney, Johnston returned the power of attorney to Morrow, but they were no better off with the original than with the copy, and subsequently the original was returned to Johnston. From New York city Johnston wrote several letters to the plaintiff in the action, stating that the Morrows desired to buy the place, but he refused to sell it. He saw the plaintiff in Butte, Montana, on February 1, 1907, and gave her a letter which purported to be from her sister, Mrs. Johnston, but which was in typewriting. Various other letters were received by the plaintiff, purporting to be from her sister, but thes were either in typewriting or in Johnston's handwriting.

Arrest and Suicide

The Morrows nad fresh deeds prepared and sent to Nome for execution, but they never heard again from Mrs. Johnston. In 1900 the plaintiff, who had in the meantime moved to the Pacific coast and married, was appraised that there was a suspicion in Nome in reference to her sister's disappearance, and inquiries led to Johnston's arrest for the murder of his wife in August, 1908. He was then living in Seattle with a woman who claimed to have married him in Omaha, Nebraska, in 1900.

Johnston waived extradition, and was taken to Alaska by steamer. While the steamer was going through the Unimac Pass on the way to Nome, Johnston disappeared and the United

PERSISTENTLY RUMORED THAT KAISER IS DYING

Crown Prince Being Lauded in German Press—Operation Unsuccessful and Another is Necessary—Kaiser is Heart Broken

AUSTRIANS TAKE MONTENEGRIN FORTRESS

Serious Set Back For Brave Little Army—Fate of Serbia to Fall on Them—Bulgars Attack Saloniki—Turks and Bulgars to Co-operate

Kaiser's End Near

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Daily Express Amsterdam correspondent says there are rumors everywhere in Germany that the Kaiser is dying. The Kaiser is said to be confined to private apartments and nursed only by the Kaiserine. He is absolutely broken-hearted owing to the impendng collapse of Germany's great financial machine and the dangerous financial situation of the Empire. Color is given to the reports that the Kaiser is near to death by the publication of extravagant eulogies of the Crown Prince in the German Press. The Daily Express Geneva despatch says the first operation on the Kaiser's throat was a failure and a second operation has been ordered.

Austrians Capture Fortress

LONDON, Jan. 11.—(Special.)—After four days of furious attacks by land, supported by a hurricane of uninterrupted fire from their warships, the Austrians have captured the Montenegrin stronghold of Lovcen.

Lovcen is a heavily-fortified mountain 5,770 feet high, which dominated the Austrian naval base at Cattaro on the Adriatic. It is only about six and one-half miles west of Cettinje, the Montenegrin capital, to which the way is now practically open.

Also Berane

The Austrians and Bulgarians have also captured the less important town of Berane, in interior Montenegro, on the River Lim.

The Montenegrins acknowledge the loss of both places. As an offset the official Montenegrin report issued this afternoon claims to have secured important victories on Sunday on the eastern and northern fronts. It is evident, however, that Montenegro's gallant little army, surrounded on three sides, is makng its last stand in the mountain fastnesses.

The Austrian troops are slowly and steadily pressing forward from the north and east, while the Bulgars are advancing from the south.

Same Fate as Serbs

A Rome despatch to-night quotes an Italian military export as saying:

"It is only a matter of time when the Montenegrins will meet the same fate as the Serbians."

Bulgars Attack Greeks

PARIS, Jan. 11.—A Saloniki despatch to The Temps says:

"The 27th Bulgarian Regiment attacked Greek troops near Vestrina and attempted to occupy two frontier posts

"The fighting lasted six hours. Both sides used artillery. Only two Greek soldiers were killed. The Bulgarian losses were serious."

Advance on Saloniki

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The London Daily News has the following from its correspondent at Rotterdam: The Berlin correspondent of The Nieuwe Rotterlamsche Courant declares that Field Marshal von Mackensen last week visited Sofia and settled all plans for the expedition against Saloniki. He says:

Bulgars to Join Attack

"The Bulgarian Government is no longer inclined any more than is the Turkish Government, to wait until the troops of the Entente Powers leave Saloniki of their own accord or are turned out by Greece.

"The Bulgarian Government has now decided to take part in the expedition to force Greece to drive out the French and British.

"This undertaking probably will begin in a short time. All preparations have been made, and it has been decided to make an end of the presence of the Entente troops as speedily as possible, cost what it will, without taking into account whether or not the presence of Bulgarian and Turkish troops on Greek territory may be pleasant to the Greek Government."

London Safe From Zeppelins

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—Dr. W. H. Vincent, of the Colonial Medical Corps. who arrved to-day on the American liner Philadelphia, stated that during December 12th attempted Zeppelin raids on London were repulsed and three Zeppelins destroyed, two of them by aeroplanes and one by the fire from ships in the harbor. Since October 14th, Zeppelins have in no case been able to reach even the outskirts of London. Yet although the Metropolis is believed now to be safe from these raids, there is an elaborate organization in case of emergency so that if a bomb were to strike, a fire company and a medical staff would be on the spot in five minutes.

AMMUNITION DEPOT IS BLOWN UP

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—An Ammunition Depot in the southern section of Lille, Northern France, has been blown up. An official announcement says that seventy persons were killed and forty injured. Considerable damage to property was done.

ARTILLERY ACTIVITY ON THE BRITISH FRONT

LONDON, Jan. 11.—(Special)—The British Headquarters report from France today says:

"The night was quiet on the British front. Today there was some artillery activity about Hulluch and Ypres.

"Our efforts with artillery, trench mortars and hand grenades near Armentiers and St. Eloi were effective."

MEXICANS MASSACKE SEVENTEEN NEUTRALS

Sixteen Americans and One Canadian Dragged From Train And Killed

ONE CANADIAN MURDERED

(Canadian Press Special)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Official despatches from Chihuahua to the State department says that the bodies of the seventeen Americans who were shot by Villa Bandits arrived there last night. Secretary Lansing telegraphed General Carranza calling for prompt punishment on the bandits who executed the Americans. Through Elizeo Arredondo, newly appointed Mexican Ambassador here, it was arranged to bring the bodies from Chihuahua to Juarez today on a special train. A despatch from Elpaso says that one of the bandits victims named Couch, was a Canadian.

17 Massacred

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 11—(Special)—Seventeen persons, all thought to be Americans, returning from Chihuahua city to open mines at Cusihuirachic, Chihuahua, were taken from a Mexican Northwestern train yesterday by bandits, stripped and lined up along the track for execution, according to a message received here to-day from Thomas M. Holmes, one of the seventeen, who made his escape. Later advices that sixteen persons had been killed came to-night from British Consul Scovell at Chihuahua city. They were meagre, and stated that more information was being sought.

It is supposed the bandits belonged to the forces of General Jose Rodriguez, a Villa supporter known to be operating in Chihuahua against the de facto Government.

Collector of Customs Cobb of El Paso, ex-officio representative of the State Department on the border, late to-day telegraphed to Washington that he had received reports which appeared to confirm the reported massacre.

Report Confirmed

Washington, Jan. 11.—Cpceial.)—The State Department to-night received a telegram from Collector of Customs Cobb at El Paso reporting the news received there of the death of fifteen or more Americans in a massacre at Cusihuirachic, Mexico. The department immediately wired for further facts upon which to base official action.

POULTRY SHOW OPENS WITH RECORD EXHIBIT

Largest Number of Fowls Ever Shown Here Now on Exhibition – Miss Yates, Government Lecturer, Speaks in City Hall

That the fourth annual winter Poultry Show, now being held in the market building in this city, under the auspices of the Belleville Poultry Association, is the best ever held, there is not the slightest doubt. The number of entries are far in excess of the previous exhibits and the birds shown are superb in every respect. There are upwards of 1700 fowls on exhibition, and the breeds represented are the Anconas, Andalusians, Brahams, Buckeye, Campines, Cochin, Dominiques, Dorking, Faverolles, Game, Hamburgs, Houdans, Javas, Lafleshe, Lakenvedders, Langshans, Leghorns, Minorcas, Orpingtons, Rocks, Polish, Rhode Island Reds, Silkies, Sulton, Sussex and Wyandottes.

In the bantam exhibits all varieties are shown in considerable numbers, including the game bantams.

A number of fine specimens of ducks are to be seen, including the Pekin, Rouen and Indian Runner.

The display of geese is also excellent. The breeds shown are the Emden and Toulouse.

A few coops containing turkeys of the Bronze, White and A.O.V. variety are shown and attract much attention.

The judges are Messrs. J. Billing, of St. Mary and L. J. Jarvis of Grimsby, and they state that the exhibit is without doubt the 3rd best in Canada, which speaks well for the exhibitors and the officers of the Association, who have done all in their power to make this the best exhibit ever held in Belleville. In this respect their labors have not been in vain. The officers are as follows:

Honoray President—Wm. J. Thompson.

President—T. E. Sullivan.
1st iVce-President—E. W. DeShane.
2nd Vice-President—Jas. Taylor.
Treasurer—Wm. J. Thomson.
Show Secretary—Thos. Moore.
Corres.Secretary—C. M. Stork, Jr.
Directors—P. G. Denike, T. E. Ketcheson, W. Moore, C. M. Stork, A. S. Large, J. B. Archibald, Jas. Taylor, H. McKnight, Harry Freeman.
Superintendent—P. G. Denike.

A number of beautiful cups and other trophies have been offered as prizes and the competition for the possession of these coveted prizes is in many classes keen.

Already many citizens have visited the show and those who have not done so should avail themselves of the opportunity to do so. It will be open this evening and to-morrow.

Interesting Lecture

In the Council Chamber of the City Hall last evening, an interesting lecture was given by Miss Yates, Government Lecturer, on the killing and dressing of poultry, for the benefit of those engaged in the poultry industry, and the buying of poultry for the

Slew Wife Then Suicided

States district attorney, who was on the steamer, and who in common with several others, was examined as a witness in the case, swore that there was no doubt that Johnston had committed suicide by leaping overboard.

Declared Wife a Suicide

While under arrest in Seattle, Johnston stated to the officers that his wife died in October, 1905, having committed suicide by taking cyanide of potassium and that at her request he had dismembered her body and after keeping it in a couple of crates where he was living in Nome, had removed the remains to another cabin and after burning them buried them in the tundra north of the town. He indicated where the place of burial was and the remains were found by officers at Nome, and a verdict rendered charging Johnston with murder.

Under the circumstances the plaintiff claims that Morrow can derive no title from Johnston, in the first place because his wife was dead and the power of attorney was thereby revoked, and in the second place because the power of attorney was a forgery and never extended to any territory outside of Alaska.

For the defence it was urged that there was no evidence to show that Mrs. Johnston died, or that she was in fact dead, and further that it was to be presumed that the power of attorney was added to by Mrs. Johnston herself after its execution and registration so as to cover the property in Canada.

The Plaintiff"s Claims

The plaintiff claimed under a will made in her favor by her sister while in the east and also under quit claim deeds in her favor by a majority of the heirs-at-law. She also claimed damages for the cutting of a bush on the premises and claimed occupation rent since 1906.

The defendant on the other hand in the event of the title being held bad, so far as he was concerned, claimed $250 for improvements done under mistake of title. The defendant had secured registration of his deed and the copy of the power of attorney in the registry office at Cornwall by an order of Judge Liddell, obtained by affidavit evidence submitted by himself and Mr. Robertson.

C. H. Cline, of Cornwall appeared for the plaintiff in the case; and G. A. Stiles, of Cornwall for the defendant.

BELLEVILLE

The recruiting meeting at Deseronto last evening was very successful both financially and in the interests of recruiting.

Major Allan, Lieuts. Wills and Sanford of the 155th Battalion, and Mr. J. F. Wills have left to-day for Marlbank, where a recruiting meeting is to be held to-night.

Lieut. Raymond of the 155th Battalion, has been detailed to take charge of the recruits at Deseronto.

Sergt. McGee left England on January 5 on the S. S. Missanabie, and on his arrival here will take charge of the Machine Gun Section of the 155th Battalion.

The 155th Battalion has secured during yesterday, seven recruits from Belleville, eight from Bancroft and five from Stirling.

A dental parade of 15 men of the 80th Battalion, was held this morning.

Lieut. Blaker, acting adjutant of the 80th Battalion, has been compelled to relinquish his position temporarily on account of an attack of throat trouble. His many friends hope for a speedy recovery.

KINGSTON

There is talk of erecting buildings for the accommodation of troops at Bowmanville and Port Hope.

Part of the canning factory barracks at Belleville is being used as a recreation room for the 80th battalion.

It is published for the information of all concerned that N.C.O.'s and men enlisted into units of the Canadian Expeditionary Force must not appear in part 2 daily orders until their attestation papers are complete and they have been declared "fit" by the medical officer.

All officers leaving this Division in charge of units or drafts for overseas will make arrangements immediately on arrival at point of embarkation is reached to get in touch wth the ordnance officer at the point and to draw from Ordance Stores any additional stores, etc., which have been sent to the point in question for the unit concerned.

In the present war methods of fighting are reverting to types long considered passed forever. A soldier in the trenches of the western front dressed up in all the protective means now used, including gas mask, etc., looks very much like an armoured knight of the days "When Kinghthood was in Flower." It looks as though "bombing" was an nvention of the Chinese, who hundreds of years ago used pots to throw at an enemy before they charged, and these bombs were filled with noxious gases, the fumes of which threw the enemy into confusion, and gave the bombers the advantage. China—is evidently the enlightened country from which Germany received her military "kultur."

IN AND ABOUT THE CITY

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

The Seymour Power Co. car while on the Trent road last night, skidded into a telegraph pole, the result being a broken back axle. It was drawn back into the city this morning by another car.

GRADUATING EXERCISES

Graduating exercises will take place at the Belleville Hospital from 4 to 6 o'clock Friday afternoon next for three nurses who intend going oversea for military duties. The names of the nurses are, Miss Howard, Miss Crozier and Miss Mastin.

CASE DISMISSED

Corporal Blockhurst, who on Monday evening took Dr. Dolan's horse and outfit and drove off with same, was this morning discharged by Police Magistrate Masson, as there was no disposition to press the charge. The accused was given some timely advice by the magistrate, which he will do well to heed.

VICTIM PROGRESSING

Mrs. Wellman, who was seriously injured on Saturday afternoon last at the Cannifton railway crossing, is getting along as well as would be expected. At the hospital it has been ascertained that several small bones were fractured in her thigh, and the ultimate outcome of her injuries cannot at present be fully defined. Yesterday the news of the death of her husband was broken to her.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

Mrs. Mott, College street, has returned home after spending a few days in Toronto.

Mr. J. F. Wills, K.C., left for Marlbank today to attend a patriotic meeting.

Col. Ponton, who has been seriously ill in the Belleville Hospital for some days, is now almost sufficiently recovered to return to his home.

PUZZLED
Hard, Sometimes, to Raise Children

Children's taste is oftentimes more accurate, in selecting the right kind of food to fit the body, than that of adults. Nature works more accurately through the children.

A lady says: "Our little boy had long been troubled with weak digestion. We could never persuade him to take more than one taste of any kind of cereal food. He was a weak little chap and we were puzzled to know what to feed him on.

"One lucky day we tried Grape-Nuts. Well, you never saw a child eat with such a relish, and it did me good to see him. From that day on it seemed as though we could almost see him grow. He would eat Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper, and I think he would have liked the food for dinner.

"The difference in his appearance is something wonderful.

"My husband had never fancied cereal foods of any kind, but he became very fond of Grape-Nuts and has been much improved in health since using it.

"We are now a healthy family and naturally believe in Grape-Nuts.

"A friend has two children who were formerly afflicted with rickets. I was satisfied that the disease was caused by lack of proper nourishment. The children showed it. So I urged her to use Grape-Nuts as an experiment and the result was almost magical.

"They continued the food and today both children are as well and strong as any children in this city, and, of course, my friend is a firm believer in Grape-Nuts for she has the evidence before her eyes every day." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

FARM DWELLING BURNED IN TYENDINAGA

Mr. Cross Carter, a yeoman residing in the 8th concession of Tyendinaga Township, last night suffered a severe loss in the destruction by fire of his dwelling. Mr. Cross and family were absent from home at the time, being at the bedside of Mrs. Carter's father, who passed away at an early hour this morning. When the fire was discovered it had gained considerable headway and all efforts to save the building or any of the contents proved futile. The house, a frame one, was completely destroyed. We are informed that $700 in money in the house was burned. Mr. Carter is treasurer of the school section in that part of the township, and the money had been collected by him. The loss sustained by the fire is only partially covered by insurance. Other farm buildings adjacent to the house were saved from the devouring element.

Slander.

Slander, sir! You do not know what you are disdaining. I have seen the most respectable persons almost overwhelmed by it. * * * At first a light sound, skimming the earth like a swallow before the storm, very softly (planissimo) it murmurs and purrs and sows in its course poisoned arrows. It is on somebody's mouth, and softly, softly (piano, piano) it glides slyly into your ear. The evil is done. It is born, it creeps, it walks, and with growing power (rinforzando) it goes from mouth to mouth diabolically. Then, all of a sudden—I can't tell you how—you see Slander straighten up, hiss, swell and grow tall before your very eyes. It springs, stretches its wings, whirls, envelops, seizes, carries off; it flashes lightning; it thunders and becomes a hue and cry, a public crescendo, a universal chorus of hatred and proscription. Who indeed could stop it?—Beaumarchais.

Thurlow Red Cross Society

The second monthly meeting of the executive of the Thurlow Red Cross Society was held in Foxboro on Tuesday, Jan. 4th, 1916. The regular packing was done, consisting of seven boxes.

One box contained 157 pairs of hand made socks; 1 box contained 101 sheets; 1 box, 39 flannelette night shirts; 1 box, 48 suits pyjamas; 1 box, hospital supplies and hot water bottles; 1 box, 137 pillow cases, 24 sheets, 48 towels; 1 box, 29 hospital helpless shirts; 19 suits pyjamas, 2 flannel day shirts.

The business meeting was held in the afternoon and was well attended. Mrs. A. G. Bennett, of Point Anne, was made vice-president of the executive. The workers are most enthusiastic, and the amount of goods manufactured by the Thurlow women is very great.

The articles made by Point Anne Patriotic Society were: 66 pillow slips, 47 sheets.

The Point Anne Society made the following articles raising the money by subscription from the ladies: 2 day shirts, 7 pairs socks, 6 suits pyjamas.

From the Quinte Institute: 38 sheets, 4 pillow slips

May Have Made It Up.

The expression, "If you will let me write a nations' songs I care not who makes their laws," seems to have had a singular origin, its putative father being Andrew Fletcher (1655-1716), a Scotchman, who divided his time between politics and literature. In a letter to a nobleman of the period Fletcher said, "I know a very wise man who believed that if a man were permitted to make all the ballads he need not care who should make the laws of a nation." Perhaps the alleged wise man was a myth and the expression originated with Fletcher himself.

benefit of the householder. His Worship, the Mayor, took the chair and in his address extended a welcome to those who came from out of town to attend the Poultry Show and introduced to those present the lecturer, Miss Yates.

In her address Miss Yates stated that it was necessary to have the poultry races pure. In killing the birds the head should never be chopped off with an axe or its neck should not be wrung, but the best method is to sever the jugular vein. This enables the bird to bleed properly and it is to the interests of both farmer and housewife to see that they are bled properly. The former will get a higher price for his fowl if they are of a clear color, which denotes proper bleeding. The housewife is also protected from disease if no discolorations appear on the poultry.

The best birds for market are those who have plump breasts, rounded limbs and well meated backs. The laying variety are those that have big bones and are of a nervous disposition. The surroundings in which the birds are reared also have an effect on the market value. The birds that are allowed to run all over and pick up all kinds of food are not so valuable as those which are kept in a limited area and fed the proper food. Young chicks should be kept in a space of 6 by 8 feet, the coop being shifted to different surroundings each morning.

When the birds are killed the cooling should not be done by placing them in ice water. Letting them cool in an atmosphere of cool, dry air at 33-35° Fahrenheit. Scalding the birds is considered by Miss Yates, to be a crime, as this take out all the oils in the skin. If all these facts were to be observed by the housewife, and she refused to buy any other but those that are properly dressed and bled, the farmer would then take the necessary steps to treat his poultry so that they would be saleable.

In dealing with the question whether birds should be drawn or undrawn when offered for sale, Miss Yates stated that it was better to have the birds undrawn.

In preparing the birds for the purpose of packing them so as to be shipped away, the poultry should be properly bled so as not to have stale blood scattered over the fowl when put into the barrel, and should be properly fasted before being killed in order to let the stomach be entirely empty before killing. If these rules are followed the barrel upon opening, would reveal a very clean and clear colored barrel of poultry, which would bring a high price to the farmer.

The audience were then given the liberty of asking any question about any difficulties they were in.

A few questions were asked by the audience, to which Miss Yates clearly answered.

A vote of thanks was then extended to Miss Yates for her interesting lecture by Mr. T. E. Sullivan, President of the Poultry Association, which was seconded by Mr. Mallory.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

On January 7 a very happy gathering assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Russell, Rednerville, it being the twentieth anniversary of their marriage, when they received a choice lot of presents, among them being a kitchen cabinet from the friends of the neighborhood, with the following address read by Mr. Cyril Weese:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Russell:—On this, the twentieth anniversary of your marriage, we, your friends and neighbors assembled, wish to express to you our heartfelt appreciation of your kindness toward us by asking you to accept this kitchen cabinet, not for its intrensic value, but for the friendship, kind feelings and good wishes conveyed in this manner from your many friends.

We sincerely hope and trust that it will be a token of the bond of friendship never to be broken, and that peace, happiness and long life may be granted you in years to come.

There are no friends like the old friends,
Who have shared our morning days.
No greetings like their welcome,
No homage like their praise.
Fame is the scentless sunflower,
With gaudy crown of gold.
But friendship is the breathing rose,
With sweets in every fold.

Signed on behalf of your many friends.

After this being read and the presentation made the guests assembled to the dining room and partook of a sumptuous repast provided by the hostess. In the evening a very enjoyable time was spent by games and dancing. Sills' orchestra was in attendance. At a late hour all dispersed to their homes, declaring that Mr. and Mrs. Russell had proved themselves an ideal host and hostess.

Divorce Lobby In the Senate

W. B. Northrup, M. P., Criticizes The Way Marriages Are Dissolved in Canada

OTTAWA, Jan. 10—W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P., (Hastings), made an address last night at the People's Forum, Bank street, on "Marriage and Divorce in Canada." Mr. Northrup deplored the indifference of members of the legislatures on this point and pointed out that the people of Canada might consider the question of the revision of the law on the subject and insist, on their representatives giving effect to their wishes.

That the laws of Canada on the subject of marriage and divorce are not amended was due to the indifference of the people and to the indifference of hypocrisy of the legislators, said Mr. Northrup. There is no more widespread fallacy than that persons were married by a minister. No clergyman ever married anyone but himself to some other person. The minister is the official witness to see that the laws of the country are carried out. For centuries it had been the practice of the groom to go to the house of the bride and in the presence of witnesses to affirm that from henceforth the couple were man and wife.

In 1563 the famous Council of Trent passed a decree providing that marriage should be celebrated in the church of the state and in the presence of witnesses. This did not apply to England at that time. After the Reformation a commission was appointed to revise the canons of the church on this matter. In the meantime a statute was passed which was to be in force until the report of the commission was issued. "That was 400 years ago," he said, "and the report is not yet forthcoming." Whether the contracting parties were Roman Catholics or Dissenters, no marriage was valid unless it was performed in the parish church.

This injustice continued until 1836 when a law was passed which first allowed the marriage of persons who held a denominational faith other than the state religion to be celebrated in their own churches.

In Canada the Dominion House and the local houses have no power to legislate except so far as the British North America Act specifies. Under this, marriage and divorce are given over to the Federal House. Mr. Northrup quoted legal authorities to the effect that the working of the acts relating to this subject had been the cause of much trouble. The Ne Temere decree a few year ago had added to these troubles.

"If a Roman Catholic is married to a Protestant," said Mr. Northrup, "by a Protestant minister in Ontario, the marriage is certainly legal according to Ontario law and if he dies without leaving a will, the wife would inherit. At the same time such a marriage is forbidden by the Ne Temere decree unless solemnized by the proper Roman Catholic priest and consequently in the eyes of Roman Catholics the marriage would be considered void in the sight of heaven. Is the poor girl's future likely to be made happier by the possibilty that her husband may adopt this view and feel that, although bound by the law of Ontario, she isn't his wife in the sight of heaven?

"The Kaiser," continued the speaker, "with all his faults had seen to it that Germany was excepted from this decree and the German girl was on a better footing in this respect than the Canadian woman."

Negotiations might be entered into with the Roman authorities to see if this country could not also be excepted. There was a great deal of doubt as to whether this country should grant divorces, said Mr. Northrup. However, at the present time we were granting them, whether right or wrong. But in the whole Dominion there was no way in which a poor person could get a divorce—the rich could. If it were right, why should the poor have to go without whilst the rich were favored?

Lobbying For Divorces

Mr. Northrup referred to the lobbying of members of the Senate by ladies desirous of obtaining decrees and deplored the system that was conducive to such scenes. "Canada is a country where there is one law for the rich and another for the poor," he said, "and it is impossible for a poor person to obtain a divorce in this country. This is a state of affairs which should be remedied. Divorce should be as easy of acquirement for a poor person as for the rich."

The power of the law courts ought to be extended to include dealing with this matter. Mr. Northrup pointed out that in only two countries in the world are divorces granted the way they are given in Canada. They were Canada and Ireland. There were three countries where divorces were not granted at all—Spain, Italy and Newfoundland. In every other country the law courts had power to deal with the matter.

The only way would be for the people to take hold of the question and see to it that the legislators appointed by them reflected their desires. Let society consider it, let the women who are taking such a large part in public life also consider the question. "The future will be assured," he said, "if the people of Canada will calmly take stock of this matter which so closely affects themselves."

PERSONAL.

St. Catharines, Ont.—"Two years ago I was in a very nervous, generally run-down condition, so that I awoke in the morning more tired than when I retired. The doctors thought I had heart trouble and treated me for it but I got no benefit. I heard of Dr. Pierce's remedies through a friend who had been to your Invalids' Hotel for an operation (which proved entirely successful) and I at once got the 'Favorite Prescription.' I took three bottles altogether and at the end of three weeks I felt entirely cured and have been well and strong since, without a single bad spell. I stopped taking it about three months ago and am glad to tell any one how splendidly your medicine has healed me."—Mrs. John Lewin, 53 Niagara St., St. Catharines, Ont.

The mighty restorative power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It is a wonderful prescription prepared only from nature's roots and herbs with no alcohol to falsely stimulate and no narcotic to wreck the nerves. It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

New Home Treatment for Banishing Hairs

(Beauty Topics)

With the aid of a delatone paste, it is an easy matter for any woman to remove every trace of hair or fuzz from face, neck and arms. Enough of the powdered delatone and water is mixed into a thick paste and spread on the hairy surface for about 2 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed. This completely removes the hair, but to avoid disappointment, get the delatone in an original package.

Toronto to Deport Insane Pittsburger

TORONTO, Jan. 11.—Ellis Fischer, of Pittsburg; the man who has been refused admission to the Detention Hospital and the Don Jail by the authorities, and who threatened to expose the methods of Toronto doctors, lawyers, and most every person in official positions in the city, but could not get anyone to aid him, is again in trouble.

He was arrested last night at the instigation of the immigration authorities for deportation on the grounds of being an undesirable.

Eighteen-Hour Trip

Starting out from one of the downtown hotels early in the morning he engaged a taxi-cab and drove through the city for about eight hours. In his tour he called at a number of offices in the busy section and requested the stenographers to type him an indictment against the hospital officials, doctors, police and the lawyer who defended him in the police court last week. On hearing his story the owners of the offices refused to help him and told him to leave the building whereupon he denounced them as being in league with the "conspirators," as he called the doctors and others, and hurled abuse at their heads. In some cases he had to be forcibly ejected. When he dismissed the taxicab in the evening he told the taxicab driver he had no money to pay the bill. Had he not been taken in charge for the immigration officials he would have been arrested on a charge of threatening to shoot Acting Detective McConnell, against whom he seems to have a grudge. McConnell had a warrant sworn out against him yesterday evening, but when he arrived Fischer was in custody of the Agnes street station.

Will Fight Deportation

Fischer says he will fight deportation in every manner possible and intimated that he would have the taxicab driver as a witness in his behalf.

He declares he is a man of means and that he is in the city because he is interested in military operations. All the people in the city, especially those in authority, he says, are conspiring against him, but he intends "showing them up."

He was at first committed to the Insane Asylum, West Queen street, but obtained his release and was again arrested and brought before Magistrate Denison last Thursday, when he was ordered to be detained at the Detention Hospital. On arrival at that institution he was refused admission and was brought back to Court street station. Next morning he appeared in the police court and was sent over the Don, but he managed to obtain his release on Saturday. Since then he has been boarding at a number of first-class hotels in the centre of the city. When he appeared before Col. Denison on Thursday he wanted to prefer a charge against the hospital doctor, and on being ordered to be taken away he shouted to the magistrate that he "would lift the lid off hell" before he had finished.

Get Imperial Naturalization

Baron Shaughnessy, Late Sir William Van Horne and E. J. Chamberlin on the List

OTTAWA, Jan. 11.—Sir George Perley, Baron Shaughnessy, the late Sir William Van Horne and Mr. E. J. Chamberlain, of the Grand Trunk, are the first four names on the list of persons to whom Imperial naturalization has been given during the year 1915. These were naturalized Canadians but did not have Imperial naturalizatoin. All of these are natives of the United States.

The fifth on the list is Howard G. Kelley, vice-president of the G. T. R. He is also a native of the United States.

Other interesting names are: Dr. E. G. Deville, Dominion Surveyor-General, a native of France; Charles F. Sise, of Montreal, manager of the Bell Telephone, a native of U. S.; Paul F. Sise, vice-president and general manager of the Northern Electric Co., also a native of the U. S., Joseph Moscovitz, a merchant of Edmundston, N. B., a native of Roumania; Samuel Wener, a Montreal manufacturer; a native of Russia; Rev. Eshoo Odeeboo Eshoo of Knox College, Toronto, a native of Turkey; Henry F. Meurling, a Montreal civil engineer, who came from Sweden.

Consul Became British

Joseph B. Di St. Pietro, the Italian Consul at Winnipeg, has become a British subject, and Jacob L. Englehart, chairman of the T. and N. O. Ry. has obtained Imperial naturalization. He is a native of the United States, but has been naturalized in Canada since 1882.

Another interesting name is that of E. R. Carrington, vice-president of the Thiel Detective Service, who got Canadian naturalization in 1909. A well know Manitoba public servant appears in the list, Baldwin G. Baldwinson, deputy provincial secretary. He is a native of Denmark.

Others are: O. C. Kirkwood, sales-manager of the C. P. R. land department, a native of the United States; Rev. Nathan Gordon, the well-known Montreal rabbi, who is a native of the United States; Professor Charles Bieler, of Montreal, a Swiss. The list also includes the names of Professor Bieler's four sons, two of whom enlisted for service with the Canadian troops and two are students. One of the sons is at the front and the other at Shorncliffe, Eng.

The first list, which includes those who were Canadian citizens and secured Imperial naturalization, contains eighty names.

A Second List

The second list includes those who secured naturalization during 1915 which also includes Imperial naturalization. Amongst them are Joseph E. Ander, a lumberman of Newcastle, N. B., a Swede; Arthur da Rocha, a Toronto accountant, who came from Brazil; Edmond Cotty, a Montreal school teacher, a native of Switzerland; Miss Edna McKeene, a Hamilton school teacher, who migrated from the U. S.; Harry Eli Bates, civil engineer, Montreal, a natve of U. S.; Arthur Leonard Parsons, assistant professor of mineralogy, Toronto, a native of U. S. A.

Gustave Heidmann, private secretary to Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, took the oath of allegiance on February 1. 1915. He had lived in Canada from childhood.

PAINFUL SWOLLEN VEINS
Quickly Relieved and Reduced

Mrs. R. M. Remler of Federal, Kansas writes an interesting account of her success in reducing a severe case of enlarged veins that should be encouraging to others similarly afflicted. She suffered with badly swollen and inflamed veins (in fact one had broken), for more than seven years before she became acquainted with Absorbine Jr., and used it. Absorbine, Jr., was faithfully applied for several weeks and, to quote from her letter. "The large knots in the veins left, it was all nicely healed, and has not bothered me since.'

This is the 527th day that the British Empire has been at war with Germany

THE POULTRY SHOW.

The primary object in such a show as is now going on in this city is to stimulate the breeding of better stock. When an array of the most splendid specimens of the various breeds are lined up for competition and are viewed by an admiring crowd, it cannot help but be an incentive to all poultry fanciers to improve their own flock and have birds the equal of any.

There is great rivalry between fanciers of different breeds of hens as to their relative merits and demerits, and although each breed has its own following, the two main divisions are what are termed the Mediterranean and American breeds. The former are hailed as the greatest egg producers, while the latter hold their favor through the fact that they are general purpose fowls, producing a fair quantity of eggs and having size to make them better food fowls.

The large number of cups and prizes offered at this show has drawn out the largest number of fowls ever shown in this city. That the show is becoming more popular each year is a certainty.

EXAMPLE OF GERMAN RULE.

Germany has been the most brutal of colonizers. German South-West Africa is a terrible example of German rule. The Germans took possession of that country in 1884, at which time the estimated native population was 750,000. After thirty years of German occupation the native population is estimated at 80,000. In one war against the Herreros the German Government spent $100,000,000. The peace that followed was one of desolation. Togoland, also occupied by the Germans for about thirty years, lost 105,000 natives between 1903 and 1913, as a result of punitive expeditions by German troops.

This is the nation which has made war for the purpose of imposing its rule upon a large portion of the world. Everywhere the German hand has fallen, Germany is bitterly hated by the subject population. Yet Germany professes to expect that the peoples who have lived under British rule, like those of India, Egypt and other parts of Africa will arise at a German signal to strike the British in the back.

By its treatment of subject peoples. Germany has stamped itself as a natural ally of the Turk. Knowing what has happened, the world at large regards with relief the success of the Allies in delivering one German colony after another from German rule.

LET THE GUNS STAY.

It would appear that in consequence of the Ancona horror the Italian Government promptly placed guns on other liners and detailed gunners from the royal Italian navy to serve them. Two such guns were found on the Guiseppe Verdi when she entered New York. The word comes from Washington that Italy will be asked to dismount the guns before the Verdi leaves port, because their presence on the ship, ready for use, constitutes an infringment of American neutrality.

Such a request, at a time when submarines are sinking passenger ships daily and when the United States itself has serious quarrels pending because of the killing of American citizens by these submarines, would bring American diplomacy to a lower level than it has yet reached. As was pointed out when the submarine attacks upon merchantmen began, the logical way of meeting such warfare is to arm the merchant vessels for defense. Great Britain and France at first started to do so and the United States ruled that the mounting of a single gun on a ship would not be held objectionable. Then the State Department changed its mind, and Great Britain and France were asked to have all such guns removed. Now Italy raises the question again at the very moment when the President is publicly promising that he will "do something" for the protection of non-combatant lives on the high seas. And it appears that the thing which the Administration is going to do is to merely prevent another government from attempting their protection.

If the United States will not do anything itself, it should, at least, not stand in the way of other governments doing something. Those two guns on the Verdi, manned by gunners from the Italian navy, are a better protection to the women and children who travel on that ship, than any promise or agreement which the United States government can wring from Germany and Austria ever will be. If it be said that those guns make the ship lawfully subject to attack as an armed vessel and will nullify any protests the United States may make hereafter, the obvious answer is that it makes no difference to drowned passengers whether their ship is sunk lawfully or unlawfully. The Teutonic powers are attacking these passsnger ships and killing their passengers and crews anyway. And the protests of the United States have not saved a ship or a life in almost a year.

Let the Germans and Austrians respect the rights of neutrals before any steps are taken by the United States to prevent the Allies defending the lives of neutrals and of themselves. Instead of raising objections to the mounting of guns on merchant vessels, the United States should urge that they be mounted and should notify Germany and Austria that it does so under the general right of merchant ships to protect themselves from pirates. The official statements of the German and Austrian governments have actually brought the acts of their submarines under the definition of piracy.

GLIMPSES INTO THE PAST

From The Daily Intelligencer, Jan. 12, 1868.

Fire broke out in the rear of the gun shop of Mr. Thomas Heard, Front Street, of this city. The loss was $600. The stock and furniture of Mr. Brydon, whose shop adjoins, were removed, the damage to which will probably be about $100. Neither party had any insurance.

A verdict of murder was brought against Kehoe and Quinn who caused the death of one Daniel Sullivan, in the Anglo-American Hotel of this city.

Seven more men are missing in Chicago. Eleven citizens have disappeared mysteriously within the past three weeks.

A new submarine cable is about to be laid from England to Egypt, touching only at Gibraltar and Malta.

The Poets' Corner

Beauty Recipe.

Ye men who the high cost of living deplore,
There is great good news for you in store,
For in order a good complexion to have,
Your wives and your daughters together must starve.
If your daughter a tan spot should wear on her nose,
Just cut down her steak to a very small dose.
And if a rude sunburn her features deform,
Eggs, fish and potatoes alike she must scorn.

Some fruit she may have, and she breaks the night's fast
With half of an orange. 'Tis an ample repast.
And if about noon she suffers fatigue
She may try the effect of a peanut or fig.
Now, girls, it you're tired and fretted and slow,
Step into a bathtub—'twill build you up so;
A tub of cold water (outside application)
Will do as much good as a fortnight' vacation.

Now, husbands and fathers take heart! we believe
That, despite the high cost of living, you'll live
For when wives and daughters for beauty are starving,
The husbands and brothers their share will be having.

—Stroud.

Few Critics Left.

An American in Montreal declares that General Hughes ought to be made a field marshal for his work in building up Canada's great war organization. The Minister of Militia is outstriding his critics. They are few now.—Mail and Empire.

A Great Man.

Lord Burnham is dead. Born Edward Levy, of Jewish parents, he took hold of the Daily Telegraph when it was a small and obscure sheet, and gradually made it the great property it has since become. He made it a penny paper, the first in London, and gave extraordinary value for the money. Lavish expenditure in news-getting and plenty of reading matter of all kinds brought such advertising patronage that repeatedly the paper was enlarged, becoming all the while more and more profligate. One feature of the Telegraph was that while dignified papers like the Times were ponderous and prosy, its stories were as readable as romance. In fact, it introduced in London many of the methods of the New York Herald, then under the sprightly elder Bennett. The Telegraph has had great men on its staff. One was Sir Edward Arnold, who was for many years its chief editorial writer. Another was George Augustus Sala, a general observer, with a very racy style. It was the Telegraph, along with the New York Herald, that sent Stanley to Africa to find Livingstone. Edward Levy, annexing the name of his uncle, became Sir Edward Levy-Lawson, and finally Lord Burnham. He passes away full of years and honors.—Hamilton Spectator.

The Truth Hurts.

It is announced that Maximilian Harden, the famous German journalist, has been prohibited from speaking or writing during the remainder of the war.

The incident throws a peculiar light spoken of German journalists. So long as Germany retained the original hope of being able to justify her conduct in the beginning of the war by her military successes in conducting it Harden was allowed full scope for both his pen and his tongue. But Harden, whatever his other faults may have been, wielded a fearless pen, and when confronted by inevitable disaster, the German authorities began to whine that Germany had not sought the war and that the German people were fighting simply in their own defence and for the safety of the Fatherland. Harden's stomach revolted. He told the German authorities in very plain language that they had desired the war, that they had willed it, and that they had begun it as a war of conquest, and he besought them to drop their pharasaical cant about the defence of the Fatherland.

Naturally such talk from a man who was recognized outside of Germany as one of the most representative of German writers could not find favor with the German authorities. It sounded too much like the truth. To stop the talk it was found necessary to suppress not only Herr Harden's paper, but the man himself. But if the authorities are able to keep him suppressed they will accomplish what they have been unable to do heretofore.—Sentinel-Review.

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses

A FREE PRESCRIPTION
You Can Have Filled and Use at Home

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says; after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me.' A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to J. S. McKeown's drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto. Fill a 2-ounce bottle with warm water, drop in one Bon-Opto tablet and allow to dissolve. With this liquid, bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

How a Coal Fire Protects Itself.

A curious way in which a fire in the heart of a coal pile keeps itself from being put out is noted in a mining journal. Such fires often start in the interior of large piles of coal owing to heat developed by slow oxidation, which is prevented by the size of the pile from escaping into the air. Such fires are difficult to put out owing to the fact that the burning mass turns the coal around it into coke, which is nearly impervious to water. The pile may thus be thoroughly drenched without putting out the fire, which it never really reaches. The only way to deal with the situation is to drive into the pile a sharpened iron pipe long enough to reach the burning coal and then to couple a hose to the upper end and turn on the water.

Pepper.

RECLAIMING DELTA LANDS.

Great Work Has Been a Great Success Along the Fraser River.

The conquest of low-lying alluvial lands along the Fraser River, which commenced years ago with the construction of dykes in Richmond and Delta municipalities, still goes on as more dykes are built and more drainage canals put in. In Langley municipality at present drainage schemes which will make over 3,000 acres ready to produce grand crops are being carried out under the Ditch and Water Courses' Act. The Biggar Prairie scheme takes in 1,500 acres, the Devine scheme at Campbell Creek, 500 acres, the Poppy scheme at Otter 500 acres, and the Norman scheme on Brown road 650 acres. The process of reclamation, governed by the provisions of a provincial act, is largely a co-operative one and the property owners benefiting jointly bear the cost. Under the Act, however, an improvement scheme which has the approval of the engineer of the municipality is carried out, even though the majority of settlers oppose it. To the four projects mentioned above, however, there has been no opposition.

When first brought under cultivation lowlands along the Fraser are generally acid or "sour," but the acidity does not prove the obstacle to successful agriculture that one might think, and constantly decreases as time goes on. Pitt Meadows, the location of a large drainage scheme completed a year or so ago, has for several years now grown constantly more attractive from an agricultural standpoint, and this year the crops were conceded the "best ever" by every old inhabitant. The dry year had something to do with it, but so also had better underdrainage on farms, the dredging of the sloughs, and a fine pumping plant installed by the Government. Pretty nearly the average yield of oats at Pitt Meadows this year was 90 bushels to the acre. Potatoes grown were excellent both as regards size and quality. All root crops, in fact, were good.

Pitt Meadow lands are relatively more sour than other dyked farms nearer the mouth of the Fraser for the reason that the Pitt Meadows' dyking scheme, comprehending some 22,000 acres, was only built a few years ago.

For the dairymen and stock raisers there has always been something of a problem in the production of a suitable grass. The experience with timothy, alsike, clover, and other standard grasses was that after two or three good crops the quality and then the yield would fall off rapidly and at four or five years the land would have to be ploughed up and sawn again. To farmers in the Eastern Provinces that may not seem a very unusual experience, but it is in the valley farming districts of British Columbia where virgin fertility is far from exhaustion. Acidity was early recognized as the difficulty at Pitt Meadows. To add to the problem blue point, the best of the wild grasses, rapidly disappeared as the lands were cultivated.

An experiment in this connection which it is thought may turn out to be of great importance has been in progress the past two years on the ranch of William Rannie. A well-to-do resident of Australia who is interested in Pitt Meadows' property—Mr. Frank Coffee—forwarded some seed of Australian Sudan grass. Thus far, in Mr. Rannie's, it has been an unalloyed success, growing to a height of six feet or more and being eaten with eagerness by both horses and cattle. Its stalk is much like that of blue point, and the head blossom is somewhat similar to oats. It yields heavily of seed, and last year seeded back in excellent shape. Mr. Rannie is very enthusiastic about it. He sees a future for it also as ensilage. He is hopeful and confident that the variety will prove the permanent meadow grass so long sought.—J. T. B. in Montreal Family Herald.

Postage Is Reduced.

The Canadian Postoffice Department has foregone its share of the postage on parcels to soldiers in France, thus effecting a material saving in the cost of forwarding such matter to the front.

The following official announcement has been issued:

"The Hon. T. Chase Casgrain, Postmaster-General of Canada, has been successful, as a result of negotiations entered into with the Imperial postal authorities, in effecting an arrangement with the British Government whereby parcels from Canada for Canadian soldiers in France and Flanders will be carried at the same rate of postage as applies to parcels from the United Kingdom for the expeditionary forces on the continent. That is:

"For parcels weighing up to three pounds, 24 cents; for parcels weighing over three pounds and not more than seven pounds, 32 cents; for parcels weighing over seven pounds and not more than eleven pounds, 38 cents.

"This means a material reduction on the cost of parcels, and it is hoped it will be a source of satisfaction to the Canadian public. This reduction has been brought about by Canada foregoing all postal charges for the conveyance of these parcels in Canada and on the Atlantic."

Nurses and the War.

The supply of nurses from Canada has so far exceeded the demand created by the war. In order to be accepted for service at the front a nurse must be a graduate of a general hospital training school, with three years' training. Application for appointment to a military hospital is made to the divisional Militia Headquarters or to Militia Headquarters, Ottawa. The pay is $2 per day. During the later stages of the war the demand may increase and the restrictions may relax. In that case it is considered probable that selections will be made from the lists of those who have already applied and were not accepted.

Britain and Egypt.

English control of Egypt may be said to have begun when, in 1875, Stephen Cave and Colonel Stokes were sent to that country to inquire into its poor financial condition. In November, 1876, Goshen and Joubert's mission on behalf of the British and French bondholders resulted in the dual control, one British official to superintend the revenue and a French the expenditure. Another result was the internationalization of the railroads and of the port of Alexandria. In 1882 a rebellion under Arabi Pasha broke out, which resulted in the bombardment of Alexandria on July 11, 1882.

England thereafter sent an army into the country and suppressed the revolt at Tel-el-Kebir, Sept. 13, 1882. Dual control was abolished Jan. 18, 1883, and replaced by an English financial adviser. In 1904 the fact of England's position in Egypt was recognized, and that position was legalized by treaties, first with France, then with Germany, Austria, and Italy. Since then, to all intents and purposes, Egypt has been an English possession.

A Colossal Map.

A map of the visible universe, upon which the astronomers of the world have been working for twenty-five years, is almost complete. It will contain every star which can be found by the most powerful telescope. The number will be less than 100,000,000. Some of the stars which will be represented have never been seen by the eye of man and probably never will be seen. They are caught and recorded by the photographic plate, which is more sensitive to light than the retina of the human eye.

All Making Munitions.

Leeds (Eng.) manufacturers stopped their work to take on munition making. The peaceful arts of motor-building, textile machine making, printing machinery, gas-burner making, railway carriage, and locomotive building, and many others all ceased, and in their place has sprung up the greatest of all Leeds industries—shells.

An Old Phrase.

The expression "robbing Peter to pay Paul" is said to have sprung from a proceeding in 1550 during the reign of Edward VI., when the lands of St. Peter's church at Westminster were appropriated to raise money for the repair of St. Paul's in London.

Weighty Missiles.

TRANSLATORS' BLUNDERS.

"Lord, Kick Us Out, Softly, Softly!" as a Nunc Dimittis.

During the present year the following advertisement appeared in The London Times: "Jack F. G.—If you are not in khaki by the 20th I shall cut you dead.—Ethel M."

The Berlin correspondent of The Cologne Gazette was so greatly struck by this ghastly threat that he telegraphed the following version to his paper as a sample of the brutal English methods of recruiting:

"If you are not in khaki by the 20th I shall hack you to death."

The translation of hymns into barbaric languages and dialects is a ticklish business. "Go Labor on," in the language of the Congo, became "Go blunder on," but it was sung with equal gusto for months before the missionaries discovered the error.

Physical and spiritual ideas are a good deal mixed in the cannibal islands, and food and life are interchangeable terms. So when the missionaries translated "Wonderful Words of Life" they found that the natives sang and understood it as "Wonderful words of stomach!"

For some time the missionaries found that the closing hymn was sung rather charily. A good many of the congregation sang "Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing" in a distinctly chirping and weakly voice. What could it mean?

They found out presently that the literal translation of the well-known words of dismissal conveyed to the native ear not what they intended, but "Lord, kick us out, softly, softly!"

But translators can be wilfully in error. A certain law society in Edinburgh bought a baronial mansion for their offices and headquarters. The motto over the gate was "Olin amrie, nunc arte," which, literally rendered, means, "Once by war, now by skill."

When George IV. visited Edinburgh Sir Walter Scott was showman. The King observed the motto over the gate of the law society and asked its meaning. Sir Walter replied: "It means, your Majesty, 'Once robbers, now thieves.'"

No Such Person.

"The trouble with you," her husband said, "is that you make mountains out of molehills."

"I don't do anything of the kind," she replied. "I want you to understand that my mother brought me up to be a lady, and I know nothing at all about housework. I never made a mountain out of a mole hill in my life. I am perfectly helpless in a kitchen."

CHAPTER XXIX—Continued

"I am entirely at your service," he said, when a considerable pause had elapsed.

"Oh, yes!" She recalled her thoughts with a little nervous catching of the breath. "It was good of you to come. I wanted to say first of all—to tell you—that I had no idea you were to be an executor. I was as much surprised as yourself. Pray do not consider it a service that binds you,—except so far as you would wish it to bind."

"You are most generous, I am sure. But Tom has always been my friend—" He broke off and colored faintly.

Orchid was staring into the fire. Her eyes were big and dark as those of a Southern quadroon.

"Tell me something of—the last—that is, if the subject is not too painful. Did you have no word from him?"

"No, not a word,—not a look. I did not even reach home to see him alive. I had to be sent for,—to a ladies' luncheon. I was dressed in red, laughing, vain, showy, and heartless,—as I always was."

"Now, Orchid," Van remonstrated, "that is pure morbidness! You have nothing whatever to reproach yourself with. Even had you been at home, it would have been useless. He never regained consciousness, after the first blow."

"That is what they say. But I can not help fancying that had I been at home—as I never am—my voice could have recalled him. You know, he—he—loved me!" She choked, and put her handkerchief to her eyes.

"Of course he loved you! And for that very reason you ought not to torture yourself with these useless thoughts."

"But you don't know how I miss him!" she said piteously. "I never dreamed it would be this way. It grows worse each hour!"

Craighead did not speak.

She moved restlessly, took her handkerchief from her eyes, and glanced at him for the first time since they had been seated.

"I suppose you are thinking that I deserve it all, that I never appreciated him while alive, and it is a just retribution to miss him now. All the old women will say that. But you know I never made him unhappy. He always believed in me and was proud of my success."

"I neither thought nor could think anything to the contrary," said Van, gravely. "Now, tell me what I can do for you, and—him."

Orchid's little outburst of petulence was already gone. "I don't know. I am sure," she said in a lifeless voice. "I hoped that you could suggest something. I must get somewhere! It doesn't matter where, only away from Boston—and this house! His footsteps are never out of the corridor. I dare not look in a mirror, for fear of seeing his face behind my own!" She glanced over her shoulder at the long pier-glass, and shuddered.

"Yes, you must go!" said Craighead, with decision. "You are utterly morbid."

"Everybody says the same thing," cried his companion, peevishly. "Can't you find anything more original?" Then all at once, to Craighead's dismay, she began to cry,—not violently or with passion, but like a tired child that longs to be comforted.

Craighead shut his teeth close. "Of course it had to come," he was saying to himself. "I was prepared for it. Maybe she does miss poor old Tom, as she says. But why need she try to harrow up my feelings?" He thought of her disloyalty to Truth and was hardened.

"Mrs. Wiley," he began lamely, "believe me, I sympathize with you most deeply in this affliction, and wish to do all that is in my power to help you. Shall I try to think of some quiet retreat where you may go until the first shock of your grief is over?"

Orchid, still sobbing, turned her face from him to lean against the back of her chair.

"Florida?" went on Van, more lamely still. "Southern Californir;—or even one of the more quiet retreats of Europe?" The bathos of his own tone nauseated him.

Orchid rose and walked to the far end of the room,—to the Budha's corner,—as if for self-control. When she returned, her cheeks and eyelids had that slight tinge of pink that we see in the petals of a cyclamen, but there were no other signs of weeping.

"I fear that I have already demanded too much of you," she said coldly. "You are doubtless engrossed in your own affairs, and I have no right to expect special interest in mine. Besides, I might have known you could not understand,—you, whose heart has never ached!"

Craighead looked at her sharply, as one parries a rapier-thrust. She returned the look in calm frankness, but with disapointment in him written plainly on her face.

He felt himself dismissed; and, as is the way with vain men, resented the release.

"I have no desire or intention of shirking my duties as executor," he said stiffly. "Will you not do me the honor of prolonging the interview until we shall have discussed more fully the trip you propose taking?"

Orchid seated herself in silence. Her head was erect now, and the exquisite color in her cheeks a little deeper.

"Had you thought of taking your parents?"

"No! It is a horrible thing to say, but I do not care for either of my parents,—and now, with their black garments and incessant allusions to 'poor, dear Tom,' they remind me of vulture. No, if I go, it must be alone!"

"But surely, a maid—" began Van.

"Oh, that!" she said carelessly. "I suppose so. That is one of the necessary evils."

"Even with a maid, it seems a little unusual, does it not?"

"The commonplace would be unusual for me," said Orchid, with a faint smile.

Another prolonged silence fell upon the room. Craighead had never felt more awkward and ill at ease.

Orchid's eyes were fixed upon the fire. Without removing them her tense figure began to relax, her breath came more softly; she leaned forward, and clasped her hands loosely upon her knees. How white they were against the crape! At last she began to speak, slowly, as if to herself.

"Europe will be the best. Yes, Europe! One can forget there, where the very streets are ashen with memory. I will pluck those transbuted films of blood, called poppies, from the mould of Caesar's Palace, and the small green iris that springs, like a laugh, from the living death of Pompeii. My friend, Vesuvius, will welcome me. I always smile to see those grim, determined slopes,—knowing the lake of raging fire within. What a death to die. One plunge into that sea of passion—"

"An old Roman philosopher once tried it, if I am not mistaken," interposed Van. "His toga caught on a rock, and he hung in mid-air until some passer-by plucked him off."

Orchid went on as though he had not spoken.

"And from Italy I would drift into the East; Egypt, with its yellow sands and hard, blue sky; India; Ceylon, which is the cradle of a mighty creed; then to that great sleepy prophecy China; and to Japan, the home of artists and flowers. Do you remember how we have talked of Japan and her future, Van? But it is no progressive land that I would seek,—not now at least. I want the real East, the mystic East, where crystals of thought are hid, and that great silence which underlies al harmony. It is to these places that I shall go, Van. And—I must go alone!" Her wonderful voice sank as a wind that dies above a harp.

It was Craighead's turn to move restlessly. Commonplaces would be blasphemous. She rose and stood beside him. "Yes, I shall go," she repeated, "and then you can say, 'She is gone out of my life at last. She will never disturb my peace again.' Shall you be glad?"

"I presume I shall," said Van, with a heavy sigh. Then, with a quick change of tone, "Why were you so cruel to my poor Truth,—and so treacheous to me?"

Orchid smiled into his eyes as she answered, "A woman who loves as I love will do anything!"

Craighead sprang to his feet in a revulsion of feeling, but with every vein in his body tingling. "Orchid, Orchid! Think what you have just been saying of Tom!"

"That was true,—yet this is truer. The love is a circle: the grief for Tom, a dot!" Suddenly she threw both hands to her head, in the vehement gesture he remembered,—"Oh, it is freedom to suffer!" she cried passionately. "It is rapture to be able to grieve openly! Tom has spent his life heaping me with kindnesses; he never did be a greater one than this. Yes, you look shocked—but my words convince and compel. You have heard of the newspaper funny-man who wrote jokes while his only child lay in the next room—dying. I have been living jokes in society in the same way ever since your marriage. What I have suffered might set a new scale for a Calvinistic hell! By the way," she added sharply, "I hear your wife is in the South again. Is it true?"

"Yes! she is in the South, tortured and heart-broken by the cruel things you said to her."

"She is not the only one who has known torture."

"My wife may never come back," said Craighead, slowly. He had not intended to speak the words; they came of themselves.

To be Continued.

By to-night some of the aldermen will have learned that they forgot to wipe off their slates properly.

GinPills FOR THE KIDNEYS

Taken in Time Save a Lot of Suffering

There are a lot of people who go on suffering needlessly until the pain gets so bad that they have to see a doctor.

Don't worry along with pains in the back; suppression or incontinence of the urine; swelling of the ankles, feet and hands, puffiness under the eyes; discoloured urine, or deposits therein; rheumatism or sciatica, when you can get speedy relief by regulating your Kidneys, where the trouble begins.

Gin Pills taken as directed just as soon as you begin to feel the symptoms of Kidney or Bladder trouble, will effect a quicker cure and save you a lot of pain.

To delay taking them is to invite Bright's Disease, Stone in the Bladder, Chronic Rheumatism, or other advanced stages of Kidney and Bladder trouble.

Look for the Drug Store in your City or Town with GIN PILLS in the window.

ALL DRUGGISTS SELL THEM.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

W. W. CORY, C.M.G.,
Deputy of the Minister of the Interior.

Exeter's Peace Bell.

Exeter Cathedral will soon possess a unique memorial of the great war in the tenor bell of the cathedral chimes. Its predecessor was found to be cracked last year, but has been recast, and the new bell will shortly be rehung in the tower. The Bishop of Marlborough, who made himself responsible for the expense of recasting, has written the following couplet, which has been inscribed round the rim of the bell:

Recast in war, I hope to herald peace,
When all shall love, and "Hymns of Hatred" cease.

In writing these lines, says The Westminster Gazette, the Bishop, perhaps, had in mind the poetic inscription which the vicar of Wooburn wrote for one of the bells of Wooburn Church, which, being cracked, was recast and rehung at the time of King Edward's illness, which necessitated a postpone of his Coronation ceremony. The inscription on the Wooburn bell runs:

The King was ill,
And I was still,
The day his crowning fell.
My wound was healed,
And I was pealed
To tell the King was well.

Petulance is a shadow that clouds

NEUTRALITY OF THE UNITED STATES

By Henry B. Joy.
A Leading Manufacturer of Detroit Mich.

Our President has from the first urged upon us to be neutral; to keep our feet on the soft pedal; to say or do nothing which could disturb our relations with other nations with which we were at peace.

At the time, wise and sane counsel no doubt. And our people have lived up to it in full measure. I say our people advisedly, meaning to exclude those whose "hyphens" still attach them to their native or ancestral land.

Had we not, however, a right to feel that back of such sane counsel was a strong, brave Government which would always maintain American honor even to action if necessary for American rights and righteousness between man and man and nation and nation?

We have remained as a people supinely quiescent under such a series of incidents as have never before irritated the patriotic spirit of any people without being soundly and thoroughly resented and redressed.

American self-respect is being bartered through the means of high-sounding words for the flesh pots of a temporary soft and delightful peace and prosperity, which we all so much love when it can be ours righteously.

The pen is indeed mightier than the sword, except only when we use our pen and the other fellow uses his sword.

I have always, until the historical record of the past few years, especially the last eighteen months, been proud of being an American. I had felt that there was no serious blot upon our record as a nation. I had felt that I could travel the world around and be respected as an American by reason of what our generation and those who had gone before had written into the records of the United States of America, sometimes even with the good red blood of real men.

No Pride in Being an "American" Now

To-day, however, on what can be based a feeling of pride in being an American, in view of recent history?

The tragedy of Mexico, incontrovertibly illuminated from the records of George Harvey in the North American Review, is a pitiful picture of American dishonor.

Yet it is a mere side-show to the greater dishonor heaped upon us by the records of the European war.

Do we really want to be a discredited and dishonored nation? Do our people really understand what is being done to them as a whole? Do they know, I ask, that the honor of Americans is being sold for dishonorable quietude?

Times Have Changed

Do they know that all this American people has striven for from the days of Washington through the times of Lincoln and McKinley is slipping through our fingers?

We are not a warlike people. Yet we have never before in history lived under a regime of "watchful waiting" or been counselled by our leaders to be "too proud to fight," no matter what the dishonor.

If ever on earth was a man of peace, it was Lincoln. Yet not for a moment did he hesitate to meet a policy of "blood and iron" like for like. We revere his sainted memory and we also revere the memory of the men who fought against him. We hold in dishonor and disrespect the pacifists of that day, as we do and will those of today.

And now comes the sinking of the Persia. This incident is, however, of no moment. Our disgrace came with the murder of Belgium. We also had signed the Hague Conventions. Our disgrace attaches to the Lusitania, and our methods of asserting Americanism. Our disgrace thereafter comes from Washington, D.C.

Our Government has now reached the point of "indemnity." What is to be the price of dead Americans and of the honor of our country?

Am I oversensitive in feeling that my self-respect as an American is weakened, has shrunken, is declining, is even a thing of the past? Sometimes I wonder at our passiveness under insult. Why is it?

I was brought up and trained in the idea that it was the duty of the Government to protect the rights of even the most unimportant American wherever over the broad world he might roam on business or pleasure.

Peace at Any Price

I was taught to believe it a duty to serve in the militia, to do my share in serving the State and the Nation, to stand for national self-respect and domestic unity and law and order.

Today we cannot fill the ranks of the State troops. We have advocates of peace—peace at any price—when there is no peace with honor to be had.

Let us forget Belgium and the solemn Imperial Treaty—if we can as good Americans. We can still send the survivors food and clothing with the consent of the conqueror (at which he doubtless laughs amusedly, as all being within the food calculations of the General Staff) for permission to do which we apply to His Excellency the German Ambassador who is still representing His Imperial Majesty, the Invader, in Washington.

Let us forget the rape of Belgium, I say, and read the following instructions to free Americans to be noted and acted upon or suffer the penalty of death.

NOTICE

Travellers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage are reminded that a state of war exists between Germany and her allies and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that in accordance with formal notice given by the Imperial German Government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain, or of any of her allies, are liable to destruction in those waters and that travellers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies do so at their own risk.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY.
Washington, D.C., April 22, 1915.

These instructions to Americans (I said free Americans above; I omit it hereafter) by direction of his Imperial Majesty the German Emperor, through his representative to us (we Americans) His Excellency, Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, stunned us. We have never received any such instructions before, and oh, the positive rudeness of it! The imperial and imperative manner of the instructions to Americans we, of course, did not take seriously.

Not a Finger Lifted in Defense

Was the insult of this published notice immediately called to the attention of the German Ambassador? Was he told that he must instantly see that no harm should come? Was he told he must avert it. Does anyone doubt that in the intervening five days a real American Government might have persuaded the Germans not to murder us? Think it over. You would never have known it, and the real American who might have saved those American lives and all others since would have been criticized for his rudeness to an Emperor!

Alas, our travellers, like the free Americans they thought they were, set sail on their lawful occasions, with, as they thought, the great American people backing them up in their lawful rights and guaranteeing their safety. Five days later they were murdered, and not a finger have we lifted in defense of our Americanism. We talk indemnity!

Twelve hundred innocents, including women and children and babies, were drowned by Imperial order, 187 being Americans. Our President is negotiating to send milk to babies in Germany.

The German Ambassador, however, is still in Washington, though the fashionable hotel in New York which harbors him when in that city has lost the patronage of red blooded people. There are some who understand and resent helplessly.

If it Happened in Germany

Does anyone think for a moment that if our American Ambassador in Berlin were to publish a similar notice to the German people he would be permitted to remain in Germany except as a hostage?

But why go on with further murderous incidents and details of the "firm attitude" and "strict accountability" of our international correspondence? The murders of Americans continue. The correspondence continues and everybody seems to love the flesh pots of peaceful prosperity, disgraceful peace and disgraceful happiness.

We demand that the captain of the submarine who murdered the passengers on the Ancona shall be "slapped on the wrist." We acquiesce in the so-called execution of Miss Cavell. We are a great people.

More Dynamite; More Murders

With what submissiveness shall we take the next instructions to Americans when published by His Excellency?

We have had our lesson—we better bow down low and obey. We are doing so. Everything is perfectly satisfactory.

"Babbling boobs" continue to babble of peace and neutrality when there is neither. The enemy carries on war in our country and we think it is peace. Our Washington officials call it infractions of our neutrality. Then more dynamite, more murders, and more diplomatic correspondence.

The German general in America is indeed a real general.

If approval of our course is modern Americanism, then indeed I am not an American.

Shall we not redesign our beloved Uncle Sam? Ought we not to depict him as a blind, bloodless cigar-store Indian, with a wooden head and a wooden heart and wooden insides?

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—Notwithstanding that wheat today at first showed strength, the market later became heavy on account of a liberal enlargement of the U. S. visible supply total. MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Jan. 10.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, a feature of the trade today was the stronger feeling in the market for canning stock and prices scored an advance of 25c to 50c per hundred pounds, which was attributed to the somewhat limited supply coming forward, coupled with a good demand. Cows sold at $3.50 to $4.50 per hundred. Butchers' cattle unchanged. A fairly active trade was done with sales of full loads of choice steers at $7.75 to $8 per hundred pounds. The market for bulls was stronger, with prices ranging up to $6.75 for choice stock.

The tone of the market for lambs was steady and prices show no change, as compared with a week ago. Sheep stronger, 25c higher. Ewes sold at $6.75 per hundred pounds. Calves strong, ½c to 1c per pound higher. Milk-fed calves sold at 9½c to 10c and grass-fed at 5c to 6½c per pound. Hogs were firm.

Peter and Marya

A Story of a Russian Inventor.

By MARTHA V. MONROE

The harvest was ended, and the peasantry in a farming region in the province of Tula, Russia, were gathered in a barn to celebrate the event with a dance. A young man entered, his serious face contrasting with the joyousness on that of the others, and stood looking at the dancers, his eyes evidently searching for some one among them. Presently a young girl with the fair hair and soft complexion of the north sailed by laughing at something her partner was saying to her.

As she passed the place where the young man was standing she caught sight of him. Her laughter ceased, and the merry look on her face vanished, giving place to one equally troubled. She made the circle with the dancers, then, coming again opposite the young man mentioned, stopped, excused herself to her partner and hastened toward the former.

"Oh, Peter," she said, "what is the matter?"

"I have seen your father. He says it cannot be; he has no dowry for you. I can earn on the farm barely enough to keep myself alive. It would be a sin for two persons as poor as we to marry and bring forth children to suffer. He is right. We must withdraw from each other, Marya. There is no help for it."

The girl put her arm through his, and together they went outside. A full moon was looking down on them with its peaceful but cold light. Within were the sounds of mirth and music. For these young lovers their surroundings were in bitter contrast with the agony both felt.

"What are you going to do, Peter?" asked Marya.

There was a brief silence, at the end of which he said with almost a wail, "I am going into the factory."

The girl, who still held his arm, shuddered as if stricken by a deadly bolt.

The factory was a government institution where something was being made the nature of which no one knew. When a workman entered its portals he did so with the understanding that he would never come out. Once in possession of the secret contained within those gloomy walls, the government took care that he should not have an opportunity to reveal it.

Peter Marinoff, born and brought up among the farm class in Russia, was much out of place. His ancestors had been nobles who in one of the upheavals that country has suffered were impoverished. But in him was an inheritance of genius that had lain dormant through several generations. It had not yet been suspected either by him or any one else.

Under the cold moonlight Peter and Marya parted. No ray of hope found its way into the breast of either. "I cannot be yours in the flesh, Peter," she wailed, "but I will be yours in heaven. No one shall ever come between us." "In the factory there is no marriage, Marya. I shall join you in the hereafter." Then Peter pulled himself away from the girl, who clung to him pitifully.

The next morning he walked several leagues to the factory and presented himself for admission. There was always room for workmen there, for few cared to enter a service from which there was no retreat. Nor was it necessary that he should have any preparation for the work done there. When a man is to spend his whole life in a certain employment his employer can afford to educate him for his duties.

Peter's only pleasure in life was when the moon was at the full on a clear night—to stand in the factory yard, look at the orb moving like the hand of a great clock in a circle of the heavens and think of Marya. He was reminded of their parting, and as one's remembrance of a face is that of the last time it has been seen so he always saw Marya's with the moonlight streaming down upon it and wearing a look of despair.

The factory was a place where explosives were manufactured. The only protection for the secret processes in use there was to make life prisoners of those engaged in compounding the chemicals which constituted the explosive substance. Most of the men employed were kept from knowing these secrets by being confined to only a portion of the work. Many were not sufficiently intelligent. But there were persons who understood the whole of one or more processes.

Peter was a born scientist. He soon showed that he was capable of being made one of the principal compounders, and, since there were books in the factory suited to the work being done, he studied, though rather from a desire to escape his memories of the outside world than any desire to benefit himself. When absorbed in the fairy tale of chemical science, for the time being he forgot all else.

Peter was so serviceable that after awhile he was put in charge of the manufacture of a certain explosive. It was not only expensive, but unreliable. Peter, being a natural investigator, set himself to work to find some other combination that would not cost so much to manufacture, but would give better satisfaction.

One day an order came to the factory to turn out as much work as possible. New hands were introduced, and large quantities of stock from which the product was evolved were brought in. With the order came the news that Germany had declared war against Russia.

Peter, who by this time was in exclusive charge of the explosive substance for shells and could use any process he chose, manufactured a lot of shell explosive by his newly discovered process. This went into shells which were sent to the front. Peter, who could not make any tests without giving away his secret, waited for a report of how his explosive worked, or, rather, to hear if there was any complaint. None came. Then he sent out some powder manufactured by the old process. Very soon a report came that a proportion of these shells would not explode.

Then Peter went to the governor of the works and told him that he had invented a powder for shells that had worked perfectly. The governor attempted to get the secret, but Peter kept it. This he could easily do since there was one ingredient the nature of which no one knew but himself. He offered to sell the formula to the government provided that in addition to the price paid he should be free to leave the factory.

Graft predominates in Russia, and the governor determined to force Peter's secret from him to use it for his own benefit. He put Peter in irons in a dungeon and on bread and water. It is quite likely that Peter would have given way under this treatment had it not been that by holding out he might secure his terms. If he did he could marry Marya, who had assured him that she would never be the wife of any one else. If he did not succeed death might relieve him of his imprisonment.

Complaints came so thick and fast of the shells sent out from the factory that one day the governor ordered Peter to be brought to his office. When he arrived all others were ordered out, and when the two were alone together the governor said:

"I have concluded to recommend to the government to buy your formula. How much do you ask for it?"

"Ten thousand rubles."

"Very well; it will be paid. My commission will be one-half."

"I will pay no commission. A man who bribes a government official is as culpable as that official."

"You will think better of this," said the governor. "Go back to your dungeon."

Peter returned to his dungeon. He was full of expedients and endeavored to find one by which he could communicate with Marya. He could write to her, but all letters from those inside the factory were examined by a censor. Peter induced the man who brought him his food to bring also writing material and a bottle on the shelves in the laboratory, giving him the name on the label. Upon receiving them Peter wrote a letter to Marya in ordinary ink and across its face with the chemical a message stating that he had invented a new explosive, but was prevented from using it. What was written in plain ink contained this sentence. "We are suffering with the heat." This was to convey an instruction to Marya to heat his letter.

Now, the message that Peter had written across the face of his letter in the chemical that had been brought him was invisible, but by being heated it came out plainly in visible letters. The censor who read the letters that went out, reading Peter's letter, noticed the words "We are suffering with the heat," but could not understand them because it is seldom warm in Russia. He sent for Peter and asked him what he meant by writing that it was warm. Peter said he had made a mistake, and, drawing a pen over the word heat, he wrote "cold," but the word heat was not erased.

Marya did not need the hint, for she read the letter by the light of blazing logs, and under the warmth the message came out in dark brown letters. She thought a long while about this communication, but, not realizing its full import, took it to her father. He saw in it more than she did, but could suggest nothing.

One morning Marya was missing. She had saved a little money, which was missing also. She had started to Petrograd, using the money to pay her way so far as it would go. When she reached the capital she saw no way to give Peter's letter to the czar. Learning the hour that he reached the palace, she tied the letter to a stone and standing on the sidewalk behind the line of soldiers, tossed it into his carriage. The czar, thinking it was a petition, handed it to an attendant to examine.

One day Peter was taken from his dungeon and led up to the governor's office. An aid-de-camp to the czar and the governor were the only persons present. The aid held Peter's letter in his hand and asked him if he wrote it. When Peter admitted that he did he was taken into a conveyance with the aid and carried to Petrograd. There he communicated his secret to one appointed to receive it.

Peter was paid a liberal sum for his formula and sent back to the factory in place of the governor, who disappeared. Some said that he was imprisoned by order of the czar, others that he was sent to Siberia. At any rate, he never appeared at the works again.

Peter as governor of the factory could go and come as he pleased. He married Marya, but had no time for a honeymoon. Marya lived with him in the dwelling used by the governor until the works were destroyed by German emissaries. Then Peter was sent to another point, where he was expected to spend his time investigating and inventing munitions of war.

IT WAS VERY CURIOUS.

When the Whistle Test Failed All the Surgeons Were Puzzled.

A Parisian journal tells a little story of a young Parisian who in civil life had long worn a monocle in his left eye and had continued the habit as an officer. He had been wounded, was cured and asked to be returned to the front. He was to be examined and concealed the monocle, thinking he might be charged with myopia in one eye. When the chief surgeon examined him, after looking well over his face, he said sharply, "Whistle!"

The soldier whistled like a blackbird.

"This is curious," said the surgeon, and, calling a young assistant, he said again to the soldier, "Whistle!" He whistled again. "That is curious," said the young assistant.

Another surgeon entered, and the patient was called upon for the third time to whistle.

"Ah," said the surgeon, "this is curious!"

"But," expostulated the soldier, "I don't see why there is so much of this. I'm not to serve as a locomotive."

"It is all right," said the chief surgeon. "You may return to the front."

When the soldier arrived at his regiment he gave to the regimental surgeon the note that had been given him by the examiner. This surgeon said in his turn, "Will you please whistle?" He whistled. "This is curious," said the surgeon.

It seems that when a man wears a monocle it gives to the face the appearance of facial paralysis. The operation of whistling is a test. The facial paralytic cannot whistle.

BRIGHTER CHILDREN

Children are probably brighter to-day than a generation ago—but are they stronger? That's a grave question. So many pinched faces, dulled eyes and languid feeling make us wonder if they will ever grow into robust, healthy men and women.

Immortality

(By J. J. B. Flint)

Sir Forbes Johnston's Hamlet is the best portrayal of that wonderful character, since the days of Macready, according to John Winter, the celebrated critic. What struck me was the speech to Horatio when Hamlet picks up the skull of Yorrick, the King's jester: "Alas! poor Yorrick; I knew him well." Shakespeare tells us of Caesar's clay, used to stop a bung-hole in a cask.

Fame—what is it? Take a biographical dictionary, turn over its pages containing countless thousands of names of men who have played their parts in various characters—kings, emperors, statesmen, warriors. In how short a time the mantle of forgetfulness has shrouded their names and acts, and oblivion reigns! Generations come and go, and one generation succeeding another blots out the preceding one.

I walk around our cemetery. I read the names of the prominent men and women who lived their lives in our city and whose dust is lying all around me—many of them, with their hearts "once pregnant with celestial fire," now ashes. As the centuries roll on memories of former days fade away. Recently the ruins of Babylon and Nineveh have been uncovered. But what do we know of the great monarchs who built these magnificent cities? There are men who have written books declaring that Christ never lived. They say the historical books of that period do not speak of him; that the half dozen lines in Josephus are simply a gloss, or forgery, as in the original manuscript of the history it does not appear; that the old parchment gospels have been lost, and that only old documents, purporting to be copies written many years after remain. Nevertheless the civilized world believes that these old copies are veritable copies of the originals.

There are so many sudden deaths, so many men dying for their countries in the battle against militarism, that the question of immortality is now being discussed more widely than ever before. If these poor suffering men and women, who have suffered the loss of loved ones could only be convinced that the loss has been but for a short time, and that reunion will follow, and eternal happiness, it would go a long way to assuage grief and sorrow. Nearly all creeds do not deny the probability and possibility of our world being surrounded by departed spirits. It is not necessary to believe in the tenets of spiritualism (so objectionable to many) but the belief in spirits about us may be entertained without disturbing the beliefs or creeds of many churches. I have read somewhat widely upon this subject for some years and have endeavored to follow the work of the psychical society and kindred associations. The concrete result I have obtained is a belief in immortality. I cannot give the various arguments brought forward in support of this belief not dependent on anything contained in the Bible. The Bible does say, speaking of angels, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation?"

The witch of Endor summoned the spirit of Samuel. By what tests are we to try this question of immortality? All people cannot study the question. But if you take the writings and statements of the greatest scientists at present in the world, and of many who have passed over, and you find that these men are, and have been convinced of immortality, what stronger proof can one have? I could fill this sheet with the names of most eminent English and American scientists and scholars who have examined the subject, and are convinced that "death does not end all."

Sir Oliver Lodge declares that he has spoken with spirits who have passed from earth. Professor Crookes, the great discoverer of the Crookes ray, Alfred Russell Wallace, F. W. Meyers, Signor Lombreso, Flamarion, the greatest scholar of the age, Professor James of Harvard. There is a vast literature devoted to the subject of ghosts, spectres, spiritualism. Spiritualism is attracting much attention in Toronto. There is a large society there, and I saw nine advertisements of meetings of spiritualists advertised for one day in a daily paper. Unquestionably there are some things believed by spiritualists which are not believed by other creeds; but aside from this, the great substantial fact of immortality may be considered by proofs which do not depend entirely upon Sacred Writ to be proved. Therefore, poor souls who have lost the light of their eyes and the delight of their hearts, may be confident of a happy reunion notwithstanding the mists and clouds which envelop us.

Tennyson said: "Why should those who have gone before us not succour and minister unto us, as the legions of angels surrounded and ministered unto Jesus?"

Ingersoll wrote: "In the night of death, hope sees a star, and listening, love can hear the rustle of a wing."

Longfellow sang:

"There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death."

Then fell upon the house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features, fair and thin;
And softly, from that hushed and darkened room,
Two angels issued, where but one went in.

Ere the evening lamps are lighted,
And like phantoms grim and tall,
Shadows from the fitful firelight
Dance upon the parlor wall;
Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door,
The beloved, the true hearted,
Come to visit us once more.
He the young and strong who cherished
Noble longings for the strife,
By the roadside fell and perished,
Weary with the march of life.

Hamlet says:

"Who would fardels bear,
To grunt, and sweat, under a weary life!
But that the dread of some undiscovered country
Puzzles the will, and makes us either bear the ills we have,
Than fly to others we know not of.

We have learned much since Hamlet's time.

COMBING WON'T RID HAIR OF DANDRUFF

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applicants will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

H. E. FAIRFIE

LADY OFFICIAL RECRUITER.

Unique Work is Being Done by Miss Gladys Storey in England.

Superintending the work of a staff of over sixty girls at a certain National Registration office in London is a young lady of exceptional activity and organizing genius. The daughter of the Royal Academician, Mr. G. A. Storey, Miss Gladys Storey early in the war proved herself so capable a recruiter, inducing hundreds of men to join the colors long before Lord Derby's scheme was thought of, that the War Office ultimately appointed her official lady recruiter, and insisted on paying her for her work. Thus it was that she became the only officially-paid lady recruiter under the War Office.

Chatting of her experiences, Miss Storey informed the writer that she had found the work of recruiting exceptionally interesting. "The men always seemed willing to listen to what I had to say," she said, "and it is particularly gratifying to me that I am continually receiving letters from men whom I induced to en[illegible] and who are now at the front. 'One recruit I obtained wished to join the horse transport, and was asked if he knew much about horses. He replied, 'Know much about them? I should think I did. Why, I backed two winners last week and two seconds this.'"

Recruiting, however, is but one of Miss Storey's many activities. In the early days of the war it was she who started this patriotic idea. Attractive cards were printed bearing pictures of Wellington, Nelson, and Roberts, accompanied by stirring messages, the sale of which not only swelled the war funds but also induced many men to enlist.

At present Miss Storey is working indefatigably on her Christmas-card idea for the benefit of her Bovril fund. Already she has supplied Bovril to 275,000 men at the front. These Christmas-cards are very artistic productions, and the last verse of the lines Miss Storey has written for them will appeal to thousands of readers:

May Heaven watch over the brave and the free
Arrayed against tyranny's might,
And Peace, holy Peace, make the Furies to flee
Before the great standard of Right.

"It is wonderful," said Miss Storey, "how generous people are when one appeals for Tommy and Jack, and perhaps the papers can help me to find a poor widow in the North of England who anonymously sent me an offering in the shape of an antique brooch which I was able to sell for an amount which enabled me to supply a number of our soldiers with comforts and little luxuries. Should she ever see these lines, it will doubtless be gratifying to her to know that her gift has been turned to such good account."

EXPLOSIONS WRECKED POWER PLANT MILLS

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 10.—Following the explosion at the DuPont Powder plant, Carney's Point, N. J., early to-day, in which three workmen were killed, two mills blew up at the upper Hagley yard near here this afternoon. In one of the latter accidents one workman was slightly burned. The three explosions within one day have had the effect of making the secret service and police departments of the DuPont Powder Co. unusually active in looking for possible clues indicating outside influence.

A press mill blew up at 3 o'clock this afternoon. It was in this explosion that the workman was hurt. Ninety minutes later a mixing mill, near the press mill, also exploded. It contained 500 pounds of powder. No one was injured. Both mills were blown to atoms, the shocks being heard for at least 25 miles.

The disaster at Carney's Point was due to an explosion of smokeless powder, while at the upper Hagley yard it was black powder that went off.

GOATS' MILK FOR COUGHS

"Go to the Hills and drink goats' milk" was the prescription given by Hippocrates more than 2,000 years ago for coughs, colds and bronchitis, but nowadays our local druggist, J. S. McKeown, has a non-secret constitutional remedy just as certain which can be taken right at home. It is Vinol—composed of the healing, medicinal extractives of cod livers, without oil, peptonate of iron for the blood and the nourishing properties of beef peptone. It goes to the seat of the trouble, removes the cough and cures the cold. Vinol is a very reliable preparation.

IRISH PEASANTRY'S BELIEF PICTURED BY LADY GREGORY

Famous Irish Dramatist Gives Vivid Description of Life in the Emerald Isle

"About fifteen years ago I wrote an article in the "Spectator,' 'in which I said that I thought that if by some miracle Christianity and every trace of it could be swept away, it would not change at all the belief of the people of Ireland in things invisible, in the life eternal, in the world to come. At the end of fifteen years study I can repeat what I said then."

The above words, uttered by Lady Gregory before a large audience at the Ritz-Carlton Hall on Saturday evening, proved the prelude to an address which carried the mind away from the common-place and enabled one's spirit to enter with her the humble thatched cottages of the peasantry of Connaught and Arran, listen to their tales of the beloved saints of Erin, their visions of Tier-na-oga, their intercourse with the Banshee and fairies, even as she herself had done.

With nobody to introduce her, Lady Gregory commenced her lecture without preliminary. Her sweet personality and the ring of sincerity in her voice impressed even the most sceptical—those to whom fairies are absurd and "Peter Pan" nonsense.

Her Own Experiences

Lady Gregory does not quote from books, or retail second-hand information. Everything she tells is from the book of her own experience, conversations with the old men and women who live about the gates of her own home, situated in a district which breathes romance and poetry.

In the belief that the dead will sooner or later return, says Lady Gregory, death to the Irish is robbed of its dread and terror. Probably in no other country is the fear of death less evident than in the Green Isle. Many were the touching tales she told of the candle being placed in the little window that mother would be enabled to find her children, of the old gray man sweeping his hearth every night in case some poor wandering spirit should seek shelter from the storm.

From men and women who could neither read nor write, Lady Gregory had received descriptions of "great doings" in the crumbled castles of the neighboring, descriptions of ancient dress and customs which tallied with the discoveries of science. Surely to these people who knew nothing of mediaeval costumes, had never heard of decorated shields, yet who described with marvellous accuracy scenes of the past at which they had been present, surely to them, said Lady Gregory, had been revealed a state which exists between the living and the final destination of the dead.

Playground of Fairies

Even before the advent of Christianity the heaven of Tier-na-oga had been revealed to the Irish. The air, the sea and the land were the playground of fairies and angels who guided and cared for the people. And the belief at the present time was that the dead helped the living. No children thrived better than those who had lost their mother.

As an illustration of the combat between logic and intuition, Lady Gregory concluded by quoting scenes from her play in which the spirit of a dead woman, through a blind man, turns the evidence in a murder trial Her interpretation of the various characters was delightful, and she was accorded an ovation at the conclusion of her lecture, being presented with a beautiful bouquet.

Amongst the audience were Lord and Lady Shaugnessy and party, Sir Hugh and Lady Graham and party, Mrs. F. S. Meighen and party, Mrs. H. Vincent Meredith and party, Mrs. D. Forbes Angus and party, Mrs. McIntosh and party, Mrs. C. B. Gordon and party, Mrs. C. F. Smith and party, Lady Hingston, Lady Taft and Lady Peterson.

LEAGUE IN GANANOQUE

A four-team hockey league has been formed in Gananoque and a schedule of games has been drawn up. The following teams are entered: 59th Battalion, Grace Church, C.I.A.C.'s and Wanderers. The opening game is set for to-night.

LESUEUR NOW CAPTAIN

TORONTO, Jan. 11.—Percy Lesueur has been appointed captain of the Toronto pros., replacing Ronan. The latter will be retained. Canadiens have offered Poulin and Debeau for him and Ottawa has made a cash offer, but the Toronto management figures that he will come to his own shortly and will keep him. Cameron's fine will stand, though it may be remitted at the end of the season if the brilliant defence man shows his best from now on. Goalkeeper Wilson has reported from Oshawa as an understudy to Lesueur.

If there are no "wrong ones" among the thousands of players under the Ontario Hockey Association's jurisdiction, that organization is the eighth wonder of the world. The essential point is that in the O.H.A. there is serious, sustained and systematic effort to have things as nearly right as possible. This is the policy that makes the difference between a desirable institution and a state of lawlessness.

It is well within the bounds of accuracy to say that never in the history of winter harness racing has there been anything like the number of high class horses engaged in the sport that are now in training and racing. With several other important meetings still to be decided, it seems a safe prophecy that, good as are the recently established records, there will be an entirely new set before the season is ended.

BASEBALL.

Donnie Bush, star shortstop of the Detroit team, is a great admirer of Tris Speaker, the sensational Boston outfielder. One afternoon Bush tried to score from third on a long fly to centre. It didn't seem as if there was a chance for Speaker to get a fast man like Bush at the plate. The moment the ball struck Speaker's hands Bush made a dash for home. With the same motion he made the catch. Speaker hurled the ball toward the plate with terrific speed. It was a wonderfully accurate throw. The ball arrived on a fast low hop to the catcher, a fraction of a second in advance of Bush. The catcher deftly touched the diminutive shortstop on the foot as he slid into the plate, and the umpire declared him out.

The decision was a very close one, Detroit needed the run badly, and for a moment Donnie didn't relish the ruling, although he afterwards admitted that he guessed the umpire was right. That throw of Speaker's rankled in Bush's breast. If he was a slow runner no attention would have been paid to the feat, but Bush is a fast man and has a good slide. The Boston players got a lot of fun kidding Bush over the play. That evening some of the newspaper men brought up the subject to Bush.

"That was a wonderful throw Speaker made today," remarked one of the scribes.

"I should say it was," answered Bush.

"I suppose it made you pretty sore when you were called out," was the comment of another.

"It did for a minute," replied Bush, "and then I decided I ought to feel glad that Speaker was an outfielder instead of a pitcher, because, honestly, that fellow can throw strikes from the outfield."

JURY RECOMMENDS GATES OR FLAG MAN

Dangerous Crossing on Canifton Road Should be Properly Guarded—Bill Boards are Menace to the Travelling Public

ATTACHES NO BLAME TO TRAIN CREW

Used all Necessary Precautions and Tried to Avert Accident in Which Charles Wellman Was Killed—The Evidence

That deceased met death by being struck by the eastbound No. 14 train on Saturday afternoon, January 8th, 1916, at the Canifton road crossing, city of Belleville.

The evidence, though somewhat conflicting, would indicate that the train crew used all necessary precautions and did everything in their power to avert the accident.

In our opinion the bill boards referred to in the evidence are a menace to the travelling public.

We would recommend that the Grand Trunk Railway either have a flagman stationed at this crossing or have gates provided, as we consider the present automatic bell is inadequate.

Such was the verdict rendered last night by the jury at the coroner's inquest to inquire into the circumstances of the accident at the Canifton Road G. T. R. crossing, on Saturday last, when Mr. Charles Wellman of Thurlow, met his death and Mrs. Wellman was seriously injured by being struck by the east bound fast train. Dr. Boyce, coroner, presided. A large number of spectators were present at the hearing and much evidence was submitted.

Mr. Wm. Carnew represented the Crown; Mr. James Pratt of the G. T. R. legal department, Montreal, was present on behalf of the railway, and Mr. W. D. M. Shorey on behalf of the widow and family.

The evidence submitted was as follows:

James Murray testified he is a brakeman of the G. T. R., and had been for 15 years. He was on train No. 14, which is due to arrive in Belleville at 12.10. On Saturday, December 8th, the train was late that day. Witness did not see the accident, but as soon as it did occur he went to the rear of the train to flag any train that might be approaching. He saw a bob sleigh broken up, but did not see the deceased. The engine gave a long blast before approaching the crossing. The bell used as a warning at the crossing was ringing when witness went to rear of train. The train was composed of 7 coaches.

To Mr. Shorey—The train was travelling the ordinary speed.

Samuel Marshall testified he was on train No. 14 when the accident occurred. He was baggageman. The first he knew of the accident was when the train came to a sudden stop. The train was not its length past the crossing when it stopped. He did not get off the train. The train was possibly travelling about 20 miles an hour when it struck the rig. He heard the whistle of the engine and the bell was ringing, also the automatic bell at the crossing. The injured persons were placed on board the train and conveyed to the station. The man died before the train arrived at the station. The woman spoke and asked where she was and what had happened.

To Mr. Shorey—It would only take a few seconds to reach the crossing after the whistle of the engine was sounded.

Sidney Thompson testified he was conductor on train No. 14 when the accident occurred. He was standing on the vestibule of the fifth coach. The train stopped at Trenton but not for any orders. It was then 12.15. The run from Trenton to the crossing where the accident occurred was made in about 15 minutes. He heard the engine give two long and one short blasts as the crossings in the city limits were about reached. As soon as the train stopped he got off the train and at the rear saw the woman and man lying upon the ground. Witness had the train back up and the couple were placed in the baggage car. The woman was between the rails of the west bound track. The man was lying some feet away. The conveyance was badly smashed. The train was late that day, being 23 minutes behind time. The automatic bell at the crossing was in operation all the time the train was in the vicinity of the crossing. Witness was unable to state that the engineer might have averted the accident.

To Mr. Shorey—The run from Trenton to Belleville by rail is 12 miles, and it was made that day in about 15 minutes. The train slowed down when it came in the yard limits. There is no speed limits within the yard limits.

Charles Johnson testified he was a G. T. R. engineer and had been for 42 years. He was in charge of engine No. 190, which was hauling train No. 14. She is due at Belleville at 12.11, but was 40 minutes late in leaving Toronto. The warning in approaching the station is to give one long blast. On the day of the accident he gave the long blast on the flat between the overhead bridge and the iron bridge. He first commenced to reduce speed west of the overhead bridge on North Front street. The approximate speed of the train when it reached the Canifton Road crossing was from 12 to 15 miles an hour. The necessary signals wer given that day. The first thing he saw was the team approaching the Canifton Road crossing. The engine was only 30 or 40 feet west of the crossing. The man made no apparent effort to get out of the way. The cow catcher struck the sleigh in the centre. The train was stopped in a less space than its length. He saw the victims of the accident. Witness thought deceased upon this occasion acted in a rather careless manner. The team did not appear to be restive in any way and the man had them under control. A bill board on the west side of the road near the crossing prevents seeing the approaching vehicles from the south side of the road toward the track. Witness immediately applied the emergency brake and brought the train to a standstill as quickly as possible. The bill boards are on private property.

To Mr. Shorey—A robe from the vehicle was found by the fireman on one of the wheels of the engine. He did not see the engine strike the sleigh as he was on the opposite side of his engine. The train was over 400 yards from the Canifton Road crossing when witness gave the signal for that crossing.

To Mr. Pratt—The only thing he coud have done under the circumstances, he did, namely, apply the emergency brake.

Dr. Gibson testified he was notified of the accident on Saturday the 8th inst. He went to the G.T.R. station and saw a man lying on a stretcher. Witness examined the man and found he was dead. He made a limted examination of the woman, who was removed to the hospital. There was a fracture to some bones in the thighs. There is a possibility of her recovery, but it will be months before she fully recovers. The bill boards should never have been allowed in such a place in a civilized community. The woman made no statement to witness about the accident.

To Mr. Shorey—He had frequently noticed the automotic bell ringing at the crossing.

Mrs. Hill testified she lived near the Canifton Road crossing. She remembered the accident on Saturday last and heard the train approaching from the west. Witness in looking out of a window in her house saw a man and woman being thrown from a sleigh which was struck by the en-

Teuton Attack Has Commenced

Germans, Bulgarians and Turks Combine in Advance on Allied Forces—Half Million Men Engaged

ALLIES SUPPORTED BY FLEET

Have 200,000 Men In Strong Defensive Position to Oppose Teutonic Advance

Attack Confirmed

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, Jan. 13.—A despatch from Athens says: "The attack on the Entente positions by the Teutonic Allies has begun with a bombardment of the British lines in the Doiran zone which lasted the entire day. The Germans are attacking the west front around Monastir, the Bulgarians on the Guevgeli-Doiran line, and the Turks on the east flank.

Half Million Men

LONDON, Jan. 12.—A despatch from Rome indicates that the long deferred advance on Saloniki has begun. It tells of attacks in the direction of Doiran, Guevgheli and Monastir, just beyond the Greek border, where probably more than half a million Teutons, Bulgarians and Turks have been concentrated.

The Allies are believed to have 200,000 French and British troops to opposo the advance, besides the strong fleet in the harbor of Saloniki. It is probable that some of the troops lately withdrawn from Gallipoli will be found in the action as it develops.

Violent Bombardment

The Rome despatch says: "An Athens message declares an attack on the Allies in Macedonia was commenced on Monday. There was a violent bombardment in the Doiran zone, where the Austro-Bulgarians and the Turko-Germans united with the Germans in attacking from the west.

"With their headquarters at Monastir, the Bulgarians are attacking the centre of the line from Guerghell to Doiran. The Turks are attacking from the east, supported by the Xanti-Gumuldjina railway."

MAJORITY FOR UNION IS SUBSTANTIAL ONE

TORONTO, Jan. 12.—Rev. Dr. Somerville, secretary of the general assembly's' committee on church union, has received returns from all the Presbyterain synods in the Dominion of the ballot on church union. The aggregate vote of communicants and adherents in favor of immediate organic union with the Methodists and Congregationalists was 137,829 and the vote against union 88,822. The majority vote exceeded the expectations of the opponents of union and rendered union impracticable.

Toronto and Kingston synod communicants were almost equally divided, giving 25,050 for and 21,592 against union. Montreal and Ottawa synod communicants voted 14,944 for and 11,205 against.

Committee of Fifty

To Circulate Prohibition Petition In Kingston

KINGSTON, Jan. 12.—A meeting of the executive of the "Committee of Fifty," for Kingston and Frontenac, was held Monday evening. Reports were heard from the organizations of the different city wards. The petition, which is to be circulated to the public on the last week in January, is for the purpose of securing prohibition for the province of Ontario. At the present time every municipality in the country has its team of workers ready to circulate the petition when the time comes. Arrangements are being made for a public meeting to be held in the city on Jan. 23rd. A committee on advertising was appointed and will start on the campaign so that the people will know what is coming.

Seventeen Killed In C.P.R. Wreck

Collision Between Freight and Snow Train at Brandon Results Fatally

ALL EMPLOYEES OF C.P.R.

The Dead Were Foreigners—Conductor and Fireman Injured—Weather 50 Below Zero

Had Sought Shelter

BRANDON, Man., Jan. 12.—Seventeen C. P. R. employees were killed and a score injured here this morning when an engine, drawing a freight train, plunged into a caboose of a snow train, where the men had sought shelter from the 50 below zero weather. The men were employed clearing snow from the yards, and the caboose was attached to one of the trains used for hauling the snow away. With one or two exceptions all the killed were foreign born.

Many Frost Bitten

A call was sent to doctors, hospital authorities and for conveyances. The medical men pulled the injured from under the wreckage of the car, the roof of which covered them like a blanket. Frostbites added terribly to the sufferings of both wounded and those giving aid. Three of the injured died shortly after being admitted to the hospital, and the condition of many others is extremely critical.

An inquest will be opened Thursday.

Official Statement

D. C. Coleman, Assistant General Manager of the C.P.R., who is in the city concerning the wreck, made the following statement:

"At five minutes after ten this morning a freight extra, east, Engineer Fairbairn, Conductor Crowe both of Winnipeg, struck a snow train in charge of Conductor Beal of Brandon, just east of the gas works at Brandon. Section Foreman McGhie and twelve laborers, who were riding in the caboose of the snow train, in order to warm themselves, were killed outright, and fifteen other laborers injured, four of whom have since died. The responsibility for the accident has not yet been placed."

Official list of dead—George McGhie, Alex. Micoski, — Roloski, Tony Zamock, — Someston, Mike Robrect, Anton Yamonsky, Harry Morr, John Tysostey, — Kirkakiski, Steve Bilyski, Tony Rutkowski, — Balawiydes, Joe Dreylay, Vasyl Bolinski, two unidentified.

Among the injured are E. C. Beal, conductor, and — Henderson, brakeman.

AUTO TIRES TO COST MORE

Four American Manufacturers Announce Price Increase

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—Four manufacturers of automobile tires have within the last few days announced advances in price of tires. The increases range from 15 to 25 per cent, the average being around 20 per cent. The advance is greatest for the largest size tires and least for those under three and a-half inches. One of the companies makes no increase in the smallest size tires.

While each of these companies put out a well-known make of tire, none of the largest producers has yet made any open move regarding putting up prices, though reports have been current for some time that there would be a general and decided advance in tires soon after the beginning of the new year.

Surprise Attacks Are Repulsed

(Canadan Press Special)

Paris, Jan. 13—Afternoon statement. Between the Somme and the Avre last night the enemy attempted a surprise attack against one of our small positions. The attack was a complete failure. In Champagne the enemy made two surprise attacks with hand grenades one to the north-east of Butte De Mesnil, the other in the district of Maisons De Champagne. They were checked at once by our curtain of fire. Further information regarding the attack attempted yesterday by the Germans with the use of suffocating gases, in the region of Forges, shows that in the course of the operation a gust of wind blew back the gases to the trenches of the enemy. Our bombardment of the enemy's line was very violent.

FIRE IN CORNWALL HOTEL

CORNWALL, Jan. 12.—About 9.30 o'clock last night fire broke out in the sample room connected with the King George Hotel here, and before the flames were subdued considerable damage was done by fire and water to the east wing, where the sample rooms are located, as well as to the sleeping apartments overhead. Several commercial men were in town doing business, but most of them had their samples still unpacked, and the trunks were hustled out safely. C. A. Cunningham, traveller for the Diamond Whitewear, Ltd., Three Rivers, Que., had his samples, valued at close on $1,500, completely ruined. The fire was prevented from reaching the main part of the hotel, and the guests there carried their belongings back to their rooms. The fire was caused by an overheated stove in one of the sample rooms on the ground floor.

SPEECH FROM THRONE DELIVERED TO-DAY

Another Year of War Finds Canada Enthusiastic as Ever and Determined to Aid Britain to Fullest Extent—Extension of Parliament Mentioned

NEW SPEAKER WAS ELECTED YESTERDAY

Mr. Albert Sevigny Succeeds Hon. Mr. Sproule Who Goes to the Senate—Session Was Purely Routine Necessitated by Election of the Speaker

OTTAWA, Jan. 12.—The Senate and Commons conveyed for a brief period this afternoon to appoint a Speaker for the Lower House to take the place of Hon. Thomas Sproule, who, has, after strenuous years of political life, retired to the comparatve quietude of the Red Chamber. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Deputy Governor-General, was present and bid the Commoners proceed to the above necessary duty with all dispatch. Thereafter Mr. Albert Sevigny, M.P. for Dorchester was formally installed in the Speaker's chair. He will occupy the chair at present in the House, but as soon as a new one can be constructed Senator Sproule will take away the old one as a memento of his service as the first Commoner n the land.

(Special to The Intelligencer)

Speech From Throne

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—The speech from the throne to-day did not outline the policy of the government, or the legislative program beyond recommending the extension of the parliamentary term. Parliament was told that the government intends to propose a resolution for adoption by the two houses, embodying a memorial praying the imperial government to amend the B. N. A. Act in this respect.

Glowing tribute was paid to the gallantry of Canadian soldiers in the field and the splendid participation of Canada in the war.

Reference was also made to the bounteous harvest of 1915, and the improved conditions of trade and commerce throughout the Dominion.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

Since I last addressed you the war in which we are engaged has been continued with unabated vigour and varying fortunes.

The Empire's part therein has been amply maintained at sea by the inspiring achievements of the Navy, and on land by the distinguished valour of the great armies which have enrolled themselves in all parts of His Majesty's Dominions for the common defence of our liberties.

In a spirit of splendid loyalty and unfaltering devotion, India and the Overseas Dominions have vied with each other in co-operating with the Mother Country to achieve this great purpose.

The call to service has evoked a widespread and notable response in Canada. Already 120,000 men have crossed the seas, an equal number is now being actively trained and equipped for service abroad, and a call extending the authorized enlistment to half a million men has been received with warm enthusiasm.

At the front our gallant soldiers have met the enemy in repeated contests, and by their pre-eminent courage and heroic endurance have shed lustre upon their country and upheld its highest traditions.

Equally praiseworthy and impressive has been the self-sacrificing and loyal spirit shown by all the Canadian people who have freely dedicated their manhood and substance to the common defence of the Empire.

The life of the present Parliament expires in the autumn of this year, and, under existing legislation, a dissolution and election would be necessary in the early future. My advisers, however, are of the opinion that the wishes of the Canadian people and the present requirements of the war would be best met by avoiding the distraction and confusion consequent upupon a general election at so critical a time.

That purpose can only be effected through the medium of legislation by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. A resolution authorizing and requesting the enactment of such legislation as will extend the life of this Parliament for the period of one year will be presented to you.

Measures will be submitted for your consideration to further the effective co-operation of Canada in the defence of the Empire and in the maintenance of this war waged for liberty and lasting peace.

It is a matter for profound thankfulness that Providence has blessed the labours of our husbandmen during the past year with the most bountiful harvest in the history of Canada.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts for the last, and the estimates for the next fiscal year will be submitted to you without delay, and you will be asked to make the necessary financial provision for the effective conduct of the war.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The high courage, the splendid heroism, and the unalterable determination which have marked the united efforts of all portions of His Majesty's Dominions, during a year of unprecedented strain and effort, justify our supreme confidence in the triumph of our cause and in the lasting affirmation of the principles of liberty and justice throughout the world. I commend to your earnest consideration the measures which will be submitted to you for aiding in that great purpose, and I pray that the Divine blessing may rest upon your counsels.

FLEW AMERICAN FLAG OVER $5,000,000 CARGO

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—According to members of the crew of the British steamship City of London, which arrived here today from the Far East, the Captain of the vessel adopted all possible devices for eluding submarines in the Mediterranean, keen to displaying the American flag and painting out of name all except the word "Lincoln." Nothing was seen, however,. of sumersibles and barrrng tempertuous weather in the Atlantic, the voyage was not unusual.

Big shipments of rubber and slab tin formed important items of the cargo. The vessel brought in 4,000 tons of rubber, valued at approximately $1,300,000, and 2,400 tons of tin, estimated to be worth upward of a million dollars. The total value of the cargo was $5,000,000. Sixty-six thousand cases of bean oil, loaded at Dalmy, Japanese Manchuria, comprised one of the largest shipments of the kind ever brought here. The City of Lincoln also had large consignments of spies, tapioca, sago flour, rattans, and curios.

WANTED IN HALIFAX; ARRESTED IN BOSTON

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—Charles E. Maddin, a former railway mail clerk, wanted in Halifax, N.S., on a charge of farceny from the mails, was arrested here to-day as a fugitive from justice. He admitted his identity and waived extradition.

The specific charge against Maddin is the larceny of letters and packages valued at $25, but city detective Horace Kennedy of Halifax, who came here for Maddin, said the authorities expected through him to clear up thefts durings the past two year amounting to $4,000.

MONTREAL SOLDIER IS HELD AFTER TRAGEDY

gine of the train. She heard the automatic bell ringing at the crossing.

Wm. H. Doran testified he was fireman on the train on Saturday last when the accident occurred. The first witness knew engineer Johnson applied the emergency brake. Witness was ringing the bell. He noticed a team in front of the engine but did not see the man or woman until after the accident. The usual signals were given in approaching the crossings in the city. He could not tell how many times the whistle was sounded. Witness thought the train, when it struck the vehicle, was travelling along about 10 or 12 miles an hour.

To Mr. Shorey—West of the iron bridge on the day of the accident the engineer sounded the whistle for the Canifton Road crossing.

Mrs. James Little testified that she lived near the Canifton Road crossing. Her son was eating his dinner and remarked that the fast train was late on Saturday. She noticed the train was approaching the crossing rapidly, and also saw the engine strike a sleigh and saw a man and woman hurled into the air. The team was not being driven fast and apparently the people in the sleigh were not aware of the approach of the train. She could not say whether the bell at the crossing was ringing or not. The bill boards prevents a person driving seeing a train approaching.

Mrs. Sarah Keller being sworn, stated that on Saturday last she was at Mrs. Little's place and when she hear Mrs. Little scream she looked out of the window. Witness saw the train approaching but did not see the engine strike the sleigh. She did not hear the crossing bell ring. The train was clear of the crossing but it was backed up. Two men came and did something to the bell at the crossing after the accident occurred. Witness considered the bill boards were dangerous and she had nearly been caught by trains owing to them. The train seemed to be travelling faster that day than usual.

To Mr. Shorey—In less than an hour after the accident two men were working at the crossing bell.

To Mr. Pratt—Witness could not say whether the crossing bell was ringing or not whilst the train was standing on the crossing.

Edward Bateman said he was a switchman, and on the 8th he was in the shanty east of the Canifton Road crossing. The shanty is 215 yards from the crossing, and when a westbound passes the shanty the bell at the crossing commences to ring. Everything on the line at the time of the accident was clear. He saw the train approaching the crossing and he heard the whistle sounded from the engine. Witness saw the team approaching the crossing on the trot, and the train was in close proximity to the crossing. The engine of the train stopped in front of the switch shanty baring one car and portion of another car west of the crossing. The bell on the engine was ringing, as was also the automatic bell at the crossing. The bill boards are no doubt an obstruction. Could not tell how fast the train was travelling at the crossing.

Mr. Richard Stapley testified he did not see the accident but took charge of the team.

Walter Brown testified that he was with Mr. R. C. Cole when the body of Wellman was taken from the baggage room to Tickell & Sons' undertaking establishment.

Alfred Horne testified that he lived near Canifton and knew the deceased, Mr. Wellman. The team are a quiet team. He drove over the Canifton crossing considerable and the bill boards were a menace to the travelling public. He was at the crossing at the time. The bell was not ringing although the train that struck Wellman was on the crossing at the time. He did not see the accident.

Mr. T. H. Coppin, station agent of the G.T.R., testified that west of the Canifton Road crossing the connections with the automatic bell, are a distance of 1600 feet and about the same distance east.

This concluded the evidence and the jury retired to consider their verdict.

MUSIC & DRAMA

MYSTERIES OF THE OCEAN REVEALED

Wonderful Deep-Sea Motion Pictures

The famous Williamson Expedition Submarine Motion Pictures, taken 100 feet under the surface of the ocean, will be shown at Griffin's (Bridge St.) on Friday and Saturday of this week for the benefit of the 155th Battalion, C. E. F.

These are the first and only pictures ever made at the bottom of the ocean, and show a marvelous submarine journey of thirty leagues along the floor of the ocean, during which you visit the world famous marine gardens of the Bahamas. Among the thousands of feet of film obtained are pictures showing a battle to the death between a daring swimmer, armed only with a knife, and a huge blue shark.

The pictures are in seven reels, making an entire evening's enjoyment. Special prices for this engagement, of 10c., 15s., and 25c.

Dr. Jackson Says "Don't Stir It."

He is the inventor of Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal, and if anyone in the world should know how it should be cooked, he is the one.

He says "Do not stir Roman Meal porridge while it is cooking." If you were to hear his lecture on this food, you would not stir it. There are three scientific reasons for not stirring it, too long to be stated here.

Roman Meal positively relieves constipation and indigestion. Stirring porridge partly defeats this purpose, besides entirely changing the flavor and altogether robbing it of its deliciousness. Cook without stirring.

Sidney Township Council Meets

Grants Made — 80th Battalion to Receive $100—Assessors Appointed

Town Hall, Sidney, Monday, Jan. 10th, 1916.—The following persons duly elected (by acclamation) filed their declarations of qualification and declaration of office with the clerk and took their seats in the Council: Chas. Ketcheson, reeve; John W. Hess, deputy reeve; Harry L. Ketcheson, councillor; Merritt Finkle, councillor; Wm. A. Reid, councillor.

A letter was read from the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto, requesting a grant. Moved by John W. Hess, seconded by Merritt Finkle, that a grant of five dollars be made the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.—Carried.

A letter was read from Mr. S. Howell, manager of the Molsons Bank, Frankford, thanking the Council for the township account and requesting a continuance of the same. Moved by Harry L. Ketcheson, seconded by John W. Hess, that the township account be left with the Molsons Bank, Frankford, for the year 1916.—Carried.

Moved by W. A. Reid, seconded by Merritt Finkle, that the following accounts be paid: Morton & Herity (printing) $7.50; Tickell & Sons Co. (102 folding chairs for Town Hall) $86.70; The Municipal World (account 40c., 7 subscriptions, $5.70) $6.10; W. H. Nobes (groceries for Geo. Carr) $1.95; John Kiernan (rent for spring, 1916) $1.00; J. G. Shaw, $1.70; Treasurer (war tax on cheques) $2.80.—Carried.

The following by-laws were passed through their various stages, signed, sealed and numbered 676, 677 and 678 consecutively: A bylaw appointing township assessors for 1916, (Thomas H. Ketcheson and Wm. J. Gallagher appointed assessors); a bylaw appointing a Medical Officer of Health and Sanitary Inspector, and to fix their salaries, also appointing a member of the local Board of Health, (Chas. Ketcheson, chairman B. of H., Dr. H. V. Malone, Medical Officer of Health, Robt. Armstrong, member of B. of H., Wm. H. Weese, Sanitary Inspector, and A. M. Chapman, secretary); a bylaw appointing Township Auditors for 1916, (Clem. H. Ketcheson and Walter Boardman, auditors).

Moved by Merritt Finkle, seconded by W. A. Reid, that the 80th Battalion for overseas be granted one hundred dollars towards a regimental fund, to be paid to Colonel Wm. Geo. Ketcheson, Colonel commanding 80th Batt., C.E.F.—Carried.

Moved by W. A. Reid, seconded by Harry L. Ketcheson, that the reeve be authorized to give an order on the Treasurer for any money required to be advanced to the Road Superintendent for road purposes to the extent of $300.—Carried.

Moved by John W. Hess, seconded by W. A. Reid, that the council now adjourn until Monday, March 27th, at at 10 a.m.—Carried.

A. M. Chapman, Clerk.

WEDDING BELLS

TWEEDY—POPE

At three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon on January 12th, Miss Daisy Mildred, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pope of the 5th. concession of Thurlow, was united in marriage to Mr. Harry Walker Tweedy, of the 3rd concession of Thurlow. The marriage took place quietly in the parsonage, Cannifton, the Rev. M. E. Wilson, M.A., officiating. Mr. Wm. Waterhouse of Cannifton, and Miss Maggie Ray of Sidney, were witnesses. The bride, who is very popular amongst an extended circle of friends, looked very charming and beautiful in a gown of blue silk. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Tweedy were motored to the Grand Trunk railway station, where they took the east bound train for Brockville and other points, for their honeymoon. Upon the return of the bride and groom they will reside on the third concession of Thurlow upon the farm owned and occupied by the prosperous and happy groom.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Anderson and son of Garroll, Manitoba, left for their home Tuesday, after seeing their parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Leslie, of Park street of this city, who celebrated their 80th birthday, which was attended by the members of their family.

CALL 100 WOMEN

Ask them what they think of Zam-Buk and you will be surprised how many of them would tell you it is the best known healing balm, and that it should be in every home. A contest in "Everywoman's World" recently proved this!

Women from coast to coast have proved by actual test that Zam-Buk is unequalled for the skin diseases and injuries of children as well as of adults. They have found Zam-Buk different to ordinary ointments in that it allays the irritation as soon as applied; prevents festering, inflammation, blood poisoning, etc., and permanently heals in a very short time. As a mother and head of a family you owe it to yourself to have Zam-Buk always handy!

If you have not yet tried Zam-Buk, get a box at once.

DEATH ROLL

ROBERT COPELAND

Mr. Robert Copeland, an aged and esteemed resident of Tyendinaga Township, died yesterday. Deceased was 79 years of age and was born in the county of Armagh, Ireland. For the past 45 years deceased had been a resident of Hastings County. A family of five sons and three daughters survive. The sons are James of Deseronto, Joseph A. of Manitoba, Henry of Belleville, John W. of Plainfield and Robt. L. of Tyendinaga. The daughters are Mrs. Cross Carter of Tyendinaga, Mrs. Ward Gould of Plainfield and Mrs. Wm. Tracey of Carmel.

Sir Sam Vetoes Orange Battalion

OTTAWA, Jan. 12.—Mr. Fred Dane, member of the Ontario License Commission, conferred with Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, to-day as to the possibility of the raising of an Orange Battalion in Toronto, as is now under consideration in Winnipeg. Mr. Dane merely discussed with Sir Sam, who has vetoed the scheme once before, the advisability of the attempt. He said he had no doubt such a battalion could be raised in Toronto despite the fact that 20,000 Toronto Orangemen had joined the colors already. Sir Sam replied that he would consider the scheme.

QUIET IN POLICE CIRCLES

In police circles yesterday and last night all was quiet. Two tramps, comparatively young men, were last night provided with protection at the station.

LAID TO REST

The funeral of the late Mrs. Catherine Barrett, who died in Tyendinaga Township, took place this morning from her son's residence on Foster Avenue. At St. Michael's church Rev. Father Killeen celebrated mass. At the vault in the Belleville cemetery the remains were deposited. The bearers were Messrs. W. Spiece, M. Daly, R. Waddell, J. Freeman, John and James Boyle.

SUPPORT WAR FUNDS

COBOURG, Jan. 12.—At a meeting of ratepayers of Murray township a resolution was unanimously carried asking the 1916 council to levy a rate of one-half mill on the assessable property of the township for the Belgian relief fund, and that the township pay $150 per month for the year to the patriotic fund. The representatives from Murray to the counties council of Northumberland and Durham were asked to support the recommendation made by the chairman of the counties patriotic committee, that the counties council levy a rate of one and a half mills all over the counties for the patriotic fund.

Port Hope Pastor Dons the Khaki

Our esteemed townsman Rev. J. A. Elliott of St. John's church, has answered the call of King and Country. The Rev. gentleman has been appointed Chaplain of the 136th Battalion, and commenced his service yesterday. He will don the khaki in a few days. Rev. Elliott's many friends will be pleased to learn that he will still remain as vicar of the church so long as the battalion remains here.—Port Hope Guide.

Trench Protectors.

A Wanganui (New Zealand) firm is putting on the New Zealand market a clever and useful invention. It is a combination protector and carrier, the chief purpose of which is to give the man in the firing-line an additional chance of life, at the same time providing a safe and convenient means of carrying most cherished possessions. The "protector" takes the form of a specially-designed leather pocket with independent compartments.

The front compartment, the money carrier, is backed by a thin sheet of tempered steel. Behind this is a pocket for a book or letters, and back of all is a plate of heavier steel. The protector is attached to the braces so as to cover the heart, and is so arranged as to give with every movement of the body and afford no inconvenience at all to the wearer. The steel plate is removable, and need only be worn when in action, but even with the plate in position the weight is inconsiderable, and is carried where it is least felt. Medical men and military experts have expressed the opinion that the protector should be the means of saving many lives.

Dressing to Please.

"It's just 'clothes, clothes, clothes' all the time," growled Mr. Cobbles. "Don't you women ever think of anything but clothes?"

"Why, yes," answered Mrs. Cobbles. "Occasionally we think of you men, and then we go and buy more clothes."

"NEWS FROM HOME" FOR SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT

The "News from Home" movement was founded by Mr. W. K. George in September, 1914, laid by him before the League of the Empire, and adopted by the League as one of its special activities during the war. The aim of the movement is to provide Canadian news in the shape of newspaper clippings for our soldiers at the front and in the hospitals, arranged in a concrete, convenient and practically indestructible form.

As the League of the Empire is an Imperial Educational Association its first thought was to spread this work through the schools of Canada. Dr. James L. Hughes and Mr. W. K. George, both representatives of the League Council, waited on the Toronto Board of Education. The Board gave its hearty approval and co-operation and Toronto schools have, since September, 1914, been sending on an average 70 budgets a week, first to Salisbury Plain and later to the trenches. The schools of Canada were circularized by the League and in a short time from Nova Scotia to British Columbia many of them were taking part in this patriotic work, splendidly led and inspired by the enthusiasm and energy of the principals and teachers. The work the schools continue to do is magnificent and will go on in a steady stream as long as the war lasts, but in the nature of things the output of the schools cannot much increase and the demand grows unceasingly and the League is most thankful to report that in addition to the schools many other patriotic individuals and societies have taken up this work in the last few months. Women's Institutes, Red Cross Societies, Women's University Residences, Young People's Societies, Girl Guides and Boy Scouts, have all thrown themselves selves into the movement, each society working it out for its own men and on the lines best suited to its own local conditions. These budgets are of untold value to the men at the front, as they give them their news from home in a form that alone makes it possible for many of the soldiers to receive it, and, unhappily, the need promises to be greater for the coming months than ever before.

The plan is a very simple one. The Budgets should be made of six or more sheets of strong manilla paper about 11 inches wide when folded, and 15 inches long, fastened together through the centre by strong cord. On the cover "News from Home" should be written, the locality the budget comes from, and the inclusive dates of the budgets given. Whenever possible the budgets should be kept up to date and forwarded once a week.

First, last, and always, it should be remembered that the real object of the budgets is to provide the soldiers with the "News from Home"—not with general reading matter of a more or less interesting character. There are many channels through which the soldiers obtain ordinary reading matter. There is only one source for "News from Home" and the men long for and appreciate that above everything else. The budget should be made up from local papers, or from such papers as are usually read in the vicinity, and should include (1) Items of city, local and district news; (2) Roll of honor and casualty lists; (3) Social and personal items; (4) Birth, marriage and death notices; (5) School and college news; (6) Items of general Canadian news; (7) Sports—very extensively; Remember that the men are nearly all "fans" and that they are eager for every bit of news of the games or gossip about the players. (9) Very important—include all articles in commendation of our men at the front, especially extracts copied from British or foreign papers. It is only right that our men should know something of what we and others think of their glorious bravery, but don't use letters from men at the front, the writers might not like to see them back again. (10) Fill in odd spaces with jokes, funny stories, or something for the soldiers' more serious side, but remember that home news is the first consideration. No war news should be included.

The budgets should be addressed as follows:

(1) To any officer or man at the front whose address is known, with the request that the budgets be read and passed on to others. (N.B.—This has been found to be a very quick and satisfactory method.)

(2) "News from Home" for the men of ...... (fill in name of regiment and brigade),

Care of C. J. Colmer, Esq.,
Canadian War Contingent Asso'n,
Westminster Palace Hotel,
London, England.

(3) The budgets intended for Canadians in hospitals should be addressed:

"News from Home" for Canadians in Hospitals,
Care of Red Cross Commissioner,
16 Cockspur Street,
London, England.

The above associations have been forwarding these budgets since Christmas, 1914, and see that they always go to their destinations at the earliest possible date.

Our men are facing a long, dreary and monotonous winter in the trenches. We are told that the literature that can provide them with Entertainment, Distraction and Peace of Mind is what they crave for, and a year's experience has demonstrated that our news budgets can render a very real service to them in this regard. It is the hope of the League of the Empire that every battalion at the front will be provided by the people of its own district with the home news so dear to the soldier's heart.

Will you not see that your district takes part in this work while the war lasts? Everyone can help. Many of the best budgets are made by men. The time spent on them is well spent. When made they are practically indestructible and each one, as the men testify, is found unique and different from every other one, so that while an an issue of 100 newspapers to 100 men means that each man has one paper, an issue of 100 budgets means that each man can read 100 different budgets.

LONDON MAIL MAKES SENSATIONAL CHARGES

Alleges Mysterious Agreement With Demark Aids Foe and Cripples Fleet

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Daily Mail begins this morning its promised statements purporting to prove that Great Britain is pursuing a policy of being "gentle to Germany" and allowing food and material to pass freely through Denmark to that country. It prints a long article by Basil Clarke, whom it sent to Copenhagen to ascertain the facts of "the mysterious agreement concluded between Britain and Denmark," and declares that the facts that he produces cannot be controverted.

"His figures show," it asserts, "that all kinds of supplies are being rushed through from Denmark to the German army, while the greatest fleet in the world, which is only to anxious to crush its German enemies, is paralyzed by orders."

The Daily Mail correspondent says: "The phrases "Great Britian is blockading Germany' and 'Great Britain is starving Germany' have become well nigh the laughing-stock of neutral traders, while for Germany and German traders with Scandinavia they are pre-eminently the best joke of the war. Danish sympathies are entirely with the Allies, and the Danes are revolted by the work that Denmark is forced to do.

Not Her Own Mistress

"Denmark is not her own mistress. Just now the big German fist overhangs it, threatening, bullying, driving!

"The Germans threaten to seize Denmark ,unless that country furnishes Germany with the surplus Danish food commodities and such commodities as she can get abroad."

Figures are given showing enormouse increases in the Danish importations of rice, lard, linseed oil, pork, tea, coffee, cocoa, meat and oleomargarine—all vastly in excess of possible home consumption. An immense preponderance of these goes to Germany, says the writer, some to Sweden and a tiny part to Russia.

A description is given of the long lines of freight cars that transport these goods night and day, some direct to, others by way of Sweden, and statements are offered purporting to prove that the latter class proceed promptly from Sweden to German territory.

"If Britain licenses and permits recommendations which keep the pouring of world's goods into Germany," the article concludes, "there is little wonder that the Danish merchants and other onlookers exclaim: 'My word, you are truly Christian people, for you really love your enemies!' "

Knew John A. When a Boy

OTTAWA, Jan. 12.—Outside of Sir Joseph Pope, who was many years private secretary to Sir John Macdonald, probably no man in Ottawa today knew personally so well the "Grand Old Man" of the Conservative party as Col. Harry Smith, Kingston, the veteran sergeant-at-arms of the House of Commons. Col. Smith's father was the late Sir Henry Smith, member for years for Frontenac, Attorney-General at one time in the old Parliament of Canada, and later Speaker.

"Sir John A.! Sir John A.! You ask me for reminiscences of him?" replied Col. Smith, as he sat in his little dingy office in the Commons building. "Why I first knew Sir John when I was but eight years old." He smiled. "Don't make that when he was eight years old."

He continued: "He was then a rising young politician in Kingston, regarded as a brilliant man with a future. He was frequently in my father's house, and he was always joking me. He always told me I would meet an early death."

His First Candidature

"When did he first run for Parliament? He was first asked to stand for Kingston as member for that city in the Legislative Assembly of Old Canada in April, 1884."

Col. Smith had in his files a copy of the Kingston Whig of that date. This contained the names of those who signed the requisition that he become a candidate.

"Among these I notice," said Col. Smith,, "the names of John Flannagan, at that time city clerk; Mr. Alexander Campbell, afterwards Sir Alexander; Mr. Alexander Drummond, for many years manager of the Bank of Montreal; Mr. John Mowat, father of Sir Oliver Mowat; Hon. John Kirby, Mr. Henry Smith, my father, afterwards Sir Henry Smith; Mr. Ogle R. Gowan; Mr. A. Henderson, Q.C., and many other prominent citizens of Kingston, all of whom have since passed away.

The great charm of Sis John," he continued, "was his wonderful geniality and sympathy of his manner. His apparent pleasure at your presence never seemed to be other than natural. If you paid him a visit in his office, he was always a most amusing and interesting companion. He had the happy knack of making his visitors feel perfectly at home. When you left him it was with the pleasant feeling that he was sorry to see you go. He was indeed a human marvel of tact and keen perception.

Sir John Angry

"Only twice during long years in the House did I see him genuinely provoked and angry. Once was on the 10th of May, 1878, just before prorogation, and later dissolution. It was the most unruly and most turbulent scene I ever witnessed in the House. Chaos held high carnival. Leading men used strong language, while fists were clenched and front ranks pressed closer to each other. Lord Strathcona had used somewhat pointed language in regard to Sir John's veracity. The Conservative leader was exceedingly angry.

"The second time was once late at night, when Mr. McMullen, M.P., in rather harsh tones, interrupted Sir John while making an important speech as Premier.

"Sir John paused for a moment, with flashing eyes, and all he said was, 'Hold your tongue, sir.' The effect was magical. Mr. McMullen grew suddenly meek and did not open his mouth until the House adjourned."

Swamped

When a man's efficiency is on the decline—when after a long day of effort the mass of work still stares him in the face—it's time to find out what's wrong.

Frequently a lack of certain necessary nutritive elements, in the daily diet, lessen mental and physical activity. A prime factor in efficiency is right feeding.

No food supplies, in such splendid proportion, all the rich nourishment of the field grains, for keeping the mental and physical forces upbuilt and in trim, as

Grape-Nuts

Made of whole wheat and malted barley this famous pure food supplies the vital mineral salts, often lacking in the ordinary daily diet, but imperative in building sturdy mental, physical and nervous energy.

Then, too, there's a wonderful return of power for the small effort required in the digestion of Grape-Nuts, which, with cream or good milk, supplies complete nourishment.

SAFETY FIRST.

During late years there has been a great deal of agitation for subways on the railroads, and no place has it been more clearly demonstrated that a subway was required than at the Canifton road crossing over the G.T.R. in this city.

That the crossing is very dangerous is admitted by everyone, and that several people have lost their lives there within the last few years is a well known fact. It would seem to be about time that some action was commenced that would cause a subway to be built at this crossing.

Another thing that attention should be called to, is that gates should be erected at the railway crossing on the south end of Front street.

Where there is evident danger to human life there should be no compromise, and the expense of building or maintaining necessary improvements should not be allowed to count against the work.

"Safety First" is the proper slogan, and action should be taken to insure the safety of the lives of the people.

GOOD ROADS.

The prosperity of a country is to a large extent mirrored by its good roads.

Ill-paved, badly-graded, grass-grown, rutty roads plainly point to national decay and devolution.

Wide, well-bricked, paved or macadamed highways mark a nation's growth.

The Romans were the pioneer road-builders. Three hundred and twelve years before Christ, Appius Claudius began the construction of the Appian Way.

It was a magnificent undertaking connecting Rome with Brindisi; three hundred and fifty miles of paved roadway, eighteen feet in width.

The Appian Way was the symbol of abundance. It made the country accessible and tapped the abundant sources of oil and wine. It became the Milky Way of Roman commerce.

And it was these same Romans who, two hundred and fifty years later, gave to England that magnificent road leading from London to Edinburgh—the Great North Road, and Watling Street stretching from Dover to York.

And portions of these wonderful roads still exist, a monument to Roman enterprise and thoroughness.

Undoubtedly these rare Roman roads endowed the Britons with one of the primary principles of civilization. They gave quicker transportation facilities and brought markets into being by enabling the farmer to haul his produce from where it was plentiful to where it was needed.

The Belleville councils have realized the need of good roads, and have, and undoubtedly will continue to improve the highways of the city.

RECRUITING IN QUEBEC.

Now it is Bruchesi against Bourassa. Needless to say which will prevail. The bulk of the people of Quebec, especially in the rural districts, take their opinions on things secular as well as religious from their priests, and the priests look for guidance to the Archbishop's palace.

Bourassa and his fellow Nationalists have been arguing that Canada has nothing to do with England's wars, that it is only when Canada is attacked she need to bestir herself, and that her defence is a matter to be fought out some day, if ever, on this side of the Atlantic. Canada may be in alliance with the British Empire, but is not a part of it. Apart from anything England may do, Canada has her own course to pursue.

The other evening Archbishop Bruchesi spoke at Laval University, Montreal. Notice how flatly he contradicts every link in the Bourassa argument: "Canada," he said, "being a part of the British Empire, it is the sacred duty of the Canadian people to assist Great Britain in her heroic defence of liberty. This was the position taken by the episcopacy of French Canada at the outbreak of the war, and this is the attitude our Bishops still maintain and will continue to maintain to the very end. The obligations we owe the British crown are sacred obligations. It is the solemn duty of every Canadian citizen to the utmost limit of his force to stand side by side with the motherland in her heroic effort to crush the tyrant who wishes to trample small nations and states beneath his iron heel. What fate would be ours if the Germans obtained a foothold here? Were Great Britain defeated, Germany would secure domination on the St. Lawrence." With special emphasis he added: "French-Canadian countrymen, I for one do not want to be a German citizen."

Now recruiting may go on in Quebec without check or hindrance. Bourassa must hide his diminished head. If hereafter he repeats his treasonable utterances, he may come under the ban of the church. That would be better than to put him behind prison bars as a traitor. In jail he would pose as a martyr, a victim of Protestant Ontario, etc., and would make all the mischief he could, politically, for the Gouin Government at Quebec and the Borden Government at Ottawa. But when the chief authority of his own faith and race takes him in hand, he can have nothing to say. Rich indeed is it to see so pestilent a fellow so neatly silenced.

Montenegro will have to receive help very soon if that little country is not to be completely overrun.

To-morrow night the local boys will try to retrieve their defeat at the hands of the Picton hockeyists.

The impression is growing in official circles that the nationality of the submarine which sank the Persia will never be learned. Will the confidence of official Washington in the good faith of the governments which it suspects are withholding the information remain unshaken?

There is a chance that the freight blockade will be lifted from a part of the Atlantic coast, anyhow. It is reported that the British Government has commandeered enough vessels to handle the Canadian wheat that has been held up in Canada for lack of steamers to move it. This does not concern those 15,000,000 bushels recently requisitioned by the British Government, however. That lot of wheat is for Italy and will be transported in Italian vessels, and the Italian Government has announced that it can take care of the shipment itself.

GLIMPSES INTO THE PAST

From The Daily Intelligencer Jan. 13, 1868.

We are glad to learn that a pottery is to be established in Belleville next spring.

Forty-three deer were sold in Guelph last week at four cents a pound.

Despatches received from the British expedition in Abyssinia contain advices that the native chief of Tigia has proved friendly to the British troops, and in evidence of his good faith, he has already sent in 2,000 cattle for the use of the army.

A United People Bending Every Effort

To the Successful Prosecution of

THE GREAT WAR

This is the Resolve of Canada
The Determination of Ontario

A United People in the Great War

This is the end to which Political Leaders have made every effort and continued to wield their great influence.

No question of a local, contentious or political nature can be allowed to divert our minds or our energies from the one duty. Win the War. The best minds in Ontario and, in fact, throughout Canada believe that, although there may be questions political and otherwise that might well be determined by the electorate, yet these must wait.

No Election Until After The War Is Over

No General Election This Year

The House of Commons opens shortly and it is expected the first bill to be introduced will be one extending the Life of Parliament for a year—What for? In order that the Government may devote its whole thought and energies in directing Canada's great efforts to do its full part within the Empire in winning the war and thus bring about an honorable peace.

Let the Man Who Fights Vote on The Issue

And now at this critical time comes the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred with its campaign for Total Prohibition to divide us, to throw us into opposing camps, and if possible force their will on this province when many of the electors are fighting for the Empire in Europe.

The Electors of the Province of Ontario
Spoke With No Uncertain Sound June, 1914

to retain The License System under sane Government supervision and control.

The question was settled, then why does the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred raise it now?

The Question Was Settled by The Electors in 1914

The Men at the Front and the Thousands to Follow

Thousands of our fellow-citizens have heard the call and have gladly responded, sacrificing the comforts of home, their loved ones, their friends, their business, at the call of Duty and Liberty. Many more will go before the vote proposed by the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred could be taken. These men voted in 1914. Is it fair to force the question of Total Prohibition on Ontario when they have become disfranchised by reason of their absence—fighting for you—fighting for Liberty?

Parliament of Canada Gave Vote to Men in the Trenches

In the last session of the House of Commons a bill amending the Franchise Act was introduced, approved and made law, under which, in the event of a General Election in Canada, our soldiers in England or on any field of action will be able to cast their votes. The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred is trying to get a verdict in the absence of our fighting men.

The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred realizes that the men who are fighting for the World's liberty on the battlefield of Europe would be fighting for the liberty of the individual if they were home.

Wait, and give them an opportunity to vote.

Relics.

Rev. Father O'Leary, who earned the esteem of the Canadian soldiers in South Africa, and who is now a chaplain with the rank of major, somewhere in France, writes a letter to a friend, in which he states that he is encamped on the identical spot where Julius Caesar gathered his legions for their invasion of Britain. He also tells of securing some coins and other relics of that ancient period which were discovered by the troops while digging drains. The information calls attention to the fact that history keeps repeating itself. There have been many wars since Julius Caesar's time and the same territory has been deluged with blood on numerous occasions. If, in some day which now seems remote, armies again clash on the old fighting ground, there will be relics found of the present war under every sod that is turned over by the trenching spades.—Montreal Gazette.

The Iron Walls of Britain.

The iron walls of Britain!
Built on the broad sea brine,
Whose giant sides shall guard, and form
Our future battle line—
Whose voice of bolted thunder
Can make the mighty fear,
For them and Britain's ocean hearts
A welcome and a cheer.

The iron walls of Britain!
The pride of all the seas,
Whose song of praise immortally
Pipes in the sounding breeze,
Upon the briny waters
They proudly heave and float,
The land their stay, the ocean vast
Their far outlying moat.

The iron walls of Britain!
The glory of the deep;
Behind whose girding stretch of guns
A thousand cities sleep;
Within whose guardian shadow
The merchants count their gains,
And Commerce with her crush of wheels,
Roars down our streets and lanes.

The iron walls of Britain!
The nation's hope and pride,
The toil-birth of the hammers' stroke
Heard on the Thames and Clyde.
Securely rests the islands
That rear such manly sons,
Whose brawny arms can build and float
A heaving wall of guns.

The iron walls of Britain!
With throbbing hearts of steam,
And peace imprisoned mouths of fire,
And eyes of lightning gleam—
If on our circling waters,
A foe shall strike her sails,
Another "yarn" shall swell the list
Of Britain's naval tales.

The iron walls of Britain!
Built on the broad sea brine,
Whose giant sides shall guard and form
Our future battle line—
Whose voice of bolted thunder
Can make the mighty fear,
To them and Britain's ocean hearts
A welcome and a cheer.

DO THIS FIRST—YOU!

You know, and every physician knows, that when any sickness has passed, whether it be throat trouble organic disturbances, contagious diseases, or even a severe cold, a relapse is feared, because sickness robs the system of Nature's resistance and leaves it subject to lingering germs.

Drugs never build up a worn-out body—only food can do that, and the first thing to take after any sickness is the concentrated, blood-making oil-food in Scott's Emulsion, which feeds the tissues, benefits the blood and strengthens both lungs and throat.

Physicians prescribe Scott's Emulsion after sickness. Nurses everywhere advocate it. Scott's is pure medicinal food, without injurious drugs.

CHAPTER XXIX.—Continued

Orchid turned breahlessly. "Do you mean it? Was I the cause? Oh, I don't know what to say! Tell me, is it true?"

"You were not the sole cause," Craighead answered in the same reluctant, enforced way. "You merely hastened the crisis. The ostensible issue was based on the question of her uncle's will."

"Why,—didn't you put the money in her name?"

"She wishes to throw it over altogether, and gives me the choice between herself and the fortune."

Orchid turned her face away, and for some moments appeared to be struggling with conflicting thoughts.

"Do you really mean to say that she wants to relinquish her entire fortune? What reason does she give? Is she demented?"

"Most people will think so," said Craighead, gloomily, in answer to the last question. "But she is sane enough, and utterly convinced that her standpoint is the only one."

"But what can be her standpoint? I never heard of anything so preposterous—unless—yes—it must be!—that she is trying to subjugate and humiliate you. It is a piece of colossal vanity!"

"On the contrary, it is a matter of principle, and arises from the fact that her great-uncle, whose fortune it was, fought against the South. She calls it 'blood-money.' The whole thing is utterly preposterous, I'll admit, but she is absolutely honest in her view."

"Where has been her scruples during the past year?"

"She has endeavored to reason herself out of them, she says; but a point has now been reached where she can endure it no longer."

"And she didn't attempt to force an issue until after her talk with me?"

"No."

Orchid's face had been steadily growing more keen, and shrewd, and hard. She gave a contemptuous laugh and burst out:—"Van Craighead,—are you, a lawyer, to be taken in with such puerile artifice as this? It is pique, I tell you,—nothing else! She is not even sincere. It is a trial—a test,—a—punishment."

Craighead flushed angrily. "The money is her loss."

"What does she care for money in comparison with the sweet satisfaction of humbling you! Probably she prefers her half-civilized, vegetable existence in the South, and would drag you to it if she could. You—who ought to be an Emperor!" She gloated him with eyes that swam in adoration.

"You underestimate her nobility and her strength, Mrs. Wiley."

"There your folly, not my madness, speaks! Oh, Van, this is a crisis in your life,—in all our lives! Do not delude yourself now, when delusion is so fearfully fatal! You have always been clear of sight before. I tell you I know her real motives. It takes a woman to understand a woman!"

Craighead turned on her. "You are fond of analyzing the motives of others. Are you sure of your own?"

"I am," said Orchid, steadily. "If I saw my humblest acquaintance nodding over a charcoal pot, I would try to draw him away. And you—you—Oh! For the world's sake, if not my own, I must save you from this mental asphyxiation. There is no height to which you cannot aspire. The President's chair could be your footstool. You should make empires, create universes,—fire the dusty heaps of the past with a glow that will light the remotest corners of the world's future! No one knows your power as I. and—now," she threw out both hands with a dramatic gesture, "am I to stand by helpless, and see you— punished?"

Craighead's face was like wax. A fearful power of concentration burned in his dark eyes. "You goad well, Orchid. But a few trifling aspects are still to be taken into consideration,—honor, for instance; faith to two helpless women, and that less tangible essence—self-respect."

"Does a tame poodle need self-respect?" she said bitterly.

The insolence of the tone, rather than the words, came like a lash of a whip across Craighead's face, but the pain steadied him. On each temple stood out a rough "V" of purple veins. He felt them as burning scars. The ghastly pallor deepened.

"Let us be clear, then. You, in my place, would feel justified in accepting freedom and fortune from that young girl, not yet twenty years of age, without a scruple or qualm as to the effect of her future life?"

"A stone in a king's path must be kicked aside. It is free to gather moss elsewhere! Perhaps the chivalrous Quincy—"

He stopped her with a gesture. "Leave something to decency!" he said darkly. "We will keep to the main issue, if you please. Now, taking for granted that I have acted on your advice, that I am legally free, and that technicalities could be managed,—that you have lost no confidence in me or respect for me—would it then be your desire to become Truth's successor?"

The question came so unexpectedly that Orchid's breath was taken away. She gasped and stared as though in doubt of her senses; then she let her eyes fall, and a slow, painful blush suffused her throat and brow.

"Wh—what do you mean?" she stammered. "What has that to do with it?"

"Everything! On this one point may hang life and death. You have assured me many times that you cared for me as you could never care for another man. You have said it again to-night. You cannot pretend concern for conventionalities. I ask you, now, Orchid, the direct question,—should I agree to accept the freedom that might be mine for the taking, would you pledge yourself both by words and in writing to marry me as soon as I might desire? Answer me, Orchid! Don't blench and cower. Where is your superb vehemence of a moment ago? It must be yes or no."

"You have no right to force a decision at such a time!" she cried. "It is unworthy of you,—cruel!—"

"Is it 'No'?"

"Certainly not! Give me time to think!"

"That is the one thing I will not give. Is it 'Yes'?"

"It is not!" she exclaimed with a flash of defiance. "I will not be bullied!"

Craighead gave a hoarse, unnatural laugh, and threw one palm to his forehead. For a moment it seemed that he was about to break into sobs. "God! But the edge of the axe was cold! What a risk! How did I take it!"

Orchid fell listlessly into a chair. She knew that she had failed, with success at her very feet,—yet had she really wished success? Craighead stood by the mantel, ejaculating, and talking to himself like a madman. Orchid regained self-control slowly, and, wrapping herself in the tattered fragments of her self-esteem as the tragedy-queen of a tenth-rate company in her tarnished cloak, said haughtily:——

"Am I to infer that I have been again an object of vivesection? Experiment seems to be your forte."

"This is the most terrific I have ever passed through," said Craighead, wiping his brow. "Thank God, you failed in the test!"

"Refusal to be bullied is not failure."

"It is so far as I am concerned. One tests a metal while the fire is hot. Twice I have tested you, and twice you have failed. In both cases my part has been an enforced and contemptible one; and I thank Heaven more for your sake than my own that you have failed."

Orchid's next remark was a surprise. "I don't know but that it is a good deal more comfortable to have these fireworks over once for all. Dodging sticks isn't pleasant. Suppose we change the subject."

Craighead seated himself. "Orchid," he said solemnly. "I feel like a toper who has signed the temperance pledge in a nightmare, and wakes to find himself reformed, and his whiskey-soaked rags turned to fringe and spangles. I could walk a tight-rope down the length of Commonwealth Avenue!" This being the only known effort on Van's part to be humorous, it is worthy of record.

But Orchid did not smile or reply. She was staring moodily into the fire. "Shall I tell you something?" she said, after a pause.

"If you please."

"You are not half so worldly and high-minded as you think. The whole matter with you is that you love your wife! I knew it at Ponkatuck last summer, though at that time you had no suspicion of the truth."

"Thanks! Now, shall I tell you something?"

"As you please."

"You are not half so worldy and recklessly romantic as you think. That letter which you showed me on the beach at Ponkatuck last summer was not the one you sent to Dexterville."

"Now how did you know that?" said Orchid.

"I suspected it from the first, but wasn't certain until to-night."

"I congratulate you on your new state of enlightment. The one I sent to Dexterville was far more flippant and didn't contain a word of love. The second was concocted for a special purpose.

"You are clever beyond belief."

"Would you like to see the first?"

"No. Burn it! Let us have done with all hypocrisies! Your better self is coming in on the home-stretch after this and I shall be the first to throw up my hat."

To be Continued.

BUSY KING EDWARD.

No Doubt Hard Work Caused Death of "Peacemaker."

The serious devotion of King Edward to his work is shown by a story which Lord Redesdale tells in his "Reminiscences" (Hutchinson).

"One night," says his lordship, "I was dining at the club, after King Edward had come to the throne, but before he had moved from Marlborough House into Buckingham Palace. He knew that I was in London for two or three days alone, so he sent over to ask whether I was at the club, and if so to bid me go across to him. I found him in his private sitting-room, all alone, and we sat smoking and talking over old times for a couple of hours. Towards midnight he got up and said: 'Now I must bid you good night, for I must set to work'—pointing to a hugh pile of the familiar red boxes. 'Surely,' I said, 'Your Majesty is not going to tackle all that work to-night!' His answer was: 'Yes, I must! Besides, it is all so interesting'; and then he gave me one of his happy smiles and I left him. So interesting! That was the frame of mind in which he faced his work—he, the man who we are expected to believe could not be brought to attend to business!"

It might almost be said that King Edward killed himself with work. During the closing days of his life, ill as he was, he worked with his accustomed energy at Buckingham Palace, and "on the Wednesday," to quote Lord Redesdale, "when one of the permanent heads of the Civil Service was with him, he was seized with one of those terrible choking fits of coughing. When he got better his visitor ventured to remonstrate with him, and begged him to rest, and even to go to bed, but he ridiculed the idea and said, 'No, I shall not give in; I shall work to the end. Of what use is it to be alive if one cannot work?' That was how he fulfilled his declaration to the Privy Council on his accession, that 'so long as there was breath in his body he would work for the good and amelioration of his people.'"

The British Navy: may it ever sail on a sea of glory, wafted to victory by the gales of prosperity.

May the tar who loses one eye in war never see distress with the other.

Here's to the tar that sticks like pitch to his duty.

The British Army: firm in disaster, courageous in danger, and merciful in victory.

Every soldier a pleasant halt, and every rogue a long halter.

Honor and the sword: may they never be parted.

British arms and British hands to use them.

May the brow of the brave never want a laurel wreath.

May good leaders always have good followers.

His Hope.

On a hot afternoon a San Francisco attorney made a hurried effort to get a car. The day and the effort had made him, uncomfortably warm, and he missed his object, but not a minister whom he knew.

"This is hotter than hades," said the lawyer thoughtlessly, mopping his brow.

The minister looked directly into his eyes and replied earnestly, "I hope so."

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

8TH CONCESSION, SIDNEY

PRESENTATION TO TEACHER

The pupils of the school, 6 concession of Sidney, gave a very appropriate and interesting closing at the school on Wednesday afternoon. The school room presented a pleasing appearance with black-board drawings and other decorations.

The program consisting of patriotic songs, readings and recitations reflected much credit upon both scholars and teacher. At the close of the program the teacher, Miss Annie Fox, presented each scholar with a postcard picture of the school taken by herself, and in return was surprised by being presented with a beautiful hand-painted Nippon china dresser set, accompanied by the following address:

Dear Teacher,—We, the pupils of your school, S.S. No. 12, Sidney, wish to express our gratitude to you in some tangible way, for your untiring efforts on our behalf. We regret we have not always been as obedient as we should have been, but we hope to do better in the future. We are pleased to have you remain with us for another term, and we ask you to accept this little gift as a token of our love and esteem for you. We join in wishing you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.—Signed on behalf of the school.

TRAINING THE FLEA.

How the Tiny Insect Is Weaned From His Jumping Habit.

"The teaching of the flea to do any sort of trick is, of course, a tedious, difficult matter," said a flea trainer. "The first thing to do is to break it of its natural habit of jumping.

"One can see how necessary this is when one considers the flea is less than one-eighth of an inch in length and has a jump of three feet—300 times its own length. If a six foot man had the same leaping power he could make leaps of 1,800 feet, so that when a flea has the advantage of one leap he is good as gone forever. My apparatus for jump breaking is a round glass ball. I confine him in this for three weeks. I look through this ball, touch it, flash lights into it, talk, do everything to let the flea accustom himself to my presence. At first he will jump and jump. He strikes against the curved walls and gets bruised. After a time, and I find three weeks to be ample, the flea gets to know me, and he also gets to know that it is less painful to crawl than to jump and get bruised.

"The flea cannot differentiate between transparent glass and no glass, so that when I take him from the ball he still strikes this peculiar obstruction and so he don't jump. So, you see, a flea must have some reasoning power somewhere, but I am in no position to say where it is located. That is why I have to pick fleas up with tweezers and put them on my arm when I want to feed them. They don't dare to jump on me."

How He Got Along.

An attorney living on the north side was arrested a few weeks ago charged with violating the motor speed law. When his case was called in city court the next day he asked that it be continued for a week. The arrest caused his wife considerable embarrassment, and she spent most of her morning conversations with the neighbors during the next few days in explaining just how it happened.

On the day of the trial one of the neighbors was sitting on the porch as the attorney returned home.

"Hello, Jack," said the neighbor. "How did you get along in the police court?"

"Fine!" yelled the attorney; then he whispered, "Twenty-five and costs."

Hard on the Salesgirl.

A lady was shopping and incidentally got into conversation with one of the salesgirls, boasting particularly about the cleverness of her little daughter at home. "You ought to be proud of her," said the girl, at the same time picking up a picture book. "Don't you want to take this home as a present for her?" "Thank you, I will," said the woman, taking the book and dropping it into her shopping bag. "Tillie will be so proud when I tell her you sent it." To the girl's dismay the shopper marched away with the book, and the girl had to pay for it.

WHO MAY OFFER ACCEPTABLE PRAYER

A Promise Limited Under Certain Conditions.

Promise of Text Limited—Many Deceived as to Their Standing—Present Conditions in Europe a Forceful Illustration — Delusions of the Past Still Held by Many—Fruits of the Holy Spirit—Fruits of the Satanic Spirit—Church Called to Be Priests and Kings—New Creatures to Be Guided Only by the Will of God—Thus They Abide in Christ.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9.—Pastor Russell gave one of his peculiarly interesting addresses here today. His text was, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." (John 15:7.) He said in part:

This is a very remarkable promise, and is limited to certain people under certain conditions. It does not say that anybody may ask what he will. The class that may so ask are those who abide in Christ. Before anyone can abide in Christ, he must come into Christ. No one can be said to abide in Him who has not come into Him as a member of His Body, the Church. More and more the Lord's people are learning that a solemn transaction takes place when one becomes a member of Christ. To say, "I have companied with Christian people for several years, and I go to church every Sunday," would not constitute one's being in Christ, nor would simply saying, "I joined this or that denomination when a child" or at any later age. None of these steps would necessarily bring one into Christ.

When we look over into Europe and see present conditions there, we have an illustration of what it is to be merely a church member. We see that, in centuries past, people got a wrong idea into their minds—that the Church was to convert the world, so as to keep all mankind from going to eternal torment. This error was first held by the Roman Catholic Church, and was largely retained by the Protestants, who later came out from the Catholic Church, and to whom much of her errors adhered. It is very difficult to get entirely out of error all at once.

Let us consider the facts. St. Augustine, one of the Church Fathers, was the one who especially advanced the theory that whoever died without having been baptized in water would go to eternal torment. His ideas were generally accepted, and as a result infant baptism was practised. The Bishops had gotten the thought that they had the right to make doctrines and creeds for the Church. Another wrong idea that had crept into the Church was the doctrine that whoever died outside of membership in the church organization would go to endless torture; but that church members would at death go to Purgatory for a longer or shorter time for purgation—a condition far better than that of a Hell of endless woe. As surely as anyone was baptised into the Church and buried in consecrated ground, so surely would he escape Hell and be safe in Purgatory.

This being the general thought, strenuous efforts were made by all church members to get all of their families and friends into the Church; for they did not care to have their loved ones go to eternal torment. Under the influence of this great error nearly everybody was drawn into the church organization, just as we see it over in Europe to-day.

Wrong Conceptions Are Injurious

All wish to be right. Nobody desires to be wrong. But in the increasing light of our day we perceive that our forefathers had become sadly confused respecting the true teachings of the Bible. However, we do not blame them; for the Scriptures place the responsibility for the confusion upon the Devil, who introduced "doctrines of demons" during the Dark Ages.—2 Corinthians 4:4; 1 Timothy 4:1; Matthew 13:37-41.

We all see what these warring nations that are supposed to be 95 per cent. Christian are doing. Each side is jealous of the prosperity of the other. Yet both sides claim to be almost all Christian. The Italians, however, claim to be 100 per cent. Christian. Everybody in Italy is a Christian. But, judging by the conduct of some of the Italians whom we see here in America, who would know that they are all Christians.

This wrong conception, this telling people that they are Christians when they are not Christians, this telling them that they are in the Church of Christ when they are not, surely leads to hypocrisy. The churches that have promulgated these wrong theories do not like to tell the people the truth, that they are not in the Church of Christ, that no one can get into the true Church except in the way that our Lord Jesus Himself directed. Indeed, they are all confused. We remember that the Apostle Paul says, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." (Romans 8:9.) Our Lord Jesus declares, "By their fruits ye shall know them." (Matthew 7:20.) Look at the fruits in Great Britain, in Germany, in France, in Italy, in Austria! Do we see the fruits of the Spirit of Christ there?

Christ's Spirit vs. Satan's Spirit.

What are the fruits of the Spirit of Christ? Hear St. Paul: "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self-control." (Galatians 5:22,23.) Hear also St. Peter: "Giving all diligence, add to your faith fortitude, and to fortitude knowledge, and to knowledge self-control, and to self-control patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly-kindness, and to brotherly-kindness love." (2 Peter 1:5-8.) We see very little of these fruits in Europe to-day—only in a few of God's true saints. The great majority of the people do not manifest them. We believe that in all nations there are true saints of God, yet as a whole no nation is saintly.

The Apostle Paul also tells us the characteristics of the opposite spirit. He says, "The works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, envy, murder," etc. He did not add bomb-throwing, asphyxiation by poisonous gases, and other modern devices for killing and mangling our fellowmen; but all this is included with murder and other devilishness. (Galatians 5:19-21.) No savages ever fought more viciously than do these people who are deceived into thinking that they are Christians. They are not Christians at all. If ever we have had that idea, the sooner we get it out of our heads the better. The Bible is entirely contrary to all that they are doing.

The Body of Christ a Company.

Our text presupposes that those addressed have come into Christ. The appropriate question is, How may we be sure that we have come into Christ? One might have much knowledge of Present Truth and yet not be a member of the Body of Christ. This Body of Christ is composed of saints, those who are really following Jesus in the narrow way. It is a company, a body, in the same sense that Congress is a body. There are many members in the Body of Congress all of whom are under a head. So with the Church. The Body of Christ, the Church, is composed of many members, over whom God has appointed a Head.

The Head of the Church is our Lord Jesus Christ. (Ephesians 1:22, 23.) He came first; and since then His members have been gradually united to Him throughout this Age. The Body of Christ is now almost completed. The Heavenly Father has done the calling and the electing of this class. But each individual who is called must make his own calling and election sure. The word Christ means Anointed. Long before the foundation of the world God had purposed the Christ—Jesus the Head and the Church the Body. The Apostle tells us that even our Lord Jesus took not this honor unto Himself, but that He was called of God.—Hebrews 5:4-6.

King David was called of God to an earthly kingship. He was a type of Christ. There was also an earthly priest, Aaron, anointed of God. He was a type of Christ as a sacrificing Priest. God has appointed Christ to a still higher Kingship and a still higher Priesthood. In His glorified and exalted condition He is "a Priest after the Order of Melchizedek." This Melchizedek was a grand character who lived in Abraham's day. He was king and priest at the same time. Long, long ago God appointed Jesus to be the Head of the Priesthood that was typified by Melchizedek.—Psalm 110:4; Hebrews 7:11-17.

When Jesus presented Himself in consecration to God at Jordan and was there begotten of the Holy Spirit, it was for Him to make His calling and election sure to the Headship of that Priesthood. He said, "I delight to do Thy will, O My God!" He gave His life to the doing of the Father's will. He finished His course grandly, faithfully. The Apostle, after telling us of our Lord's faithfulness even unto the death of the cross, says, "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name that is above every name." (Philippians 2:8-11.) Our Lord is now the great Prophet, Priest, and King, after the Order of Melchizedek.

Rigid Conditions of Membership.

According to the Master's own statement it was necessary that He be found faithful; otherwise He would have forfeited His life. Moreover, He was to be the Head of the Church, which is the Body of Christ. Of the Christ Body, the Apostle says that God, who foreknew Jesus, foreknew the Church also. He who foreknew Jesus as His Anointed, foreknew that there would be a Body of a limited number of members anointed in Him. That number is given in Revelation as 144,000. This we believe to be a literal number.

Each one of this class has been drawn of the Father through the Truth. God has called them in the sense that He has sent forth His Message speaking peace through Jesus Christ. If we have heard this Message and have responded to it, this constitutes our Call. Nobody has been forced. As that Message of Truth has come, some have been greatly attracted, others have been slightly attracted, and others have not been attracted at all. For 1900 years God has been passing the Magnet of Truth up and down the earth, to find that particular class which has been drawn and held by the Truth. Just as soon as that work is completed, another work will be inaugurated.

The Lord permits the storms of life to blow upon this class which now responds to God's Message. If these experiences blow any individual of that class off from the Magnet, he is not of the kind for whom God is now looking. He is looking for those who will stick to the Truth despite any pressure that may be brought against them. He permits trials and difficulties for the developing and proving of those who have responded to the Call. These testings will blow off all who do not love the Lord and His service above all things else. He purposes to separate those who are of this true character from all others. He seeks those who are loyal of heart, and only those.

God Himself is the One who has the attraction. It is not that we first loved Him, but that He first loved us. (1 John 4:19.) It is the Love of God, the Love of Christ, that binds us to this Magnet. God's wonderful Wisdom, Love, Mercy, and Power have indeed been a Magnet to our souls. The more we know Him, the more are we attracted to Him. There is something about the Divine character that is so wonderful that nothing else can compare with it. We are glad to leave all things else for His sake.

New Creatures in Christ.

We hear God's Message, speaking peace through Christ, telling us that we may have forgiveness of sins, telling us that God is now selecting a special class of people from the world for the purpose of blessing all the families of the earth. This is the Message that reaches our hearts. Then we take the Apostle's advice, and present our body a living sacrifice, our reasonable service. (Romans 12:1.) No one has come into the family of God who has not done this. No one has become a member of the Church of Christ until he has taken this step.

Our Lord Jesus thus presented Himself to God. He said, "I came not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." In one respect, however, there was a difference in His case. He was holy, perfect; therefore He needed no Advocate with the Father. But the members of His Body need the imputation of His merit to cover the blemishes which they have by nature. His merit is like a covering robe. So we have an Advocate with the Father, and it is His advocacy which makes us acceptable to God. Thus we become united to Christ as joint-sacrificers with Himself.

As we are received, God gives us the begetting of the Holy Spirit. This constitutes us New Creatures. Just as an earthly begetting starts an earthly being, so this spirit-begetting starts us as spirit beings. Thenceforth the flesh is of the human nature, a child of Adam, and the New Creature is the germ of a spirit being, begotten in the fleshly body. This new nature is to grow and develop until finally it is brought to the birth, in the First Resurrection.

God's Will Their Delight.

It is not that our flesh is different or that our brains are different from what they were before; but that with this new mind and this new will our purposes and our aspirations are entirely different. We are to be members of the Body of Christ and are to follow the will of our Head in every particular. And so during all the days of our life thenceforth, we should be thinking, "What is the Lord's will concerning me?"

Those who become New Creatures in Christ are no longer to follow their own wills. Whether they eat or drink or whatsoever they do, they are to do all to the glory of God. The New Creature is to be guided by the will of the Lord and not by his own inclinations. But he is not to remain a babe. A babe cannot understand at first what its parents are saying to it; but a healthy babe will grow and learn very quickly. If you watch a little babe, you will observe that it looks at its parents to see whether it may or may not do a certain thing. So the child of God should always be looking to see what our Father wishes him to do. Thus we become dear children, as the Apostle says, children whom God especially loves.

Now, then, we have before our minds the class of whom our Lord speaks in our text. Those who abide in Him are those who have been begotten of the Spirit, and who are walking in the narrow way. These constitute the Church of the living God, Jesus being their Head, their Forerunner, and their Redeemer.

Conditions of Abiding in Christ.

"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," is the Master's promise to His faithful followers. We abide in Him by continuing as we began. The Apostle says: "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice." This applies to us not only when we began our Christian course, but every day until the end. We have suggested that every morning we make a fresh presentation of ourselves to the Lord, not as making a new sacrifice, but as confirming the one already made, saying in effect, "My little offering is still here; and I am hoping that it may be used of Thee to-day in some manner, that I may have some opportunity of laying down my life for the brethren and for the Truth, that I may glorify Thee."

This is the way to abide in Him—by keeping our contract. Daily we are to grow in knowledge, that we may continually have better opportunity to make something out of the day. Each day, perhaps, there are fresh privileges of sacrifice.

If we would have the Master's words abiding in us, we must study the Bible. This is the only way to know what God has said to us. The Lord calls the Bible a Storehouse. The Master represents Himself as the great Chef and Servant of God's Household, who "brings forth things new and old." God provides for His own more and more information on what relates to His purposes, the fulfilment of prophecies, etc. As time goes by, we are getting a better understanding of the Bible, since the day when we said from the heart, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

Dear brethren, let us first make sure that we are in Christ. Then let us abide in Him; let us never even think of getting out of relationship to Him. Study the Word, to know what He has promised and what He has not promised. Use all the privileges which God has granted to His saints. Whoever faithfuly does this may ask what he will and rest assured that he will receive it. But those who are thus abiding in Him will ask chiefly for spiritual blessings. They will ask continually for the Holy Spirit; for the Word declares that the Father is pleased to have His children ask for this gift. (Luke 11:13.) This holy influence will enable us to develop the fruits of the Holy Spirit—meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love. Thus let us daily grow in His love and grace.

The output from the Dominion Coal Company's collieries for 1915 exceeds that of the previous year by a substantial margin. Production at the collieries in Cape Breton totalled 4,600,000 tons for the year. This with 400,000 tons from the Springhill Mines makes a grand total of five million for 1915 produced by this company.

A TEST OF LOVE

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Lord Archibald Gray was fond of hunting, riding—indeed, all out of door exercises. Being a nobleman and a fine fellow besides, he was a pet of the petticoats. A match had been made for him by his father, the Duke of Fordham, with Lady Geraldine Stanhope, the daughter of a duke. Lord Archibald was well satisfied with Lady Geraldine and seemed to be fond of her alone till Amy Cuthbert, the daughter of an American banker, came along, and from that time no one could tell whether Lord Archibald would marry Lady Geraldine or Amy.

The Cuthberts were very rich and rented a manor house in the neighborhood where Lord Archibald and Lady Geraldine lived. This made a steady thing of the rivalry between the two girls, not that a rivalry was apparent, for what each girl felt no one knew except herself.

For one who had not a noble ancestry Miss Cuthbert was remarkably well bred. Indeed, by some she was considered more of a high stepper than her rival. She had more money than Lady Geraldine, but this was her only advantage. The truth is it was an even thing between the two girls, and it was generally believed that Lord Archibald, provided he had his choice, would marry the one he loved.

Autumn came on and with it hunting. Everybody among the aristocracy round about hunted, and parties were made up for the purpose. One afternoon a number of persons set out, mounted, Lord Archibald and his two favorites being of the party. Lady Geraldine was high minded enough to show no unfriendliness to Miss Cuthbert, and on the surface at least they were good friends.

On this afternoon the party became scattered into little groups, in some cases individuals. Lord Archibald was riding in a wood when suddenly, emerging from it, he saw Lady Geraldine and Miss Cuthbert riding together on the bank of a stream. A horn sounded on the other side, and the two girls turned to cross the stream at a shallow place.

"My God," he exclaimed; "if they cross there they'll get into the quicksand!"

He cried out with all his voice, but it was drowned by the barking of a pack of dogs. Putting spurs to his horse, he dashed down a declivity toward those who were going into danger. Having descended from the bank, they passed over a stony bottom to the verge of the stream, and their horses' hoofs began to splash the water, neither riding ahead, but side by side. Then it was noticeable that the animals were having difficulty in withdrawing their feet from the muddy bottom.

Lord Archibald goaded his horse so fiercely that in jumping over an inequality in the ground he fell and sent his rider sprawling ahead of him. The man was not hurt, but arose with an exclamation of impatience and attempted to get his horse on his feet. He failed; the horse had broken a leg. Turning to look at the girls, Archibald saw their horses floundering in the water, both animals having sunk up to their bellies. Looking once more despairingly at his own horse and realizing the impossibility of using him, Archibald ran as fast as his legs would carry him toward the girls. When he reached them the bodies of both horses were nearly covered, leaving only the shoulders above the surface.

Archibald was alone. He had nothing with which to extricate the sinking girls, and if he entered upon the quicksand he would not save them, but add a third victim. He saw one chance—a tree growing on the bank inclined over the stream, and a branch extended straight out over the point where the girls were floundering. By climbing out on the branch it might be possible to help them, though it seemed too high to enable him to do so.

Gray jumped, caught a lower branch, pulled himself up into the tree, then began to crawl out on the limb. As he proceeded his weight bent it lower, and by the time he came to the point over which the girls were sinking, by winding his legs around the branch and holding on to it with one hand, he was within reach of both Lady Geraldine and Miss Cuthbert.

By this time several persons appeared on the opposite bank and stood looking anxiously on this harrowing scene. When Archibald was in position to render assistance it was a question which girl he would first try to save. Even if he reached one of them so deeply embedded was she that it would be difficult to draw her out. It was evident that only one, if any, could be saved. All watched to see which it would be. Both girls' faces were turned up to him eagerly, imploringly. Archibald hesitated, but only for a moment. Then he extended his hand to Lady Geraldine.

It fell short, but by rocking the branch, she extending her hand, he was enabled to grasp it.

He had scarcely done so when a rope was thrown from the shore and fell between Miss Cuthbert and her horse's head. A countryman had [illegible] from his house [illegible] riding to quicksand and, seizing a rope, had run toward them. Both girls were drawn out by means of the rope.

There was no doubt as to which of the two favorites Lord Archibald loved. He married Lady Geraldine. Miss Cuthbert went back home and married one of her own countrymen.

The True Enthusiast.

"Does your motorcar give you much trouble?"

"Trouble!" exclaimed Mr. Chuggins enthusiastically. "I should say it did! Why, repairing that car when it gets out of order is about the only real fun I get out of life."

The great fire of London in 1666 started in a house on Pudding lane and ended at Piecrust alley. Thirteen thousand two hundred houses were burned, including eighty-nine churches.

HOCKEY.

Canadian Winter Game Arouses Excitement of Seattle Scribe.

Hockey as played in Canada is still a strange foreign game in the American Pacific States.

Under huge captions, "With Sticks and Razor-bladed Skates as Weapons, Hockey Players Have Bloody Game in Seattle," a Seattle exchange refers to the first hockey match in the Sound City as follows:

"If you have been fostering the impression that American football is a rough sport, see a game of Canadian hockey and cast the idea from you. There is about as much comparison between the two as the gait of a funeral car and a jitney going up Pike street.

"Just up the street from the Arena a few blocks is the Seattle General Hospital. It certainly is going to be handy for the players.

"The game is new to Seattle, and last night's play brought the 3,500 spectators to their feet. The hardest part to understand is how they play it and live.

"Armed with sticks and razor-bladed skates, the players use their weapons in a thrillingly careless manner. Roughing in football is mild compared to roughing in hockey.

"If you accidentally take a swing at the puck and hit a man's head, why it's all right. The man's head didn't have any business there. If, in trying for the puck, a man is sent flying into the side fence, no one worries. The man should have been out of the way.

"Sticks are favorite weapons for close-in work, and short, quick jabs that no one can see. For long-distance attack the puck is provided. The puck, a hard rubber disc, is driven like a bullet across the ice.

"Personally, we would just as soon slap a cannon ball in the face as get in front of that puck when it is driven at the net.

"Two men called goaltenders are offered up in sacrifice to the game. They are stationed at the mouths of the two goal nets, and their principal object in life is to allow the puck to hit them.

"You can get more shivers out of a game of hockey than you can out of a chill.

"The casualties of the evening were:—Holmes, cut in lip, two stitches; Walker, bruised instep; Wilson, cut face. One unnamed spectator seated in the seats along the wall, eye cut by puck. The injuries were not serious. Dr. Kelton, the club physician, attended the wounded."

CANADIAN LIBRARIES.

Some Fine Collections of Books Now Exist in the Dominion.

The public libraries of the various provinces of Canada have grown rapidly in importance and activity, assisted by Government and municipal grants. The library laws of the Dominion are embodied in a series of acts dating from 1854, a noticeable feature being the close association between schools and libraries, while there is also an important extension of libraries to the rural districts. Ontario has a very large and widespread library system, the latest statistics available showing 131 free libraries with 775,976 volumes, and 243 not free with 502,879 volumes. The most important other libraries in the province are: Queen's University, Kingston, 40,000 vols.; Library of Parliament, Ottawa, about 250,000 vols.; Legislative Library, Toronto, 100,000 vols; the Public (municipal) Library of Toronto, over 150,000 vols. In the province of Quebec, in addition to the state-aided libraries, there are several large and important libraries, among which may be mentioned the Fraser Institute, Montreal, 40,000 vols.; McGill University, Montreal, 125,000 vols.; Seminary of St. Sulpice, Montreal, about 80,000 vols.; Laval University, Quebec, 125,000 vols., and the library of the Legislature, Quebec, 100,000 vols., besides parochial or local libraries. In Nova Scotia there were several hundred cases of books circulating among the school libraries, containing about 40,000 volumes. The school law of New Brunswick provides for grants being made in aid of school libraries by the Board of Education equal to one half the amount raised by a district. In the western provinces several large public, Government, and college libraries have been formed, but they are not as old and important as those in the eastern provinces.

Exports of war materials from the United States now average more than $1,000,000 per day according to statistics compiled by the foreign trade department of the National City Bank.

The war is now costing the Allies $55,000,000 per day.

IN and ABOUT THE CITY

OLD RESIDENT SERIOUSLY ILL

Joseph Skimmerhorn, an old boarder at the Windsor House, was taken to the hospital suffering with a weak heart and from a general breakdown, due to old age.

REMAINS OF THE LATE LIONEL PARKER

The remains of the late Lonel Parker have been shipped from Porto Rico and will be met in New York by Mr. Harry Parker, of Minneapolis, who will accompany the body to Belleville and have same placed in the vault until spring.

FIRE AT TRENTON

Yesterday morning the stock shed in connection with the cooperage mill at Trenton, was destroyed by fire. The building, which was of frame and contained a considerable amount of stock, made excellent fuel for the devouring element. The loss of stock and building amounted to several hundrede dollars, which was partially covered by insurance.

POULTRY SHOW

There was a goodly number of spectators yesterday and last evening at the poultry show, which is being held in the market building, and the comments at the exhibit made were most favorable. The two judges had no easy task in making their awards owing to the fact that in the various clesses there were many entries and the birds shown were excellent. The exhibit of guinea pigs made by Mr. C. J. Symons of this city, is quite extensive and attracted much attention. The exhibit of pigeons of varied breed is large and some fine specimens are to be seen. The show will remain open until 10 o'clock to-night.

DIES IN NEW YORK

PICTON, Jan. 10.—The death occurred at her home in Flathbush, N. Y., on December 30th of Ellen Elizabeth Gibson, wife of W. A. Cooper. Mrs. Cooper was the daughter of the late Capt. John Gibson, of Picton. She had been a resident of New York for some years. She was only ill for a few days from pneumonia. News of her death reached Picton on New Year's Eve. She leaves to mourn her loss beside her husband, one son, William, in the steel business in New York, and two daughters at home. The Misses Gibson, Paul street, are sisters of the deceased.

THE LATE WILLIAM H. DAVIS

TWEED, Jan. 11.—On Dec. 31st the funeral of William H. Davis took place from his home to the Tweed cemetery. Mr. Davis was well-known and much esteemed by a large circle of acquaintances. His illness was long continued, and of a very painful character, and was borne with great patience and Christian fortitude. Towards the end his strength rapidly declined, and he passed peacefully away in the early morning of Wednesday, December 29th. His daughter, Mrs. Corbett, arrived from the United States a few days before he died, and was able to render valuable skilled assistance in ministering to her father, and in alloviating his suffering.

Within the Military Circle

COL. ADAMS

The Popular Commander of The 155th Battalion

BELLEVILLE

Lieut. Col. Brown, Staff Officer, of Kingston, is in town to-day inspecting the 80th and 155th Battalions.

A school of infantry for N.C.O's will be established in Belleville for the 155th Battalion.

A considerable number of soldiers of the 80th Battalion were recently transferred from the local companies to D. Co., stationed at Picton.

Sergt.-Instructor Dow has been attached to the 155th Battalion for instructional duty. Sergt. Dow is one of the best instructors in the country.

Sergt. Richardson, of the 80th Battalion, has been transferred to the 155th Battalion. Sergt. Matthews of the 80th Battalion has also been transferred to the 155th Battalion.

Col. Adams, C. O. of the 155th, Battalion, is in receipt of a letter from the Headquarters Staff, Kingston, complimenting him and his officers on the successful way in which he has carried on recruiting in this district.

About 200 letters are answered, filed and registered daily at the Divisional headquarters in the Armouries. These letters also have to go through the hands of the O. C. of the Division. This means that the officers and staff are required to work overtime, every night from eight to ten o'clock.

Word has just been received from the Parliamentary Recruiting Office in London, that some public spirited citizen has offered to pay the conveyance on 500 recruiting posters entitled "The Sword of Justice," and which are now on their way to Mr. Sharpe. They will be turned over to the use of the battalion.

Lieut. Stares, bandmaster of the 80th Battalion was formerly bandmaster of the 91st Highlanders of the City of Hamilton, director of Christ church choir, and vocal instructor in the public schools of Hamilton. He is the only bandmaster in Canada holding the degree of Mus Bach. from Toronto University. Mr. Stares has a most pleasing personality, and has a passion for music.

Col. Adams of the 155th Battalion, is in receipt of a number of recruiting posters from England. The posters are well gotten up and are very attractive.

80TH BATTALION ORDERS

Officer for to-day—Lt. L. C. McColl, to-morrow: Lt. H. L. Birkett.

Sergeant for to-day—Cpl. Webster; for to-morrow: Cpl. Dunlop, A. Co.

Corporal for to-day—Cpl. Coon, A. Co.; to-morrow: Cpl. Grant, A. Co.

To decide which group is entitled to a splendid silver shield presented to the companies of the 80th here, by the Military Y.M.C.A., a six weeks' baseball schedule has been arranged. Games are on Wednesday and Thursday night in the Armouries at 7.15 P. M., and promise to provide some good sport. Four teams are entered. One each from A Company, B Company, and the Brass Band, and a fourth team from the remainder of the men quartered here, Signallers, Base Company, Machine Gun Section and Bugle Band. The Brass Band plays the combined team to-night. Mr. Sharpe of the Military Y.M.C.A., spent Tuesday in Picton, where he had arranged for a very interesting evening for the men in the Khaki Club. The rooms, formerly used as a business college in Picton, serve as a Khaki Club, and have been amply provided with reading material. The Y.M.C.A. has kept them supplied with writing material and arranges for a concert every two weeks.

KINGSTON

The 146th of Kingston are advertising for recruits.

The cap and color badges of the 146th are in the city, and are being distributed. Lieut.-Col. Low does not believe in waiting for any good thing, nor does he believe in keeping his battalion waiting. His motto is: "Get right up on your toes and sprint." The new badge is a thing of beauty, without any unnecessary ornamentation.

Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown, General Staff Officer, is endeavoring to establish qualifying schools for N.C.O.'s at the headquarters of each of the different battalions in the division. Owing to the scarcity of competent instructors, the officers of the units will take their best men and these will be visited occassionally by instructors of the staff, who will supervise.

A School of Infantry for N.C.O.'s will be established at Brockville and another will be established at Alexandria in the immediate future, authorization having been obtained by Lieut.-Col. W. J. Brown, C.S.O.

A story is being told of the efficiency of the guards on duty at the Locomotive Works. A. W. Wheatley, general manager, was walking through the plant a few days ago when he was stopped by the guard. The conversation was reported as follows:

Guard—"Halt Who Goes there?"
Mr. Wheatley—"The manager."
Guard —"Sorry sir, but you can't knock around here."

Two signs decorate several of the offices in the garrison, the wording of the signs being: "Sit down, but don't intern," and "What-You, here again. Another half hour gone to h—."

Two more local clerymen have donned the uniform and are busy learning their drill and training every day. The latest additions are Mr. Rice of the First Congregational church and Mr. Whalley of St. George's' Cathedral. The khaki color must be contagious.

A school of signalling will open in the city on Monday next under the direction of Lt.-Col. Mundell, Divisional signalling officer. About 120 men from different parts of the Division will attend. They will be quartered in the north-east section of artillery park dormitories.

The School of Military Cookery will cook for the signalling school.

The School of Cookery also opens on Monday next at artillery park and about 20 men will be in attendance for the course.

A larger instructional staff is absolutely necessary for the work of the P.S.I., which is increasing with every course. Lt.-Col. Barrager and Captain Wotherspoon are overloaded with work, and a few more instructors will make the work lighter for all.

KINGSTON, Jan. 12.—(Special.)—Lieut. D. C. Dick of the 14th Cobourg Battery, and at present attached to C. Battery, R.C.H.A., has been appointed Adjutant of the 9th Artillery brigade, C.E.F.

NEW MILITARY SCHOOLS

KINGSTON, Jan. 12.—(Special.)—A school for signaling for the 3rd Divisional Area is to be opened in Kingston next Monday in charge of Capt. Frank Lea of the 109th Battalion and Capt. Munsie of the 146th. Schools of infantry for non-commissioned officers are to be established at Brockville and Alexandria.

Seven Belleville Nurses for Egypt

No less than seven nurses will leave Belleville within a short time for Cairo Egypt, to take their part in hospital work in that part of the British Empire. They are, Misses M. H. Crosior, W. Smith, M. Caldwell, T. Howard, H. Marten, S. Jenkins and G. Waters. They will be designated as Lieuts. and will be under the supervision of Mrs. Robertson, who is designated as Captain. It is confidently expected that they will leave the Canadian shore in company with many more nurses who have volunteered for overseas service. The clothing and equipment necessary will cost upwards of $200 and of this amount $150 is provided by the Dominion Government. The young ladies in question have all passed their necessary examinations and all are willing to do their part in the duties which will be allotted to them.

Use Cocoanut Oil For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff, and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

Great Spy System In Saloniki Port

PARIS, Jan. 12.—Numerous extracts from documents seized at Saloniki when the Consuls of the Teutonic allies were arrested there recently were printed in this morning's newspapers. Among the papers, according to the published statement, were copies of daily reports telegraphed to Vienna by the Austrian Consul-General, giving the numbers and description of allied troops that were landing at Saloniki, reports of spies on the movements of allied forces into the interior and records of payments to these spies and to local newspapers.

The system of espionage, the accounts state, was also extended to Greece, and among the published papers there are what purpost to be copies of reports made by agents at Greek military centres and by port functonaries. "A good friend of Germany and can be trusted," is a sentence printed as being taken from one of the reports made regarding a certain Prefect, while a certain officer was classed as "doubtful."

One secret agent is declared to have written on December 30 that Greek troops, which were supposed to be leaving the city, marched out on one side and came back on the other. Herr Hollehmer, is represented as reporting that he was endeavoring to establish communication by spies with Monastir.

SPORTING NEWS

HOCKEY

Ben Whitty, the speedy defense player who put up such a splendid game on Monday night in spite of the fact that he was sick with La Grippe, is now reported as being ill with pneumonia and it is very doubtful if he will be able to play to-morrow night.

LATER

Lieut. Ben. Whitty is out of the hospital again, and it is hoped he will be able to play to-morrow night.

Bill Symons, the husky Belleville defence man, is a Brockville boy of ripe experience down around Smith Falls and Brockville. He weighs 185 pounds, and in spite of his weight is one of the cleanest defence players in the East. He is the Mummery of the Eastern intermediate clubs, but he cuts out the rough stuff.—Toronto Star.

The first junior game in this city will be played on Friday, January 21, when Lindsay Juniors will play their return game. Campbellford dropping out of the group made it a long time between games here.

THE INTERMEDIATES

Another change or two is due in the line-up of the local intermediate team for to-morrow night's game. The shake-up just before the Queen's-Belleville clash had a good effect, and these further changes are expected to do the trick against Picton.

It is very seldom indeed that a team goes through the season with the same line-up as it starts out with early in the winter. Some player who was not at first considered fast enough to make the team comes on and develops into a speed merchant and becomes a fixture on the team.

Again there are times when in the beginning of the season there are players who cannot, for one reason or another, even try to make the team, while a little later in the season, they are free to offer their services to the home team. That players are changed about is one of the surest signs that the management is not satisfied with the showing the team is making and believe that it is possible to improve. Every player and substitute should strive to earn a place on the team, and when a player makes the Belleville intermediates he may feel sure that he has earned the right to be there and is not being used through any personal friendship.

The Belleville defense remained the same in the Queen's game as it was against Picton, while Finkle replaced Hough as rover and Mullen took Morrison's place on right wing. In all probability the same sturdy defense will play again to-morrow night, in case Whitty is able to play, although there may be some change made in the forward line.

Finkle has undoubtedly earned his position through the spectacular and effective work he did last Monday. The other boys all played well, but it makes little difference how good a man may play, if another man plays better he gets the position.

LINDSAY JUNIORS WIN AGAIN

Peterboro, Jan. 12.—(Special.—Lindsay juniors won a 6 to 2 victory against the Electrics here to-night after leading at the first period by 3 to 0 and the second period by 5 to 2. The visitors had a big advantage in weight, and they secured a lead in the first period before the locals found themselves. Carew was the most dashing and effective player for Lindsay. The Petes" work was featured by the performance of Graham, who, although small of stature, played a fearless and effective game throughout for Electrics. The teams:—

Lindsay—Goal, Mtchell; defence, Hough and Scott; rover, Read; centre, Wells; wings, Griffis and Carew.

Peterboro'—Goal, Montgomery; defence, Legros and Lowes; rover, Graham; centre, Cherrett; wings, Hamilton and Rose.

Referee—Lou Marsh, Toronto.

THE MAT

NEW YORK, Jan. 12—Frank Gotch, the world's champion wrestler, has been offered $15,000 to come to New York and wrestle Joe Stecher, the sensational farmer boy, for the world's catch-as-catch-can championship. Stecher is to-day considered the wonder of the wrestling world, and his followers are willing to wager any part of $10,000 that he can defeat Gotch.

Gotch announced some weeks ago that he was willing to meet Stecher for the title, and friends of his in the West say he has been training secretly for the past two months.

Stetcher has already signed up for a series of matches in the East with Jack Curley and Harry Pollock, and yesterday they wired Gotch, offering him the $15,000 to take Stecher on in New York. The young marvel expects to visit this city within a few weeks to fulful his engagements.

THE RING

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—Battling Levinsky, of New York, was awarded a decision over Tom Cowler, of England, protege of Jim Corbett, after twelve rounds of hard fighting last night. The margin of difference was a small one. Cowler floored his opponent for a count of nine earily in the battle, and was aggressive most of the time, but Levinsky's shiftness enabled him to score frequently.

Big Medical Fees.

Half a dozen doctors are now being paid £5,000 a year by the Admiralty. Private practice is not forbidden, but duties.

On one occasion the late King Edward asked one of his medical attendants what a first-rate medical man would make, and was told that £15,000 a year would hit the mark. But the King's informant added that a big barrister would beat that by £10,000.

It is on record that for a journey to Petrograd to vaccinate the Empress Catherine II., the great Dr. Dimsdale received £10,000, an annuity of £500, and a Russian title. And much more recently, the Czar paid £15,000 to a Moscow doctor for two days' attendance.

But the biggest medical fee on record was paid to Dr. Gale, the blind medical electrician, for a few weeks' successful treatment of a millionaire's leg. He got £50,000.

The Military Cross.

The Military Cross, designed expressly for the present war, is of silver and is 1⅝in. square. The Imperial Crown is borne on each of the four arms, and His Majesty's ciphe appears in the centre on a small raised cross surmounting the large: one The decoration is a most effective one, different from any other in use and most creditable to its designer, Mr. H. F. Burke, C.V.O., C.B., F.S.A. Norroy King of Arms.

It is suspended from a ribbon 1¾ inches wide, having a central band of dark purple with white on either side, and is intended for captains, commissioned officers of a lower grade, or warrant officers in the British Army or Indian or Colonial military forces. As in the case of other decorations, many of these crosses have been awarded for life-saving under the enemy's fire.

Leyland Liner Is Torpedoed

The New Boat Carried Million Dollar Cargo

SUNK NEAR THE LUSITANIA

Latest Victim Is Towed Into Port After Submarine Attack—Cargo Mostly Cotton

(Canadian Press Special)

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—The now Leyland liner Huronian, from Galveston, was torpedoed on December 29 off the Irish coast, according to reports current in shipping circles today. The International Mercantile Marine said that they had received a cablegram stating that the Huronian had met with injury and had been towed into port, but the message did not state what had caused the damage.

The Huronian sailed from Galveston, bound for Liverpool, on December 12. She was reported to have encountered a submarine not far from the spot where the Lusitania and Arabic were sunk. The ship was built in 1915 in Glasgow. She was 475 feet long and her registered gross tonnage is 8,766.

The Huronian carries a cargo consisting chiefly of cotton, corn and wheat, valued at over $1,000,000, according to her published manifests.

French Occupy Island of Corfu

LONDON, Jan. 12.—A French detachment has been landed on the Greek Island of Corfu for provisional occupation, according to an Athens despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company. Fourteen ships of unknown nationality are cruising around Corfu.

A Rome despatch to the Stefani Bureau says that Corfu advices report that a French warship landed a detachment of troops on Tuesday evening in order to prepare for the arrival of Serbian troops.

A previous despatch stated that the Kaiser's home on the Island of Corfu had been seized and would be used as an allied hospital.

DURANT TO FIGHT FORD

Munitions Man to Enter Cheap-Price Car Field

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 13.—Two wizards of the automobile world are at swords points and before their battle is finished it is estimated that millions of dollars will be expended in competition.

Henry Ford and Walter C. Durant are the principles in a gigantic struggle that will stagger the financial and commercial world. This was the statement made Tues. by men close to both magnates. The lines of the first skirmish are just being formed, but when the battle is on in earnest, its limits will reach to the national capital and will become international in scope.

The two men hold exactly opposite views on international affairs. Ford opposes war, and all plans for war, while the Dupont Powder interests, are said to be behind Durant in a wide-reaching plan to monopolize the trade in munition supplies.

It is asserted that Durant is about to place upon the market a car that will complete with the Ford. It is to be produced by the General Motors organization.

NEW SOCIETY COMING OUT OF GREAT WAR

Constructive Socialism to be One of Struggles Products—Religion's Fresh Impetus

(By C. F. Bertelli)

Headquarters of the Franco-Belgian Army to Flanders, Jan. 12.—Political theories, in fact abstract ideas, have no official existence among this nation in arms, but in the course of my tour of the front I have had many opportunities of ascertaining that, confronted hourly by death and the grim business of killing for national protection, these millions of citizens soldiers have undergone a gradual transformation in their idealistic convictions.

This wonderful change is of far-reaching importance for the future French national life. Generally speaking, advanced Socialistic ideas have been badly hit by the war's trials.

Catholicism's Big Strides

On the other hand, Roman Catholicism, which previous to the war was almost a dead letter in France, has made wonderful strides. The same must be said of other religions, though the change in this case is of minimum importance apart from the tendency which it illustrates of worshippers outside of the Catholic pale.

Such are the absolute facts sustained by all the evidence of my tour. They are confirmed and supplemented, not only by priests and Catholic officers, but also by officers of the fighting force, and intellectual soldiers, serving in the ranks who cannot be suspected of bias.

Marxians No More

Before the war these men, who could be counted by the hundred thousands, were the strongest supporters in Europe of the Marxian policy of no international frontiers and promotion of the brotherhood of nations. They were prepared to lead Europe in an anti-war strike on the eve of any conflict.

But actual experience has convinced them that their plan, however, desirable theoretically, is unworkable Brought face to face with the stern necessity of defending their own homes and families against Huns, and later brought into immediate contact with the horrors of invasion, they realize, overwhelmingly, that their Utopia was a mere fantastic dream.

Such was the description of their conversion to patriotism supplied to me near the battle line by one of their most prominent leaders, whose name I am not permitted to give because of the official annoymity of the army.

"This man, who began the war as a private," his Colonel told me, "is now an officer of such keenness and efficiency that I have attached him to my personal staff. Although his life has been spent in combating armament, he has distinguished himself so often for acts of exemplary courage that he has won the military medal and the war cross.

Difficult Story After War

"I asked him the other day what he thought of his old theories.

"They were only theories,' he replied, "and after the war the majority of those who shared my views will have a very different story to tell.'"

The general opinion prevailing among thinkers at the front is that the war, while it has killed anti-militarism, has given tremendous impetus to practical Socialism. They say more Socialistic measures have been introduced all over Europe since the beginning of the conflict, than during the whole period before the war and they foresee a wonderful era of constructive Socialism, which, indeed, will be absolutely necessary for the solution of ante-bellum problems.

Sentiment among the French citizen soldiers is unanimously against future armaments with aggressive designs, but it is emphatically in favor of a defensive military.

Priests' Great Service

So far as religious principles are concerned, the wonderful behavior of the priests on the battlefield has done

Within the Military Circle

(From the Deseronto Post)

Lieut. S. Jay Raymond has been transferred from the 93rd Batt. C. E. F., of Peterboro, to the 155th Bay of Quinte Batt. C.E.F. and has been sent to Deseronto to take charge of Recruiting. He will also be ably assisted by Q. M. S. Breden who has been doing excellent work.

The Deseronto platoon, must have fifty-three men to justly call themselves by that name. We have eighteen now, so come along boys and keep the good old name of Deseronto, in the foreground.

Lieut. Raymond informed us this morning, that he would like the names of places, where men can be billeted.

The eighteen men enlisted in the Deseronto Platoon of the 155th Battalion have all received their new uniforms.

Pte. Clifford Myles of the 48th Highlanders(Toronto has had charge of drilling the recruits this week

There are a few brainless gabbers who, when they see a soldier passing down our streets, make all sorts of caustic comments upon them, and upon the fact that they are enlisted to fight for King and Country. Such had better take a timely hint, for there is a stiff penalty for such thoughtless tongue wagging.—Deseronto Post.

KINGSTON

The order recently issued forbidding soldiers of the Expeditionary Force to inform outsiders as to the movements of troops or other military information is being read to the troops of the garrison. It is very necessary that this information be kept secret.—Kingston Whig.

Every day an officer is detailed from some local unit to act as Garrison field officer. It is the duty of this officer to see, among other things, that officers are properly dressed when on the street, that they conduct themselves properly, and that they act in every particular according to the requirements of the service. This will also apply to non-coms, and men, in fact, to all who wear uniform. An officer of this kind, who really knows his duties, will prove of great benefit to the Garrison. Carelessness and negligence in street habits and conduct, are not in the best interests of discipline or training.

The prisoners at Fort Henry are free from the epidemic of grippe which is so prevalent everywhere on the outside. There are no complaints among the men, and very little work for the doctor to do.

All recruits must now be vaccinated the day they are sworn in and attested.

Divisional orders contain the following:

Upon the occasion of the opening of the Dominion Parliament by Field Marshal His Royal Highness the Governor-General on Thursday the 13th inst., the following duties will be performed by the undermentioned units of the Ottawa Garrison: 5th Princess Louise Dragoon Guards; Eight men (including N.C.O. in charge) will be detailed as outriders and will report at Government House at 2.30 p.m. and will escort His Royal Highness the Governor General from thence to the Houses of Parliament House. Four men will ride in front of the sleigh or motor car and four men will ride immediately behind. Dress—Winter dress. A guard of honor, with King's colors and band of the regiment will mount opposite the main entrance of the Houses of Parliament at 2.45 p.m. and will remain until dismissed. A field officer and an adjutant in brigade waiting will be furnished by the Governor-General's Foot Guards and will be in attendance on His Royal Highness.

(Madoc Review)

Recruits are still coming in for the 155th Battalion, and the Armoury is a very active place. The boys have their reading room going and with their several musical instruments very enjoyable times are spent.

On Saturday night next the boys will be entertained by a choir of fifty voices from Ivanhoe under the leadership of Mr. G. M. Sharpe, of Toronto.

On Sunday last the recruits paraded for Divine Service to the Methodist

FRENCH GUNS SMASH GERMAN TRENCHES

Effective Artillery Fire in Artois—Convoy Dispersed in the Champagne—Also Explode Mines

(Canadan Press Special)

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—An official of the British Admiralty arrived here yesterday with despatches and brought the news that the German battleship fleet emerged from the Kiel Canal on three successive days in December, but kept close to the shore near the mouth of the Elbe and of course did not encounter the British grand fleet which cannot, owing to mines, submarines and shoals, go inside Heligoland. This pretence of searching for the British fleet, he said was forced on the German Admiralty by food riots and other symptoms of discontent at home. The blockade is going to be drawn tighter now, and it is expected the Kaiser's fleet will one day be compelled to steam outside of Heligoland when the biggest naval battle in the world's history will take place. The battle for the supremacy of the seas will come without warning and all preparations for taking care of the wounded have been made along the east coast of England and hospital ships are waiting ready to go out and bring the injured to shore. The Admiralty official statement also states that German submarine attacks in the Mediterranean had hitherto been facilitated because the patrol work had been divided between the British and French but the British Admiralty is now responsible for the entire route from Gibraltar to Alexandria and the protection will hereafter be effective.

(Canadan Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 13.—The following official communication was issued tonight:

"In Artois we executed on the positions along the road to Lille a violent bombardment which destroyed at several points the trenches and shelters of the enemy.

"Between the Somme and the Oise a German column estimated at one regiment was taken under our fire at the moment of entering Roye. To the north of the Aisne our artillery damaged an observatory and some machine gun shelters and silenced an enemy battery at Hill 105, on the plateau of Vauclere.

"In the Argonne we exploded one mine at La Fille Morte and two at Vauquois."

Port Arthur Is Visited by Fire

(Canadian Press Special)

PORT ARTHUR, Jan. 14.—The Walsh Block in the centre of the city was destroyed by fire this morning with a loss of a hundred and fifty thousand dolars. The building contained the Dominion Bank, a number of stores, offices and living apartments.

BRITAIN NOT TO FORCE POLICY ON DOMINION

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Speaking at the Institute of Infantry lunch today, Sir Edward Carson said the policy after the war would have to be considered as a whole. They did not desire to force any of their ideals on their kinsmen beyond the seas, who must forward their own proposals, which must be corporated in our imperial council, while the commercial policy must be run for mutual benefit.

Russia Must Have Victory

Czar Issues New Year's Message Declaring No Peace Possible Otherwise—Western Front Is Quiet

(Canadian Press Special

London, Jan. 14—In an order issued to the army and navy on Russian New Year's Day, in which he thanks them for their efforts, Czar Nicholas says: "Let it be impressed upon your minds and consciences that there can be no peace without victory. However great the suffering and however numerous the victims, we must bring victory to our mother country"

Western Front Quiet.

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Jan. 14.—The War Office announces today that owing to the rainstorms on the western front there has been only isolated artillery and grenade actions.

FRENCH STATEMENT

(Canadan Press Special)

PARIS, Jan. 14.—The French official statement issued this afternoon says:

"There was slight activity of artillery during the night to the south of the Somme river, in the Lihons sector, one of our patrols attacked an enemy patrolling party which fled, leaving two dead and one wounded behind. In the Champagne district our fire reached and dispersed German troops who were in movement in sections of trenches at Buttee Du Mesnil.

British Successful In Coast Raids

Naval Operations Off Belgium Are Highly Successful

NO CIVILIANS ARE ATTACKED

Fire Confined to Purely Military And Naval Objectives—German War Vessels, Ammunition Depots and Storehouse Destroyed

(Canadan Press Special)

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The naval operations off the Belgian coast last summer and autumn are described in an official despatch from Vice-Admiral R. H. S. Bacon, commanding the Dover patrol, who begins by explaining the great care taken to confine the fire to purely military and naval objectives, so as to inflict a minimum loss of life and distress to the civilian population, among which are large numbers of citizens of the allied countries.

"In order to carry this principle into effect it was at times necessary to modify and even to postpone projected attacks," the despatch says. "The results therefore have been effective rather than sensational."

After speaking of the extreme accuracy o fthe naval fire, which methods and careful training, Vice-Admiral Bacon reviews the various attacks on Zeebrugge, Ostend, Westende and other points along the coast at various dates in brief, and sums up the damage to the Germans(which, he says, included the destruction of one torpedo boat, two submarines, one dredge, three military storehouses, and in addition wharves, observation and signalling stations, and the Zeebrugge locks were damaged. The British loss consisted of three armed trawlers, of which two struck mines, and 24 men killed and 24 wounded.

Vice-Admiral Bacon says that the gunnery results exceeded his expectations. His fleet consisted of eighty vessels of various classes, manned partly by men of the regular navy, but more largely by officers and men of the navy reserves and deep sea fishermen.

"The protection of such a moving fleet by destroyers in waters which are the natural home of the enemy's submarines has been admirable," Vice-Admiral Bacon says, "but still more remarkable is the aptitude shown by the officers and crews of the drifters and trawlers, who in difficult waters and under conditions totally strange to them maintained their allotted stations without a single accident. Moreover, these men under fire exhibited coolness worthy of the personnel of a service inured to discipline. The results show how deeply adaptability is ingrained in the seafaring race of these islands."

DEATHS

PENNEY—In Belleville, on Thursday, January 13th, 1916, William Penney, aged 78 years.

The funeral will take place from his late residence 12 Bay street, to-morrow (Saturday) at 1.30 p.m. Service at the house at 1 o'clock. Interment at Garrison cemetery, Plainfield.

IN and ABOUT THE CITY

MISS HEPBURN ENGAGED

Mrs. A. D. Hepburn, of Picton, Ont., announces the engagement of her daughter, Hilda Bernice, to Capt. Charles Hadyn Ackerman, of Peter borough, late of the 2nd Battalion, 1st Canadian Division. The marriage will take place on the second day of February. —Montreal Star.

FIRE IN CHURCH

Just as the congregation had finished leaving the Rednersville Methodist church after service Sunday evening and the sexton was putting out the lights, the large chandelier in the centre of the church fell, setting fire to the carpet and matting. Fortunately the fire was extinguished before much damage was done.

HAD AN EYE PUT OUT

Mr. Jos. Adams, of Madoc, had the misfortune to have his right eye destroyed on Wednesday of last week while working in Cross & Wellington's talc mine. Mr. Adams was holding a gad, which is used to split the boulders of talc, when a blister flew off, lodging in his right eye. He immediately went to a doctor when it was found that a piece of steel the size of a ten-ent piece had penetrated the eyeball and the eye had to be revomed

LOST THREE FINGERS

Mr. Walter Whytock, Madoc's popular young Councilman, suffered the loss of three fingers on his right hand on Friday last. Mr. Whytock was operating a meat grinding machine in his butcher shop, and in pushing the meat into the machine his fingers were caught, taking off the three between the thumb and little finger at the second joint. Much sympathy is expressed for Mr. Whytock.

DEATH OF A CHILD

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Haines, of Trenton, will sympathize with them in the death of their eldest son, Nelson Russell, aged 11 years and 11 months, which occurred in this city last evening. The child was visiting his aunt, Miss Foley, in the city, and had been ill for some time. The remains were today sent to Trenton and will later be interred in the family plot, Belleville camtery.

ALLEGED THEFT

Mr. Daniel Stapley reports to the police that he has had some portions of a set of harness stolen from his premises.

A COLD SNAP

The weather turned exceedingly cold at an early hour this morning the thermometor registered 10 degrees below zero, which is by far the coldest snap this winter. During the day the weather moderated, but not to any great extent.

A RECORD ESTABLISHED

The quietness which prevails in police quarters in this city may be gathered from the fact that there has been only one arrest made since December 23rd and that for alleged theft of a horse and rig. Not an arrest for drunkenness has been made for three weeks, which is a record.

CALL FOR FIREMEN

The fire brigade was called out shortly after 11 o'clock this morning, but fortunately their services were not required. The thawing outof somefrozen water pipes in a place of business on Campbell street caused an incipient blaze, which was extinguished with a pail of water.

ATTENDED OLD ALBERT

Mr. George R. Roberts who was for years editor of the Canadian Baptist died in Toronto on Wednesday, at the age of 79 years. Mr. Roberts at one time attended Albert College in this city. Of late years the deceased had been connected with the stamp counter at the Toronto Postoffice.

POULTRY SHOW CLOSED

The 4th annual poultry show held under the auspices of the Belleville Poultry Asociation was brought to a close last evening. During the three days it was in progress many spectators were present and evidenced much interest in the fowls shown. It was in every repsect the most successful show ever held in Belleville, both in number of exhibits and attendance. In the various classes the competition for prizes was keen. A list of the prize winners will be published within a few days.

A SOCIETY FUNERAL

Under the auspices of the Orange Society of which deceased was a member, the remains of the late Mr. Robt. Copeland, of Tyendinaga township, were yesterday afternoon consigned to the tomb. Mr. Copeland was one of the oldest Orangemen in Eastern Ontario, having been initiated into the first Orange Lodge formed in Ottawa. For many years, he had been a member of L.O.L. no. 295 of Tyendinaga. The remains were conveyed to the Anglican church at Roslin, where the burial services of the church were conducted by Rev. J. L. Boutell, who also officiated at the interment at Roslin cemetery. The burial services of the Orange Order were conducted by Rt. Wor. Bro. J. A. Goodfellow and P. R. Sullivan. The bearers were Orangemen, namely, Bros. S. Howe, G. Gray, E. Barber, R. Sullivan, J. Colden and J. Sayers.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

Mrs. James Boland, of Toronto, who was visiting relatives in this city, has returned home.

Misses Pearl Ashley and Floe Foster, attended the Trenton Assembly and dance last night.

Mrs. Alfred Pelkey and daughters Vivien and Kathleen, of Toronto, have returned home after visiting Mrs. J. Boland, Dundas Street, in this city.

Mrs. Charles Gibson, sister of Mrs. C. De Lisle, Foster avenue, of this city, died last evening at her home in Peterboro'. Particulars later.

Mrs. W. J. Whitton, of Grier St., entertained at the tea hour on Thursday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Chown who is leaving Grier St. Covers were laid for six and a very enjoyable time was spent by all.

ASKS PUNISHMENT OF MEXICAN BANDITS

No Indication That Any Future Action will be Taken by Washington Government

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—There was no indication tonight that the United States would take any further action in the case of the eighteen Americans and one Canadian slain by Villa bandits in Mexico, beyond its demand for the apprehension and punishment of the outlaws; or at the most to hold General Carranza responsible for the murders if it is shown that his officials were negligent in providing protection for the party.

Hot Debate in Congress.

Although the latest outrage stirred the simmering Mexican situation again to the boiling point and drew an outburst of attacks upon the Administration in Congress probably unequalled since the Huerta crisis two years ago, there was no outward sign that President Wilson was being influenced to alter his policy. A proposal by Senator Sherman, Republican, for joint intervention by the Pan-American nations which led in the recognition of General Carranza, was referred without action to the Senate Foreign relations Committee.

While Secretary of State Lansing in a statement announced that "every step will be taken to see that the perpetrators of this dastardly crime are apprehended and punished," he added that it was to be deplored that Americans had not heeded the State Department's warnings against exposing their lives in the guerilla warfare territory. In defining the rights of Americans in territory under the sovereignty of another nation, he declared that a non-combatant runs the risk of losing his liberty or his life if he ventures into territory where the authority is uncertain.

Final checking up by the American Smelting & Refining Company of its employees to-day showed nineteen foreigners unaccounted for. Twenty foreigners were reported to have been on the train, only one of whom, Thomas M. Holmes, escaped. Following is the revised list, which was issued by the Smelting Company:

One a Canadian.

C. R. Watson, El Paso; W. J. Wallace, El Paso; M. B. Romero, El Paso; T. M. Evans, Chihuahua City; O. A. Pringle, San Francisco; M. Anderson, Chihuahua City; R. P. McHatton, El Paso; A. Couch, Chihuahua City; Murray Crossett, San Francisco; C. W. Coy, Denver; Alexander O. Hall, Douglas, Arizona; Charles Wadleigh, Bisbee, Arizona; E. L. Robinson, El Paso; G. W. Newman, El Paso; H. C. Hasse, Miami, Arizona; J. Adams, El Paso; R. H. Simmons, El Paso; W. D. Pearce, Los Angeles; J. W. Woom, El Paso. Of these Couch was a Canadian.

Word was received from the American consul at El Paso that Carranza troops are already in pursuit of the murderers, and that the bodies of the slain Americans were being sent to El Paso, as the State Department requested.

Couch was employed in the mechanical department of the mining company. He previously worked for the Northern Light & Power Company of Laboquilla, Chihuahua.

"Old Glory Hangs Limp."

Chicago, Jan. 12.—"Old Glory, which once floated so proudly as the emblem of a free and courageous people, now hangs limp in its halyards, as if ashamed of the scene of ruthless murder of Americans by Mexican bandits. It is time Old Glory be restored to the masthead."

This declaration was made here today by George W. Perkins of the Progressive party, in speaking of the Mexican massacre. A telegram of greeting was sent to Col. Roosevelt, which said: "The time is at hand when it must no longer be said that anyone can kill an American with impunity and then haggle over the value of his life."

COMMITTEE OF FIFTY

Hastings County Organizes For Prohibition Campaign

A general meeting of the Citizens' Committee of Fifty for the County of Hastings was held in the Y.M.C.A. Building yesterday afternoon.

There was a good representation from the townships and villages. A complete organization was formed for the purpose of circulating a petition to the Legislature of the Province of Ontario during the week beginning Jan. 24th next.

This meeting was called by the executive of the Citizens' Committee of Fifty for the County of Hastings, organized some time ago.

This organization is the outcome of the movement inaugurated by the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred who met in Toronto on October 15th, 1915, and decided to circulate a petition to the Provincial Government asking for total prohibition for the Province of Ontario.

The committee is non-partisan and non-sectarian.

In order that every man, 21 years of age, in the County of Hastings, may have an opportunity to sign the petition an organization for each municipality and polling sub-division was formed. Each poll has a committee of five, one of whom is called a captain, who is responsible for the circulating of the petition in that poll.

Mr. E. F. Chapman, who was secretary of the Local Option committee during the recent campaign in Belleville, was appointed organizing secretary for the county.

SQUADRON COMMANDER PREDICTS BIG RAID

Says Defences of London Are Not Adequate—He Has Resigned

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The London Daily Mail gives prominence this morning to an article signed by Squadron Commander Billing, who says he resigned his commission in the naval air service for the purpose of advocating more efficient defence of London against impending air raids.

The writer asserts that the Germans are actively preparing for a raid on a most extensive death-dealing scale, compared with which all the previous raids were child's play.

"Contrary to the general belief," he says, "it is not Zeppelins alone that this country will have to meet. Germany is completing large numbers of bomb-dropping aeroplanes capable of carrying big loads of missiles enormous distance. These obviously are intended to be used against England, and probably against London."

The writer asks: "Has the Government taken steps to meet the peril?" and answers his question by saying: "The aerial defence of London has been neglected from the outset."

BRIDEGROOM HANDCUFFED TO HIS BEST MAN

Wedding of Canadian Officer to Toronto Girl Had Unique Features

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The wedding celebrated at Folkestone between Capt Lawrence V. M. Cosgrave, adjutant of the 6th Howitzer Brigade, and Miss Beatrice Hunter Jones, both of Toronto, was marked by unique features. Escorted by the brigade officers, the bridegroom rode to church on a gun-carriage, handcuffed to Lieut. Kilgour, his best man. During the ceremony the six black horses attached to the gun-carriage replaced by greys, and the couple, after leaving the church under an arch of swords, drove away on the gun-carriage. The marriage proposal was made in a letter written from a dugout at Festubert, and the affirmative answer was received by Capt. Cosgrave in a dugout in "Plug street." General Morrison gave away the bride who had just arrived from Canada.

NEW KING OF SERBIA HAS BEEN PROCLAIMED

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Rome correspondent of The Star says that the illegitimate son of the late King Milan of Serbia has been proclaimed King of Serbia at Belgrade by the Austrian and German authorities. He has been residing in Vienna.

King Milan was ruler of Serbia from 1882 to 1889. His only legitimate son as given in the Almanach de Gotha, was Alexander, who was assassinated in 1903. King Alexander was succeeded by King Peter, who is now at Saloniki, having been driven from his country by the invading armies of the Teutonic allies. The only available record of the irregular offspring of King Milan is a cable despatch of two years ago concerning Milenke Christich Reitchvich, described as an illegitimate son of Milan, who was said to have become involved in financial difficulties in Bohemia.

Trenton News

Trenton, Jan. 12.—At four o'clock this morning, the shed in connection with the Trenton Cooperage Mills, and which contained much valuable dressed lumber and heading, was discovered to be on fire. The flames spread rapidly, and for a time it seemed as though the mill would burn too, as a strong wind was blowing in that direction, but fortunately the firemen who battled bravely with the flames managed to get the fire under control, but not before the shed's contents were destroyed completely. The loss to the company will be heavy although partly covered by insurance. The cause of the fire in unknown.

The marriage took place on Tuesday the 11th inst., in St. Catherines, of Miss Alice McGeachie, daughter of Mr. John McGeachie, formerly of Trenton, and Mr. Hobart Armstrong, youngest son of the Rev. Canon Armstrong, of Trenton.

Mrs. Bensley, of New York, has arrived in town to spend the winter with her mother and sister, Mrs. and Miss Pelletier.

Mr. J. H. Dickey had the misfortune to be thrown from an iceboat on the bay a few days ago, and received internal injuries from the effect of the fall upon the ice. The boat which was going at full speed at the time, ran into a fissure in the ice, which was not discernable: the fissure being frozen over slightly. Mr. Dafoe, who was on the boat with Mr. Dickey was thrown in the water, but with the exception of a cold bath and a slight shaking up he was otherwise unhurt.

While coasting down the side of the mountain one day last week, Miss Olive Smith was thrown from a bob sleigh and as a result has a broken leg. The party who was steering the bobs lost control of the steering gear, and the bobs plunged into a tree with such force as to cause the accident to Miss Smith.

ACCIDENTLY SHOT WHILE HUNTING

On Thursday last John O'Brien, who lives near Coe Hill, was accidently shot through both legs by a companion named Amos Batchelor, while out hunting.

O'Brien, Batchelor and a couple of other men were standing in the woods, when one of them made a remark which caused Batchelor to turn quick which caused Batchelor to turn quickly, and in making the movement his rifle was accidentally discharged. O'Brien was standing about thirty-five feet from him at the time and the bullet passed through his left leg just below the knee ,without touching the bone, and lodged in the knee of his right leg.

Dr. Beeman was called, but failed to locate the bullet, and after making the injured man as comfortable as possible had him placed on the train and sent to the Belleville hospital.

Answer This!

When you have indigestion you never take a lung medicine. Why, then, when you have a cough, a cold or bronchitis (lung troubles) do you swallow things down into your stomach? It is a mistake, and the Peps treatment for colds, bronchitis and asthma, etc., corrects this mistake. Peps are tablets made up of Pine extracts and medicinal essences, which when put into the mouth turn into healing vapors. These are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes—not swallowed down to the stomach, which is not ailing.

On the face of it, is not this treatment of coughs and colds more rational than the old-fashioned way? Peps are recommended by doctors, by nurses, by people in authority everywhere, who once having tried this new treatment will never go back to the old form. We could send you books of testimonials, if you would like to read them, but one trial of Peps will give you more personal satisfaction than lots of reading about what others say. 50c. box, at druggists and stores. Remember the name—just four letters—

Khaki Club's Fine Programme

The regular Wednesday night programme was given at the Khaki Club with the usual large attendance. The programme for the evening was in charge of Miss Tulte which assured its being a capital one. Among the many pleasing numbers were the following: The Stove Pipe Hole by Drummond, Scotch Dialect, The English Flag by Kipling, all of which were given by Miss Tulte and merited such appluase that many shorter ones were given as first and second encores. Professor Staples who was accompanied by Mrs. MacColl sang in addition to the patriotic songs, the choruses of which the boys enjoyed singing; Killarney, Little Irish Girls and several other numbers. The splendid programme was punctated with several "sodliers' numbers." Members of the French Canadian platoon sang "O Canada" in French and Pte. Roberts handled the clappers very cleverly to the accopnaniment of the piano. At the close of the evening everyone was served with coffee, cake and sandwiches.

DEATH ROLL

JOEL. SCHAMERHORN

After a few days' illness, Mr. Joel Schamerhorn, died in Belleville last evening. In 1839 at Richmond township, Lennox county, deceased was born and for years was engaged in farm work. He went west some years ago and upon returning eastward three years ago, he made his home in this city. Mr. Schamerhorn was a widower. Two sons residing in the West, and three daughters living in Western Ontario, survive. Three brothers and three sisters are also living. Deceased was a member of the religious body, known as the Holiness Movement. The remains after being prepared for burial, were today taken to Richmond township for interment, being accompanied by two brothers. The brothers had just attended the funeral of their sister at Napanee yesterday.

WM. PENNEY

Mr. W. Penney who was well and favorably known in the city, died yesterday at his late home, 12 Bay street, Belleville. Deceased was 78 years of age and was born in Thurlow township. He had lived in this city for many years. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church. Two sons, John and William, and one daughter, Mrs. John Matthews, all of Belleville, survive.

BRONCHITIS SUFFERER!

CURED BY A SIMPLE REMEDY

Columbus, Ga. "I am telling everybody what Vinol has done for my husband. He had a bronchial cough, his system was run down and I felt sure he would die. His father insisted on his trying Vinol, and I am so thankful he did, because it cured his cough and built him up. My doctor highly recommends it and said he could not take anything better." Mrs. Thomas, Monk.

Vinol, you know, contains the real cod liver curative extract, together with peptonate of iron, and beef-peptone, it enriches and revitalizes the blood and conveys to the system the vital elements necessary to strengthen the body and throw off the disease. That is the reason it was so successful in Mr. Monk's case.

Anyone in Belleville who has bronchitis, a chronic cough, or needs building up, may try a bottle of Vinol, with the understanding that his money will be returned if he is not satisfied. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, Belleville, Ont.

Quick, Painless Way To Remove Hairy Growths

(Helps to Beauty)

Here is a simple, unfailing way to rid the skin of objectionable hairs? With some powdered delatone and water make enough paste to cover the hairy surface, apply and in about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and every trace of hair has vanished. This is quite harmless, but to avoid disappointment be sure to get the delatone in an original package.

Facts About Bloodhounds.

No real reason exists for the common belief that the bloodhound is a fierce animal, ready to tear the person whom it may be tracking to pieces. It is, on the contrary, rather noted for its gentleness, even seeming timid, unless specially trained to attack.

The origin of the breed, according to Count Le Couteulx de Canteleu, the greatest living authority on the subject, is from St. Hubert of St. Hubert's Abbey in the Ardennes. It dates from the earliest ages, and the breed certainly existed in the time of the Gauls.

As regards the name bloodhound, the Count Le Couteulx believes that when fox-hunting in something like its present form was instituted it was found that the sleuth hound was not fast enough for the purpose, and the present foxhound was evolved from various material, and about this time it became usual, in speaking of the old hound of the country, to call him a bloodhound, meaning the hound of pure blood (as might be said of a blooded horse) to distinguish him from the new hound or foxhound. There is only one breed of pure, genuine bloodhounds, and that is the English

CANADA'S GREATEST INDUSTRY.

"The first order for shells from the home authorities was for 100,000 18-pounder empty shrapnel shells. It was a new venture for any Canadian manufacturing establishment and while the price of $8.55 per shell may appear high in the light of to-day's experience, yet at about the same time an order for 1,000,000 18-pounder shrapnel shells was placed in the United States at a price of $10 per shell. To the credit of the Canadian manufacturers, they have completed 3,000,000 shells at an average cost of $6.50, and the United States concerns have not yet completed their order and are asking for an extension of time." This was a remark of General A. Bertram, president of the former shell committee, in an open letter to Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, which further stated:—

"For various reasons, while chairman, I have refrained from giving out a statement of prices as compared with prices in England and the United States. But I can assure the public that in nearly every case our prices are lower in this country. I have before me now a comparison of prices which will prove my statement."

Speaking of the problem involved in securing the raw material, General Bertram states that: "Colonel Cantley is given the credit of having experimented on basic open-hearth steel for the purpose of making shells. When we were called upon to undertake the first order for 18-pounder shells I learned that our government was paying a price of $4.80 per 100 pounds of acid steel for this purpose. This was produced in the United States, and the material was used in the Dominion arsenal at Quebec. You, sir (the Minister of Militia), suggested the idea of having Colonel Cantley test the quality of material being used at Quebec. He at once performed these tests, which were successful, and from that day on he has taken the lead amongst all the steel manufacturers in Canada in the work they have done in producing probably the largest volume of steel output that will be undertaken for some years to come, namely, the 800,000,000 pounds of steel required to complete our present orders."

General Bertram appends a statement showing the amount of material utilized in the work, and other details of the industry. It is as follows:

"Total number of shells placed, approximately 22,000,000; materials and quantities used in these contracts: steel, 800,000,000 pounds; brass, including copper and zinc, 44,865,617 pounds; copper, 21,595,832 pounds; lead, 101,758,327 pounds; tin, 1,447,708 pounds, resin, 10,037,506 pounds; powder, 4,994,531 pounds; cordite, 6,649,990 pounds; nitrocellulose powder, 3,730,000 pounds; trinitrotoluene, 10,009,000 pounds, or a total of 1,007,779,511 pounds.

"Monthly output of shells, 1,100,000; labor employed, approximately 80,000 to 90,000 men, including skilled and unskilled labor. There are also 1,500 inspectors.

"The industries developed through the efforts of the shell committee are now manufacturing trinitrotoluene, nitrocellulose, sabulite, copper and zinc. To-day a large factory is being erected in Montreal for the manufacture of copper bands, which means that Canada will produce all the raw material for her shell industry. The shell committee also contracted with all copper and smelter industries for their total output. Another new industry has been started in the manufacture of cartridge cases and primers, which required an enormous amount of expenditure to commence operations. "These and other industries which have undertaken this work voluntarily," says General Bertram, "undertook contracts without any advance. This compares favorably with conditions in England to-day where the munitions department advances money for the complete equipment of their factories to enable them to produce the finished article.

"As the business developed in Canada, as experience was gained, we were enabled to greatly reduce the cost of production, so much so that on our present contracts we expect to save the Imperial Exchequer probably $30,000,000 as between the original orders and the prices now being paid to the manufacturers. No doubt we will be criticized for holding this little nest egg for British taxpayers. This would never have been made public had it not been for the unwarranted attacks on Colonel Cantley and other members of the board. I cannot leave this subject without expressing my praise for the loyal support given the shell committee by all who had a hand in the work.

"And now, the work having attained such tremendous proportions, it has been deemed wise to substitute for the shell committee a munitions board, consisting of representatives of the British and Canadian financial experts. One measure of satisfaction we shall always have for our efforts, namely, one of the largest industries in America to-day, which will mean a productive output to the end of August of over $350,000,000."

WINTER FIGHTING.

Those who express surprise that the Russians are able to carry on sustained and successful fighting over a long front in mid-winter probably forget that last winter saw some of the most severe fighting of the whole war. As the Russian offensive grows it is likely to be followed by an Allied attack in the west, in order to take advantage of the Russian advance, or, in case of another Russian failure to keep the Germans so occupied in France and Belgium that they would be unable to send reinforcements eastward. This form of co-operation was followed in some degree in 1915, and in the present year much greater unity in military policy also may be expected from the Allies.

A year ago there was terrific fighting in Galicia. The Russians, after occupying nearly all of Bukowina were driven out late in February, and it was then that Von Hindenburg carried out the great drive which finally drove the Russians out of East Prussia.

As all of the principal combatants are better prepared in the matter of clothing, equipment and munitions than they were last year, and as the Allies are determined that this shall be the last winter of fighting, many observers expect great activity on both fronts. Under our own winter conditions it is difficult to understand how fighting on a large scale can go on in mid-winter, but it did go on last year and it is to be expected again.

The Germans, naturally, do not take a cheerful view of this winter fighting. Major Moraht, the military expert of the Berliner Tageblatt, has just published in that newspaper a very frank description of the unparalleled hardships and sufferings which the German troops are encountering east and west. Two of his paragraphs which appeared in recent despatches, may be reproduced:

"After the terrible change in the weather conditions which December brought, our trenches by no means resemble upholstered caverns, nor are the dugouts like comfortable Alpine huts. The battle against the elements must be fought day and night, and it merely allows the cave dwellers to exist.

"There are, of course, isolated spots at the front where the soil and the climatic conditions are more favorable, but they are few and far between. On our western and eastern fronts, and along the lines held by our Austro-Hungarian allies, the conditions under which we must stubbornly hold out are such as never in the history of the world's most terrible winter campaigns had to be endured before."

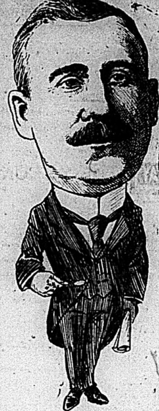
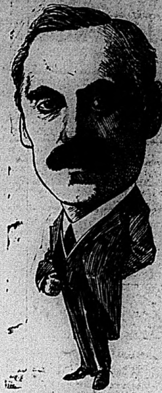
A Chatham soldier is ill with German measles. The cruelest method yet!



Getting Together for the Common Good



The war has caused a great change in the attitude of the general public towards the use of alcoholic beverages. Many people who formerly looked upon the sale of intoxicants with indifference or toleration are now awake, and realize the tremendous importance of the liquor evil.

What Caused It?

What caused this awakening? Well, the public learned from newspaper reports the grave effects of liquor on men who were working on munitions in England—how intemperance reduced the output of shells. They learned that, for military reasons, Russia had prohibited the sale of vodka and France that of absinthe, that England had reduced the hours of sale of alcoholic beverages. They saw, too, that the Canadian military authorities realized the danger of intoxicants, as witnessed by the recent restrictions put on the sale of intoxicating liquors in Ontario.

All these things, and others, combined to make people think.

And to-day people are asking themselves and one another if it is not time to make a great step forward and banish the liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario.

Non-Partisan Organization

Realizing the present state of public opinion, a non-partisan organization has been formed, with the object of securing the enactment of a measure for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario. The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred is the name of this organization, and it represents the whole Province. It numbers men on both sides of politics—men who believe that the liquor question should be taken out of politics—men who are getting together to work for the common good.

The Committee of One Hundred recognizes that no one political party can claim a monopoly of temperance principles. Both parties, being responsible to the people, realize the necessity of enacting temperance legislation, in harmony with public opinion. At the session of the Ontario Legislature on March 8th, 1913, the late Sir James Whitney, in speaking on the temperance question, used the following language:—

"We will stand by our pledges, as we have during the past eight years. We will never cease so long as political life is in us to do everything that reasonable men can do to minimize and make less from year to year the almost unimaginable evils of the liquor traffic."

Premier Hearst and other members of the Cabinet have from time to time declared that the Government will keep fully abreast of public opinion in temperance legislation, as in other fields. The Committee of One Hundred believe the Government to be thoroughly sincere in this stand. The Committee have confidence that the Government will move forward in this important matter as rapidly as public opinion will support them.

The function of the Committee of One Hundred is to crystalize and give expression to the present state of public opinion on the question of prohibition. The Committee further believes that it can demonstrate to the Government that Ontario to-day is overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition. After doing so, the Committee intends to ask the Government for the enactment of a measure for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario, in so far as the Provincial Government has the power to prohibit it, or to submit the same to the people for ratification or rejection.

The Committee of One Hundred asks all patriotic people to join this big new prohibition movement. The Empire to-day is demanding great sacrifices in men and money for the welfare of the nation. The colossal expenditures for liquor in Ontario should be conserved for other more vital needs, and the manhood of this great Province saved from alcohol's devitalizing effects. We want to hear from people everywhere who are interested.

Premier Hearst

Extracts from speech of Honorable W. H. Hearst in the Legislature during the debate on the Liquor License Amendment Act, March 30th, 1915:

"We are laying the basis for a steady forward movement."

"The policy of the Government is to minimize as far as possible the evils of the liquor traffic, and the Commission will be instructed to carry out that policy, and that policy alone."

"The leader of the Opposition is well aware of the dangers of going in advance of public opinion in temperance legislation."

Hon. W. J. Hanna

Hon. W. J. Hanna, in the Legislature, March 30th, 1914:

"In their temperance legislation for Ontario Mr. Hanna maintained they were keeping pace with the mind of the people, they were going as fast with their legislation and with their administration of law as the condition of things in the Province warranted."

Toronto World

The Toronto World, Dec. 18, 1915:

"The nation and the Empire is not only in a gigantic struggle with the German menace, but a mightier struggle seems to be going on within the great British mind as to how the Empire and its peoples are to be best fitted, even regenerated, before the war can be brought to a successful issue. . . . And does this struggle turn, for one thing, on the drink evil? . . . The King has pledged himself to abstinence; Parliament and the bodies to whom it has delegated power have started in to regulate the habits of people, to restrict the use of drink, thereby to force the entire nation, high and low, to conserve its whole resources, energies and earnings for the successful ending of war.

"Is universal sobriety to be forced on everyone, from King and political chief down to laborer in the munition plant? Something portentous is under way, and the bottle may have to go."

Billy Sunday

"The saloon is a liar. She promises you good cheer. She sends you sorrow. She promises you health. She sends you disease. She promises you prosperity. She sends you poverty. She sends the husband home with a lie on his lips to his wife. She sends the son home with a lie on his lips to his mother."

N. W. Rowell

In addressing the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada Mr. N. W. Rowell said:

"If we have in our midst an institution which is demanding from us immense sums of money for its perpetuation, and is giving no value, but is impairing the efficiency of the men who go, as well as of the men who stay, there is one clear duty for every patriotic citizen, and that is to say, to the full measure of his power, that the curse shall be wiped out."

Sir Geo. E. Foster

Hon. Sir Geo. E. Foster, in speaking at the banquet of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada, said:

"We have the unemployed, we have distress in some homes in Canada. There is food enough, animal and vegetable, in this country, allowed to waste, or actually wasted, to feed every hungry mouth in the whole Dominion if it were saved, if it were conserved. I confess to you that every time I see an open bar and see young soldiers going into it and coming out of it, every time I pass an open bar and see one of the unemployed, who, perchance, has got a day's employment and has waited only to get his wage and then make a bee-line for that bar—I confess my soul cries out for the closed bar in this great Dominion of ours."

Lloyd George

In the House of Commons, March 29, 1915:

"We are fighting Germany, Austria and drink, and so far as I can see the greatest of these foes is drink. . . . I have a growing conviction that nothing but root and branch methods would be of the slightest avail in dealing with the evil. . . . I believe it is the general feeling that if we are to settle German militarism we must first of all settle with drink. . . . I am permitted by his Majesty to say that he is very deeply concerned on this question."

Toronto Health Bulletin

The above publication is issued monthly by the Toronto Department of Public Health, of which Dr. C. J. Hastings is the head. The October, 1915, number says:

"Of the various habit-forming drugs, alcohol stands out pre-eminently as the greatest universal curse to humanity, and has practically no redeeming features. In the light of modern knowledge, alcohol, which once occupied a prominent place in the treatment of disease, is becoming more and more discredited every year. . . . In the first place, through the economic effects on the home. . . . In the second place, we have the influence of alcohol on the ers themselves forcefully presented to us by life insurance companies. They have demonstrated in a very clear way the influence of alcohol on the duration of life, and have, of late years, been giving special attention to this source of danger."

Mighty Nickels.

"I know I ought to begin saving money against a rainy day," said a salaried man with a wife and two children, "but it's mighty hard. The best I can seem to do is to squeeze out a nickel here and there, and that hardly seems worth while." How many more are there like that? And what do they expect the years will bring them? What of old age, and what of the misfortunes that may come before age chills their blood, slows their hands and makes their steps laggard? Their trouble is that they underestimate the value of the nickels and the importance of making a beginning. A nickel is a little thing, sure enough, but twenty of them make a dollar. The commonest mistake, and the worst is to forget that despised nickels and dimes are what make dollars.—Duluth Herald.

CHAPTER XXIX—Continued

"If you had ever really cared for me, my better self might seem a little tame." Her voice was wistful.

"Come, now, Orchid! Be honest! You never really cared for me, either. It was simply that I was out of reach, and you didn't want another woman to get ahead of you."

"Perhaps it was. Yet I do think that you could make almost anything out of yourself under the proper conditions."

"Ah, Cassandra, you don't know me if you think that the conditions could include treacheous desertion of those two women! Apart from Truth, I am sincerely attached to Mrs. Dexter."

"Then you will go back and—submit?"

"I shall go back and—submit."

Orchid sighed. "I can see you in my mind's eye, ambling toward a contented old age of slippers and sweetened mush; shedding your ideals with your hair, and waxing eloquent only on the virtues of your eldest-born."

Craighead laughed. "Surely that is better than shambling along the filthy lanes of political perferment."

"Perhaps so," said Orchid, with a shrug, "if it were a necessity for you to 'shamble.' I had pictured you flying. One does not like to think of an eagle in a henhouse."

"Oh, I guess I can sun myself on the top of the coop once in a while," rejoined her companion. Both were silent for quite a space; then Craighead said,—

"Orchid, do you feel that it would be impossible for you ever to be friends with Truth?"

Orchid stared at the question. "Yes, utterly impossible! I could never endure that solemn stare of hers. It is like looking into the eyes of a child, and I was always deathly afraid of children. Parental joy is not in my line!"

"You will marry again, some day."

"Probably, but not in Boston. I am beginnig to loathe the place! And as for this room—" She broke off with gestures of disgust.

"The room is exactly like its mistress, Orchid,—brilliant, beautiful, and unrestful."

"I think I hate the Budha most of all," she went on, petulantly. "Look at him now, with his sleek body and oily grin! If only he would make faces, or open those pulpy eyelids the millionth part of an inch, or—give a twiddle to his thumbs, I could endure him! But that maddening grin! Well, it is his last. He goes to the auction rooms to-morrow."

"Do you mean it?"

"Yes, I am going to sell everything. I have given all my gowns to my maid, with the threat that should she wear one of them in my presence, it means instant dismissal."

Craighead rose to his feet. "What a break-up for you, to be sure! You can't let the past go without a pang. Neither can I," he sighed. "I must be going. It is very late. How shall we say 'good-bye,' Orchid?"

She rose also, and coming close to him, suddenly laid her head against his arm. "Oh, Van," she said piteously, "I am so tired of everything, —myself most of all! Maybe I have cared for you more than either of us knows. You will be happy—and—forget, but I shall never be happy."

He took both her hands in his; the motion withdrew his arm. "If you are not happy no one is to blame but yourself," he said kindly. "You have more than any woman I know, —wealth, youth, beauty, talent, charm—"

"Oh, yes," she broke in. "I say all those to myself, but I might as well be repeating 'x, y, and z.' The equation is lacking. I can't really be anything, not even a villain, though I have tried. Will you say to your wife that I regret my cruelty?"

Van gave a tender, surprised smile. "Orchid!"

She shivered slightly and turned her face away. "Never mind all that! It doesn't atone for much."

"It atones for everything!" cried he. "I always knew yau had fine instincts. You have given me a happy memory to carry away."

"Go, then, before I mar it! This is 'good-bye,' indeed."

"Good-bye! and bon-voyage, should I not see you again. I may be called away within a few days."

She held him by the hands, drawing him slightly toward her, and gazing with mysterious intentness into his eyes. "Good-bye! Don't you dare to pity me! It is true that I never really cared."

She heard him pass into the outer hall, and go slowly down the steps. She leaned forward, listening intently for the sound of his footsheps on the hard pavement. They came, clear, firm and regular as the marching of a soldier. She drew breath quickly, threw her head back, and walked over to the Buddha. "You grinning horror!" she whispered, and struck it violently on the mouth.

James came running in at the sound of the crash. "Oh! the hidol! the hidol!" he cried. "Now 'ow in creashun could he 'a' wobbled hisself offer that table?"

"He smiled himself into an attack of vertigo," explained Orchid, gravely, and then to the horror of James, went off into peals of laughter. "No, don't put him back on the pedestal; take him out into the stable, or the kitchen; or anywhere where I shall never see him again!"

"'Is nose is most flattened into 'is skull," said James, reproachfully.

"That will add fifty dollars to his antiquity."

James tenderly lifted the fallen idol and bore him from the room. At sight of the smirking, flat face over the footman's shoulder, Orchid went into a new paroxysms of mirth.

James deposited the image on the kitchen table unmindful of ejaculations from the cook. He mopped his brow with a large, black-bordered handkerchief, and muttered loudly. "I don't like the looks of it,—I say, I don't like the looks of it!"

"God knows, ye ain't the only one!" said the cook, grimly. "What in land's sake do you bring the grinnin' 'eathen into my kitchen for, I'd be pleased to know?"

'I don't like the looks of it!" repeated James. "'Take 'im into the kitchen,' she says, 'or the stables,' she says, 'or anywhere where I'll not clap eyes on 'im agin,' she says; and then goes hoff into shriekin' 'isterics."

"I'm not took aback at anything, now," she volunteered. "These 'swells,' as they calls theyselves, are all of a piece,—half-cracked, I call 'em!"

Meanwhile Orchid, in the drawing-room, had crept into the chair so lately occupied by Van, and was crying herself to sleep.

Craighead hurried up Beacon Street in the direction of the Hanover, looking about as he went for a telegraph office. All the small ones were closed for the night. He boarded a late car and went down into the city again, preferring not to send a domestic message through any of the hotels or apartment houses in a neighborhood where he was well known. He went to the main office of the Parker House, and despatched the following: "Have decided as you wish. Shall I come? Van."

The long distance back to the Hanover was taken on foot. He was glad of the exercise, the cold night air, the March wind. The sky was very clear, and stars winked and blinked in flocks. He looked up toward them thinking of a characteristic speech that Truth had made. "Do you call those hard little things stars?" she had cried. "They make me think of Jew's eyes over a bargain-counter. They are not even kin to those soft, glorious lights of ours in the South." To Van, now, they semed hard, and cold and keen. Other phenomena than stars were becoming illuminated by Truth's original points of view.

He felt a sudden longing to see Truth, and his heart warmed too toward Orchid. "She is a superb little woman," he said to himself, of the latter. "I believe the good in her will triumph in the end, but even at her best she would have worn me to a nervous thread. Truth is the sort of wife I need. Poor little Orchid! I wonder whether she ever did really care for me?"

CROFTER TO MILLIONAIRE.

J. W. Stewart Now Possesses an Estate in His Old Home.

There lately arrived in London a man whose career provides yet another amazing illustration of the energy, perseverance, and shrewdness of the modern Scot. His name is Mr. John William Stewart, known in Canada as "Jack" Stewart, the millionaire railway contractor, says London Tit-Bits.

Four years ago he bought from the Duke of Sutherland 50,000 acres of the Sutherland estates, with an annual rent-roll of £2,500, which among other things included Mr. Stewart's birthplace, a tiny cottage at Drumbeg, in the parish of Assynt. A few months later Mr. Stewart bought from the Duke for £66,000 a further large tract of land in the parish of Assynt, which included house property, a deer forest, a sheep farm, and small holdings, with a rental of £2,700.

Yet it is not so many years ago since Mr. Stewart landed in Quebec with just 10s. in his pocket. This was after he had tried farming and engineering in Scotland, and decided that the Colonies offered him more scope for the realization of his ambitions. Obtaining work as a farm hand on a French-Canadian farm, he ultimately settled down in British Columbia with the money he had saved, where he found work on the railway. Afterwards he drifted to Montana, in the States, and made such good use of his opportunities that he was able to enter into partnership with two well-known Irish-American contractors, Foley and Walsh, which has since become one of the foremost firms of its kind in the West.

A patriot to the backbone, Mr. Stewart has utilized some of his wealth to equip a Highland regiment in British Columbia, where he is opening up a great new railroad, and has furthermore contributed £20,000 to the war funds.

"Rather than my country should be beaten in this great war," he says, "I will go back again to day labor and small wages where I began."

And there are thousands of wealthy Scotsmen in all parts of the world who would do the same.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the North-West Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections or legal sub-divisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTH-WEST LAND REGULATIONS

The sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Lands Agency or Sub-Agency for the District. Entry by proxy may be made at any Dominion Lands Agency (but not Sub-Agency) on certain conditions.

Duties—Six months residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years. A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres, on certain conditions. A habitable house is required except where residence is performed in the vicinity.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section alongside his homestead. Price $3.00 per acre.

Duties—Six months residence in each of three years after earning homestead patent; also 50 acres extra cultivation. Pre-emption patent may be obtained as soon as homestead patent, on certain conditions.

A settler who has exhausted his homestead right may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $3.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate 50 acres and erect a house worth $300.

The area of cultivation is subject to reduction in case of rough, scrubby or stony land. Live stock may be substituted for cultivation under certain conditions.

Who Kissed Him?

A Story of the Breaking Out of the Great European War.

By JOHN Y. LARNED

Edward Brewerton was considered the handsomest man in his class at college. His was not that class of beauty that is purely physical; he was an intellectual fellow, a man of character, and this was stamped upon his features. Moreover, though there were girls who were stupid enough to tell him that he was an Apollo, instead of making him conscious of his beauty, it disgusted him.

On leaving college Ned concluded to see something of the world before settling down to work. He sailed with the American multitude in June for Genoa, from there proceeded to the Italian lakes and thence on into Switzerland through the St. Gothard tunnel. In the train leaving Lugano and in the same compartment with him were half a dozen American girls traveling under the care of a middle aged lady. The girls were evidently having the time of their lives. Their duenna was giving them instructions by the way, pointing out this and that object of interest, a peak, a cascade, the track of an avalanche, anything that they should notice.

Ned had met no Americans in his journey thus far—at least had made no acquaintances among them—and was at once seized with a desire to know these young ladies. One does not realize how precious one's fellow countrymen are till he meets them in a foreign land. Not only were these ladies fellow countrywomen of Ned, but they were all pretty, some of them very pretty, and there was one of them that had a pair of the most kissable lips he had ever seen.

The young man, though desirous of forming the acquaintance of this party, and especially the one with the kissable lips, sat with them for some time without meeting any excuse for doing so. One of them dropped a guidebook, but before Ned could pick it up the girl recovered it herself. Though he watched for an opportunity, none came. At last an idea came to him.

It occurred to Brewerton to put this party off their guard by pretending to be a foreigner and ignorant of the English language. He spoke German indifferently and French tolerably. When the guard took up the tickets Ned asked him some questions in German. This was sufficient to indicate his nationality. Later when the duenna asked him in English how many minutes were required for the train to pass through the tunnel he replied in German that he did not understand her.

This loosened the tongues of the girls.

"Lill," said one to another, "you've lost your bet that he is Italian."

"And you've lost yours that he is English."

"I knew he was German. He is my ideal of the principal character in Wagner's opera of 'Lohengrin,'" said another.

These remarks were made in a low tone, with continuous glances at Ned, who was apparently intent on the splendid scenery through which the train was moving. He did not hear all that was said, but he heard enough to tell him that he was an object of interest to his fellow travelers. Indeed, he received more attention than the peaks and the waterfalls along the route.

The kissable young lady in the party was, judging from a mischievous smile that hovered about her pretty lips, the arch mischief maker of the lot. They called her Jack, all except the duenna, who addressed her as Jaquelin. To her not even the most magnificent peak lifting its head far above the clouds was a matter of serious consideration. It was of red stone, and she spoke of it as the "red headed one." She made several comical remarks about Ned which he heard plainly and caused her companions to laugh.

There is a station near the southern entrance to the St. Gothard tunnel, where all trains stop before plunging into the mountain, and many of the passengers alight to stretch their legs. Ned got out and walked back and forth beside the train. When he passed the compartment occupied by the girls two of them were at the window. They looked at him, their eyes dancing with mischief.

"I should not be surprised," he said to himself, "if, before this journey is over, those imps will play some game on me."

When the train was about to start he re-entered the compartment, and the few hundred yards separating the station and the mountain were soon passed. Just before leaving daylight he glanced up at the roof of the car and observed that the light had been covered by a woman's traveling hat, but had no time to determine how the feat had been accomplished. When the train entered the tunnel there was not a ray of light in the compartment.

It requires just a quarter of an hour to pass through the St. Gothard tunnel. Not a word was spoken during the passage. Some five or six minutes had elapsed when suddenly Ned felt a pair of lips pressed against his. That they were feminine was evident from the fact that, besides himself, there were only women in the compartment. Ned made a grab, but his hand slipped over a fabric of woman's apparel.

One of the girls had kissed him. Whoever she was she must have made a careful observation as to his exact position, for she could not see him. She first struck his cheek, but instantly passed to his lips. The whole contact occupied only one or two seconds.

Nine or ten minutes of darkness remained, during which the perpetrator of this bit of mischief might compose herself. Doubtless all the girls were conspirators and would bear themselves in such manner as to protect the guilty one. Probably the kissing had been done on a bet. Ned's opinion was that Jack had been the perpetrator, but he could not be sure.

The matter must have been well arranged during the stop before the train entered the tunnel, for when it emerged there was not the slightest indication on the face of any of the girls that anything unusual had occurred. Ned scanned the features of each without observing any betrayal. As for Jack, she began at once as soon as there was light to read a guidebook. The only person in the party who did not seem to have a secret was the duenna, and Ned made up his mind that the mischief had been hatched without her knowledge.

The ride to Lucerne was not long. Though Ned kept his ears open for information, not a word was spoken that would give him even an inkling as to which one of the girls had kissed him. He watched to see if the party were going to a hotel, intending to go to the same hostelry. But they went to a pension, and he lost track of them.

One day while Ned was in Munich a clap of thunder came from a clear sky in a declaration of war by Austria against Servia. It was followed by another from Russia, another from Germany, from France, England and the rest.

Ned, who was intending to return to America by way of England, had drawn the balance on his letter of credit, consisting of some $600. It was evident to him that he had better get out of Europe as quickly as possible. But by what route? To make his way through France seemed next to impossible. Italy was a neutral country, and the distance compared with any other route was short. He would go to Italy.

But the only mode of conveyance was legs. This did not trouble him. Indeed, he had been making pedestrian tours among the Alps. Putting what clothes he could carry in a pack on his back, he sallied forth to walk something like a hundred and fifty miles. Unfortunately he must pass through a portion of Austria. As soon as he struck the border he found everything in confusion. He was obliged to show his passport continually, and, as for getting a conveyance for any part of his journey, that was out of the question.

One morning while he was trudging along within ten or twelve miles of the Italian border he saw an Austrian officer with several soldiers stop an automobile and say something to some women in it, and they got out. Then the officer put one of his men in it for a chauffeur, and the machine sped away, leaving the women in the road.

Ned inferred that the machine had been taken by the Austrian government and hastened to offer his sympathies. He found a despairing group. And to his astonishment they were the duenna and the girls with whom he had passed through the St. Gothard tunnel. Forgetting that he was supposed to be a German, he said in good American English:

"Ladies, can I be of any assistance to you?"

"Oh, my goodness gracious!" exclaimed all the girls in a breath.

"For heaven's sake," said the duenna, "what are we going to do?"

"It is ten miles to the Italian border," replied Ned. "If you are able to walk it I think we can get a conveyance of some kind there."

"But we haven't a dollar with which to hire a conveyance."

"Don't trouble yourselves about that. I am well provided."

Under Ned's guidance and protection the party set out for the Italian border, striking it on a railroad north of Verona. They succeeded in getting transportation to Milan and thence to Genoa.

All expenses were paid by Ned until the party reached Genoa, where they found that certain Americans in Italy desirous of going home had chartered a steamer. The women were still without money, and Ned had just enough to carry them all home.

"I will pay the passage of each and all of you," he said to them, "on one condition."

"Name any condition you like," said the duenna.

"Tell me which one of you kissed me in the St. Gothard tunnel."

"Never!" exclaimed all the girls at once.

"Very well; then you'll remain in Italy."

Finally Jack broke the deadlock. "I cannot tell a lie. It was our chaperon."

There was a burst of laughter, and Brewerton gave in, pretending to take Jack's confession for a real one, though he knew that she was the guilty person.

The girls and their duenna occupied one stateroom on the return voyage, and Ned slept on deck.

Ned and Jaquelin on moonlight nights sat on deck a great deal. There is no further record of any more kisses between them, but Ned having tasted the lips of his companion once was not likely to sit in the moonlight without tasting them again.

A month after their arrival Ned and Jack became man and wife.

EVERY THREE MINUTES ONE DIES IN THE U. S.

The Anti-Tuberculosis Society illustrates the frightful toll of consumption by extinguishing a light every three minutes, and shows that it is the man or woman, girl or boy, who neglects colds, whose blood is impure, who feels weak and languid, who is the very one to contract tuberculosis—and none are immune.

During changing seasons, or after sickness, blood-quality is most important, and if you and your family will take Scott's Emulsion after meals it will charge your blood with health-sustaining richness, quicken circulation, and strengthen both lungs and throat. Scott's is free from drugs—easy to take—it cannot harm. Get a bottle to-day.

HE KNEW TOO MUCH

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Everybody knows that the besetting sin among officials in Russia is graft. From the highest to the lowest they expect the palm to be crossed before they will do their duty, and a favor costs a great deal more.

There was once a general in Russia who was intimately connected with the imperial family. His name was Alexander Rizenoff. He was a skillful commander, and to him Russia was indebted for its salvation in a certain war. During this time he was much troubled by the rascality of officials in the supply department. He could get neither food nor ammunition for his troops because those whose duty it was to provide and forward them were waiting for those who sold to pay their commission and those who forwarded to receive the same pecuniary attention.

General Rizenoff was a very energetic man, and after his victory determined to bring some of these officials to justice. He employed secret agents to trace the causes of the delays that had inconvenienced him, but when they made their report he found himself estopped from pursuing the matter further. His investigators had traced the graft to certain grand dukes who had been getting rich during the war, and he believed that if he brought the matter up officially he would probably be sent to Siberia on some trumped up charge.

The guilty persons knew that the general was aware of their delinquencies, but were not aware what he intended doing with the evidence in his possession. They would have united in a plan to get rid of him, but his victories over the enemies of Russia had made him so popular that they did not dare to accuse him of any crime.

Meanwhile the general was lionized, wined and dined by the lofty and cheered wherever he appeared in public by the lowly. The loudest in his praise were those who had come near thwarting his military successes and were now hunting for a plan by which they could seal his lips in case he should think of exposing their peculations.

The general was a very good man. Far from enjoying being feted, he preferred his rooms in the quarters assigned him as a commander. He was essentially a man's man and had very little to do with women.

One evening at a ball at the winter palace one of the grand dukes told the general there was a lady present who desired that he should be presented to her. Rizenoff demurred, but the would be introducer, who was an uncle to the czar, would not be refused, and he was altogether too powerful to offend. The general was led up to a Spanish lady, who looked up at him with a pair of Madonna-like eyes, which seemed to say, "I am the slave of the warrior who has led his troops to victory." Women had made open advances to him. They attacked him through his vanity and through his senses. They had all failed. There was something inexpressibly timid in this girl's admiration, something that seemed to say: "I can never aspire to be noticed by you. I only wish to bask for a moment in the light of your glory."

Rizenoff was touched by this worship of a beautiful girl almost young enough to be his daughter. He returned it by asking her to dance. She looked up at him with a frightened glance, as much as to say: "This honor cannot be for such as I. I should not know how to behave in so exalted a position as that of your partner."

Nevertheless she danced and with such grace that others ceased to dance to watch her. Every movement was perfect, yet it seemed natural, not cultivated perfection. When the dance was ended the general led his partner to one of the little nooks intended for tete-a-tetes and there spent the rest of the evening with her.

From that time General Rizenoff paid his court to this girl and to her only. Inez Cardena was her name. Who she was, how she came to be invited to a state ball, no one knew. She did not claim to be noble. She was too well bred to be of the peasant class. She was invited to all functions where General Rizenoff was invited, for his attentions to her were well known. On such occasions where she danced she was the center of all eyes, and it soon came to be noted that she never danced with any one except Rizenoff. Whether no one else asked her to dance or whether she considered it such an honor to be chosen by him that it would be a sacrilege to dance with any one else did not transpire.

One night Rizenoff departed from the palace of a grand duke where a ball was in progress in a carriage in company with Inez Cardena. Shortly afterward the carriage drove up to the general's quarters. When the door was opened Rizenoff's dead body was there with a poniard sticking in his heart. No living person was in the carriage.

People talked, but only under their breath. Information was issued from the palace that the general had come to his death from cause or causes unknown to the government, and it was forbidden to discuss the matter.

"She was a dancer from Madrid," said a man to another in speaking of Inez Cardena.

"And the general knew too much."

The reward of $5 for the return of his missing wife which a Newark (N. J.) man offers seems excessive when one learns that the lady weighs 200 pounds and has a mole on her lip.

SUDDEN DEATH

Caused by Disease of the Kidneys.

The close connection which exists between the heart and the kidneys is well known nowadays. As soon as kidneys are diseased, arterial tension is increased and the heart functions are attacked. When the kidneys no longer pour forth waste, uremic poisoning occurs and the person dies, and the cause is often given as heart disease, or disease of brain or lungs.

It is a good insurance against such a risk to send 10 cents for a large trial package of "Anuric"—the latest discovery of Dr. Pierce. Also send a sample of your water. This will be examined without charge by expert chemists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. When you suffer from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, or that constant tired, worn-out feeling, it's time to write Dr. Pierce, describe your symptoms and get his medical opinion without charge—absolutely free. This "Anuric" of Doctor Pierce's is found to be 37 times more active than lithia, for it dissolves uric acid in the system as hot water does sugar.

Simply ask for Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for blood and stomach.

WORRY, DESPONDENCY.

Kidney Disease is suspected by medical men when patients complain of backache or suffer with irregular urination, disturbed, too frequent, scanty or painful passage. The general symptoms are rheumatic pains or neuralgia, headaches, dizzy spells, irritability, despondency, weakness and general misery. Worry is a frequent cause and sometimes a symptom of kidney disease. Thousands have testified to immediate relief from these symptoms after using Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets.

HAS A BIG JOB.

Chairman of Quebec Board to Care for Soldiers is a Busy Man.

The appointment of the Hon. C. A. Simard as chairman of the Quebec Province Commission in charge of making arrangements for finding employment for returned soldiers, might be called an appreciation of services rendered both to the Government and the people of Quebec.

Mr. Simard was one of the first to recognize the value of good roads, and through his early efforts he gathered around him a body of public opinion that soon made itself felt. He is a large property holder on the south side of the river across from Montreal in the vicinity of Laprairie, and in 1913 was appointed a member of the Legislative Council of Quebec.

He organized the Franco-American Chemical Company, and is general manager of the St. Lawrence Drug Co. The former company is a world-wide concern with branches in Europe and the United States.

Mr. Simard is said to have a genius for organization, and he will have ample scope for his powers, for the task of securing employment for returned soldiers is no easy one. Already Montreal has 200 men invalided home seeking employment, and the list will be added to by half that number within a week.

Little aid is expected from the city of Montreal, so it will be the task of Mr. Simard and his associates to mobilize the manufacturers throughout the Province. Mr. Simard has great faith in the possibilities of technical education, and hopes by that means to help soldiers who otherwise might have to spend their days as mere laborers, janitors, or the like.

Mr. Simard is but 45 years old.

Australian Market for Canadian Fish

In addition to the great market for Canadian fish which is now being opened up in Great Britain owing to the scarcity of supplies there through war conditions, a valuable export market is now being developed in Australia. A report to the Department of Trade and Commerce from Canadian Trade Commissioner Ross of Melbourne draws attention to the fact that Australia also faces a fish shortage, and that there is a record demand for Canadian fish there.

New Brunswick packers have already taken advantage of the opening and are shipping large quantities of canned sardines and herrings. Preserved fish in tins are reported to be in great demand, with high prices ruling. During the past twelve months Canada has sent more than half a million dollars' worth of fish to Australia.

In Great Britain fish prices have gone up more than 100 per cent., and recent shipments of Canadian fish to the motherland, have demonstrated the immense value of the market opened up by the war to Canadian fishermen. Canada possesses the most extensive fisheries in the world, with a catch last year valued at more than $33,000,000 and more than 100,000 men employed in the industry. The ill wind of the war is blowing good to the fishermen of Canada, who are getting ready markets and higher prices.

Wanted a Sleepy One.

"Mother, must Fred and I have a chaperon for tonight?" asked the sweet young thing.

"Certainly, dear," replied the mother.

"Well, mother, please don't send Aunt Helen as a chaperon because she's got insomnia."

A Simple Way to Remove Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

New Society Coming Out of Great War

away entirely with that contempt which the masses were wont to have for the ministers of Churches. Everywhere these Catholic Chaplains, armed only with their faith and animated by a wonderful spirit of sacrifice, have provoked the admiration of unbelievers as well as of the soldiers of all creeds.

I had a long talk with one of them who is famous throughout France for his innumerable acts of bravery and utter disregard of death. He was in the retreat from Mons, and ever since whenever his men have been in action they have always found him in the very front line of fire, ready at any moment to administer the comforts of religion to those who wanted them or to help the wounded out of danger, whether believer or atheist.

"It is most striking what a tremendous influence over men the idealistic side of this war has had," he said. "In my experience I have never known a man in the hospital or on the battlefield to refuse extreme Unction.

Religion "Declined Tremendously."

"Without a question, for years before the war religious feeling had declined tremendously in France, either from indifference or scepticism. To be more precise, I have divided the men into four categories; those who had received Christian education, but had dropped out of it in the daily struggle for life; those in the same condition, but who had become atheists through materialistic convictions acquired later in life; those who had received the Church's education and never lost it, although worshipping in a perfunctory way, and finally, those to whom faith was a dead letter because they had never been taught to believe.

"In the first instance, the first class of men voluntarily returned to the Church once they were brought into contact with death and the hereafter. The second class also came back as soon as the war had forcibly made them of their theories in the supreme hour.

"The third class revived all the enthusiasm of their youth, while the 4th class I have found absolutely refractory. These men are like grownup children. They question every statement you make, and refuse to budge from their stand that they must have actual proof of the efficiency of the Church's teachings.

"They won't realize that you cannot explain faith, and, having never known it, they are ignorant of its great comforting influence. This is not a numerous body.

No Pressure on Men

"However, we never insist nor exercise any pressure. Religious practice is partly optional, and the result is highly satisfactory. Seventy-five per cent. of the men of my section never fail to attend Mass.

"Let me tell you one incident that will show how deeply the soldiers desire priestly assistance in the hour of death. Recently a heavy shell fell right among a body of men on their way to the trenches. I was with them, and immediately attended to the stricken and dying.

"Deep in the shell crater I found a young man frightfully mangled. I took his hand and whispered in his ear: 'I am a priest. Make an effort and press my hand to let me know you have recognized me.'

'The dying boy's eyes were closed and his face was hideously contorted in the grimmest agony, but no sooner had I whispered those few words than he seemed to heave a sigh of relief. His eyes slowly opened. There was a slight pressure of my hand and his face relaxed into a sublimely peaceful smile. With my ear close to his lips I caught the faint words:

"'Why, a priest here! God be thanked.'

"I rapidly administered absolution and he died in my arms. The vision of this wonderful experience ever haunts me and spurs me on in my work."

And with these words the chaplain leaped into the saddle and with a military forage cap cocked over one ear galloped swiftly away, a lonely, black figure on the desolate yellow dunes.

"It Couldn't Be Done—So He Did It."

Somebody said it couldn't be done,
But he with a chuckle replied,
That "Maybe it couldn't, but he would be one,
Who wouldn't say so till he tried."

So he buckled right in with the trace of a grin
On his face. If he worried he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—and he did it!

Somebody scoffed: "O, you'll never do that;
At least no one ever has done it."
But he took off his coat, and he took off his hat,
And the first thing he knew he begun it.

With the lift of his chin and a bit of a grin
Without any doubting or quiddit.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—and he did it!

There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done;
There are thousands to prophesy failure,
There are thousands to point out to you one by one
The dangers that wait to assail you.

But just buckle in with a bit of a grin
Then take off your coat and go to it,
Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing
That "cannot be done"—and you'll do it.

Economy for Both

"Woman is very unreasonable," said a venerable New Hampshire justice of the peace. "I remember that my wife and I were talking over our affairs one day and we agreed that it had come to the point where we must economize. 'Yes, my dear,' said I to my wife, 'we must both economize!' 'Very well, Henry,' she said, with a tired air of submission, 'you shave yourself and I'll cut your hair.'"—New York Globe.

SPORTING NEWS

THE BIG HOCKEY GAME AT THE RINK TO-NIGHT

Picton Intermediates Play Local Team—A Defeat to be Retrieved—Never so Much Enthusiasm Since Belleville's Big Team

Since Belleville had the "Big" team consisting of Winchester, Burrows, McMillan, McGuire, Kennedy, Brown and Marks there has not been so much enthusiasm over a hockey team as is evident this season.

The fact that two juniors are on the team adds greatly to the interest that has been aroused in local circles. Philips is playing a star game in goal and Whalen the fast little junior is to play to-night with the stronger team. Symons and Whitty are as good an amateur defense as will be found in the mid-way part of the league and as a rover, it is doubtful if Finkle can be beaten in this group at any rate. Earle and Mitchell are hard working and hard checking forwards who may alway be depended upon to give a good account of themselves.

Picton defeated the local team in Picton when they last met, but the boys are determined to wipe the slate clean to-night and turn the tables in decisive style.

Picton comes to this city anxious to add one more game to their win column and will not go down to defeat without a desperate struggle. That they will be defeated is almost a certainty for Belleville intermediates are preparing to go high in the league and the team that heads them must play hockey all the way.

HOCKEY

There was a quick snappy practice at the rink last night by the Intermediate and Junior teams. They were ably coached by Bill Symons who seems like a father to them all.

Don't forget to see the game to-night Cold weather came along just in time to give good ice for to-night's game. A good, fast game may be expected.

The Belleville team, barring accidents, will line up to-night as follows; Goal, Phillips; Defence, Symons, Whitty; Rover, Finkle; center, Earle; right wing, Whalen; left wing, Mitchell.

This should make an improvement in the team as Whalen is a fast little player who is bound to strengthen the line up.

Captain James T. Sutherland, President of the O.H.A., is confined to his house at Kingston with an attack of la grippe, and as a result he was unable to witness the match between the Frontenacs and Brockville. This is the first Kingston game of hockey that he has ever missed.

MILITARY SPORTS

The second game in the Battalion baseball league was played in the Armouries last night when the combined team from the Signallers and Machine Gun Section met the Brass Band. With teams as evenly matched as the two that played last night, there is going to be some keen competition before the schedule is over. The game which ended in a victory for the Brass Band by a lead of one run, was anyones game until the last innings. The kind of sportsmanship that prevails in the 80th was demonstrated last night when the Brass Band gave a good player to the other team who found themselves short a man. The final score was 15 to 16 in favor of the Band. The teams lined up as follows:—For the Band; Chamberlain, Seymour, Tanner, Vickers, Lister, Hewitt, Angrove, Spuires. For the Combined team— Thompson, Carmody, Thompson, Bolin, Mackie, Sills, Powers, Sills.

The next games will be played next Wednesday and Thursday nights at 7.15 p.m.

THE RING.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—The proposed ten-round bout between Jess Willard, world's heavyweight champion, and Frank Moran, which, it was expected, would take place in this city in March, probably will be postponed until Decoration Day, May 30th, it was said tonight.

This step has become necessary, it is said, because Willard has informed the promoters of the match that he will be unable to box in March. If a later date is selected the bout will be staged in the open.

Hearty Response To Belgian Fund

MONTREAL, Jan. 14.—As a result of the first appeal of the Belgian Relief Committee of Montreal for assistance in feeding the thousands of destitute Belgians during the present winter there came to the offices at 59 St. Peter street the other day thirty-four dollars from the teachers of Mount Allison Ladies' College, Sackville, N.B. The gift was a spontaneous one. The money was sent enclosed with a copy of the first advertisement of the Belgian Relief Committee asking for money.

This is but one of many such instances which have already swelled the funds now at the disposal of the Montreal Committee to thousands of dollars. Other gifts have been larger, others smaller, but all are equally welcome. Some of the gifts have been in cash and others in donations of materials, both of which are acceptable and are received with the gratitude of those who are devoting their energies to this noble cause.

Among the early ones to respond was the Coaticook, Que., Baptist Sunday School, one of the hundreds of Sunday Schools of the Dominion working for the cause. The gift of this organization consisted of $61.12 and two cases of clothing. The neighboring town of Lennoxville, through its Patriotic Association, sent a cheque for $112.50.

The women of Granton, Ont., have been among the active ones of the smaller places, and through the Ladies' Canadian Club have sent thirty dollars. A public concert at Rathilda, Sask., resulted in the forwarding of fifty dollars, while a public school class at Fort Qu'Appelle, Sask., sent $1.50.

St. Martin's Church Sunday School at Montreal, has given $37.60. One of the larger single donations comes from Red Deer, Alta., where the local newspaper collected $600.

Perhaps one of the most interesting gifts is the one from Dawson City, from one of the far-away corners of the Dominion. The Klondike Chapter, Imperial Order of Daughters of the Empire sent $126.91. From much nearer the committee headquarters comes the gift of $50 from the city of Outremont and similar gifts.

Manitoba Women Will Get Franchise

Second Reading Was Given Norris Bill Without Dissenting Voice

DISPENSARIES SYSTEM

So-Called Prohibition Measure Doesn't Ban Liquor Entirely

WINNIPEG, Jan. 14.—Premier Norris in the legislature today moved the second reading of a bill enfranchising the women of Manitoba, and the motion was unanimously adopted. Similar unanimity marked the second reading of the Manitoba Temperance Act, which will be submitted to the electors on March 15th.

In moving the second reading of the woman suffrage bill, Premier Norris pointed out that besides giving votes to the women it recognized their right to sit in the legislature.

With regard to the prohibition bill Hon. A. B. Hudson said it was the same as the Hugh John Macdonald Act of 1912, except that the title had been changed to the Manitoba Temperance Act. He pointed out that under its terms only wholesale and retail druggists can sell liquor in the province, and those persons can exercise the privilege only on strict considerations. Wholesalers can sell as much as ten gallons to one person, provided the liquor be required for mechanical or scientific work. Retailers can sell only on medical prescriptions. The importation of liquor is not prohibited and the breweries and distilleries can continue to do business with other provinces.

FIFTY PERISHED WITH STEAMER

Captain and Many of Clan Macfarlane Crew Are Still Missing—Were Torpedoed in Mediterranean

CERTAINLY WAS DELIBERATE MURDER

The German Submarine's Captain Showed An Impatience to Sink Vessel Quickly

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The Malta correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. sends the following despatch:

"Fifty members of the crew of the British steamship Clan Macfarlane which was torpedoed in the Mediterranean Dec. 30, are still missing and have been given up as lost. Captain Swanston, commander of the steamship, is included among the missing.

"The survivors who have arrived here state that the steamship was torpedoed without warning in a rough sea, the submarine appearing on the surface only after the torpedo hit the ship. After the crew had taken to the boats, the submarine came alongside the boat occupied by the Clan Macfarlane and the submarine commander asked and received miscellaneous information about the ship and her crew.

"The submarine was one of the largest type, and mounted two guns. Its commander showed great uneasiness, survivors say, while waiting for the steamship to sink. He finally accelerated her sinking by placing five shots below her waterline.

"The lifeboats battled eight days against mountainous waves, with the occupants on rations consisting of half a biscuit and a small cup of water twice daily. Six lifeboats had been tied together but three broke away before help came and are believed to have been lost."

New Viceroy of India is Chosen

LONDON, Jan. 14.—(Special)—It is officially announced tonight that Baron Chelmsford, former governor of Queensland and of New South Wales, has been appointed viceroy and governor-general of India in succession to Baron Hardinge.

Frederic John Napier Thesiger, third Baron Chelmsford, was formerly an officer of the Royal Engineers. He was born in 1850 and he served as military attache in the Turko-Russian war of 1877-78. He also served on the commission for the delimitation of the frontiers of Turkey in 1878 and 1879 and he was military vice-consul of Anatolia in 1871-72. Baron Chelmsford also served in the Egyptian Expedition. He then took service in the Egyption army, and took part in the Soudan expedition. He was governor-general of the Red Sea littoral 1884-1886 and he later was commander of the Egyptian-Nile frontier. He was military attache to Constantinople in 1889 to 1896 and he served in South Africa as commander of a division. He became governor of Queensland in 1901.

Protests are Of No Avail

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Discussing "the freedom of the seas," The Spectator, in an article, says:

"The British people cannot, and will not be entangled in a web of words. The state department at Washington is served by men of much quicker wit and more able pens than our foreign office and we shall not be surprised to see a victory won by President Wilson and Mr. Lansing over the attempts to define such words and phrases as "blockade,' 'retaliation' and 'freedom of the seas.'

"Call it a blockade of retaliation as regards war zones and the organic development of contraband of war, or what you will, but the fact remains that come what may, we mean to use our sea power to besiege the German nation and we are besieging it."

The Spectator then asks: "Who dares assert that we ever used our naval power to tyrannize over our neighbors or to serve our selfish ends?"

Submarine Blown Up in Brooklyn

NEW YORK, Jan. 15—The submarine E-2 was blown up in the Brooklyn Navy yards today. It is said that twenty of the crew were lost.

Germany Finds Poor Excuse

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, Jan. 15.—In its reply to the British Government in regard to the Baralong incident, the text of which was made public to-day, Germany takes the ground that Britain no longer desires to observe the requirements of international law in regard to German submarines, and breaks off negotiations on this subject, in addition to announcing its decision to take measures of reprisal, as made known yesterday.

The German Government rejects Great Britain's proposal for an examination, by a neutral board, of the Baralong incident, and also of those cases in which it is charged Germany violated international law in submarine operations. The note was delivered to Great Britain through the American embassy.

GERMAN WARFARE TO BE MORE RUTHLESS

BERLIN, Jan. 14.—(via wireless to Sayville, N.Y.)—The German Government has transmitted to Great Britain through the American embassy a note which declares that as a result of Great Britain not fulfilling Germany's demand for an explanation of the circumstances surrounding the sinking of a German submarine by the British patrol boat Baralong, Germany will adopt suitable measures of reprisal.

The Baralong incident was brought up in the British parliament on Jan. 3rd last, when Sir Edward Grey said the British Government would court full inquiry by an independent tribunal of charges made by American muleteers that they, while aboard the Nicosian saw the crew of the British patrol boat Baralong fire on sailors in the water after the sinking of a German submarine.

LIEUT.-COL. H. ROGERS BACK

COBOURG, Jan. 14.—Lieut.-Col. Herman Rogers, officer commanding the 20th Battalion, now in France, passed through town on his way to Toronto. He was joined at Grafton by his mother, Mrs. Rogers, widow of the late Lieut.-Col. R. Z. Rogers, and his little daughter, Dorothy. Col. Rogers is home on six days' leave, and his wife will return with him to Grafton to spend the time with him there. His brother, Capt. R. P. Rogers, officer commanding No. 1 Tunneling Company, is now overseas, and the brothers passed each other on the ocean. Lieut.-Col. Rogers went to the front as second in command of the 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force, and was later given command of the 20th Battalion.

Export Business In Wheat Heavy

Buying Supposed to be for Account of Spain Which Tended to Advance Prices

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—Wheat jumped in value today, chiefly on account of a possibility that severe damage to the winter crop might result from the widespread cold wave. Although top prices were not maintained, the market closed strong, 1½c to 1⅝c to 1⅞c net higher, with May at $1.28 and July at $1.20⅞. Corn gained ⅜c to ⅝c to ¾c and oats ⅝⅝c to ¾c. Advances in the wheat market forced quotations up to within ¼c of the highest price record of the 1915 crop. The bulge was checked by heavy profit-taking, which led to a setback of more than one cent. but seemed powerless to prevent a subsequent rally. Friends of higher prices gave most of their attention apparently to assertions by a leading expert that the weather conditions were much like those which produced a remarkable ice pack in the fields and largely wiped out the soft wheat crop of 1912. Bulls were stirred up also by gossip of a liberal new export business, although estimates after the close made the total for today only 400,000 bushels. The aggregate for the last three days, however, was put at between 4,500,000 bushels and 5,000,000 bushels. Predictions of a sharp falling off in receipts northwest, as a result of the blizzard.

SIR JOS. POPE HAS FOUR SONS AT FRONT

Eldest Son Has Been Wounded, Two Are at Shorncliffe and One Has Just Left

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—The four sons of Sir Joseph Pope, K.C., M. G., Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and Lady Pope, have left to fight for their country. The eldest of these, Major E. W. Pope, R.C.R., who was wounded at St. Julien and who returned home on three months' leave last summer, is now stationed at Shorncliffe, where he has been giving courses in instruction. He is expecting at any moment to be ordered back to France to rejoin Col. Turner's staff.

Another son, Lieut. Maurice Pope of the R.C.E., who gave up a most lucrative position on the Canadian Pacific Railway to go to the front, left England on Monday for the firing line in France. Their third son, who has gone to war is Lieut. Harold Pope, Canadian Army Service Corps. He was a member of the Bank of Commerce staff and is at present at Shorncliffe Camp.

Lieut. Alfred Pope, the youngest son of Sir Joseph and Lady Pope, belongs to the Royal Canadian Regiment and is also at Shorncliffe awaiting orders to leave for the front.

RISE OF BANK PRESIDENT

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—It is a long stride from the position of bank messenger to bank president, but President Theodore Hetzler, of the Fifth Avenue Bank, at Forty-Fourth street and Fifth avenue, does not regard the advance as anything unusual nor does he believe that there is any doubt about the opportunities open to young men who are earnestly interested in banking.

Twenty-five years ago, next month Mr. Hetzler entered the bank as a messenger. This morning the board of directors, of which he had been made a member on Wednesday, elected him president of the bank. He was 15 years old when he got a job as messenger, which he applied to in answer to an advertisement. At 40 he is the youngest president of a prominent New York bank.

"An advertisement in a trade paper led me to the bank, which is still at the same location as it was at the time. I got a messenger's' position which I held for months before I got my first promotion. After that I was shifted from one department to another until I had worked in all of them Five years ago I was made cashier, and two years later they promoted me to the office of vice-president. This morning they elected me president. That is all there is to it."

"Are the same opportunities open today in the banking business?" Mr. Helzler was asked.

"Certainly, I don't know of a more wonderful business for young men. The only way to get ahead now is to work up through all the branches of the business.'"

The more we see of the 1916 model, arched-eye-browed, ear-ringed, fur-booted girls the more we think of the missus.

LARGE GAIN IN REVENUE INDEX TO PROSPERITY

Dominion Figures for December Nearly Double Those of Year Ago—Outlay Also Expands

IMMENSE EXPENDITURE BECAUSE OF WAR

War Expenditure for the Last Nine Months is Nearly Eighty-Six Million Dollars—Debt is Over Half Billion

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 14.—(Special.)—The remarkable increase in revenue that has featured Canadian financial statements for the past three months is again evident in statistics for December, issued by the finance department today. Dominion revenues for the month totalled $17,371,516, as against customs increase was from $4,706,117 to $9,060,181, or nearly one hundred per cent. Excise revenue was $2,303,211, an increase of $350,000. Postoffice revenue was $1,846,560 a gain of $496,340. Revenue from public works, including railways and canals, showed the notable increase of $2,165,000.

Revenue for the first nine months of the fiscal year is shown to have bees $122,027,821, an increase over the corresponding period of last year of $22,400,000. Customs increased from $56,000,000 to $69,000,000. The postoffice revenue increased from $9,175,220 to $12,500,000. The revenue from public works advanced from $10,000,000, to $16,000,000.

War-Outlay Exports

War expenditures, however, also continue to advance at an equally rapid rate. For the past month they were $19,233,943, as compared with $6,815,774 for December, 1914. For the nine months of the fiscal year war expenditure totals $85,748,898.

The net debt of the Dominion now stands at over half a billion, $515,000,000. This is an increase of $13,475,851 for December, and an increase of $129,000,000 for the year. Temporary loans amount to $179,000,000. Dominion notes outstanding total $171,000,000, an increase of $8,000,000 as compared with a year ago.

Within the Military Circle

An attempt will be made by the 93rd Battalion of Peterborough to raise 500 men in three days. The city will be divided into eight districts with a platoon assigned to each. It will thus be possible to reach every young man fit for military duty.

It is the general opinion among officers that the Militia Department will eventually make it compulsory for civilians wishing to become officers to qualify first as N.C.O's before taking the officer's training course.

A., Waring, M.R., Wilder, L., Warren, A., Young, J. F.

Seventeen recruits from Picton reported for duty this morning with the 155th Battalion.

Lieut. Wills, of the 155th Battalion, secured eleven recruits in Marlbank.

The 155th Battalion enrolled several recruits from Belleville this morning.

Sergt.-Instructor Dow gave the men of the 155th Battalion physical drill this morning. Beginning Monday, every officer and every man will turn out at 6.15 a.m. every day for physical drill.

Yesterday was pay day for the 155th Battalion. This has a telling effect on the men as it puts them in good humor.

Col. Adams, the popular commander of the 155th Battalion, who was suffering with an attack of la grippe, is very much better and will leave the hospital this afternoon.

Ptes. Lynch and Dillabough of the 80th Battalion have been admitted to the Napanee hospital.

Ptes. Duncan and Hamell of the 80th Battalion have been admitted to the Belleville Hospital.

Cpls. Morreau and Drysdale have been discharged from the Napanee hospital.

Lt.-Col. Ketcheson, Commanding Officer of the 80th Battalion, extends an invitation to the citizens of Belleville to attend the church services held at 10.15 a.m. in the Armouries. The service lasts only half an hour, so that it does not interfere with the regular church service. The 80th Battalion brass band will be present under the leadership of Lieut. Stares. The band will makes its first public appearance to-morrow and some good music is assured, the band being very complete and up-to-date.

Lieut. Stares will sing at the evening service to-morrow night at the Tabernacle Methodist church.

Lieut. Hudgins, who played with the Picton team here last night, belongs to the 80th Battalion. He brought with him about fifteen rooters from his company.

Twenty recruits for the 80th Battalion will arrive this evening from Ottawa on the 5.30 C.N.R. train. The bugle band of the 80th will turn out and escort them to the barracks.

Fifty more men are needed to complete the ranks of the 80th Battalion.

Capt. for week ending Sunday, Jan. 23rd, 1916, Capt. P. K. Ketcheson.

Bn. Orderly Officer for today, Lt. A. C. Trousdale, for tomorroy, Lt. B. S. Robertson.

Bn. Orderly Sergt for today, Cpl. Vance, B. Co.; for tomorrow, Cpl. Eneskia, B. Co.

Bn. Orderly Corpl for today, Cpl. McInnes,, B. Co.; for tomorrow, Cpl. Brown, B. Co.

All troops of the Protestant faith will be formed up on the Parade Grounds at 9.10 a.m. sharp, to attend Divine Service to be held at the Armouries at 9.30 a.m.

Roman Catholics will be formed up on the Parade Grounds at 10 a.m. sharp to attend Divine Service at St. Michael's Church.

Harold Magee, of this city, has enlisted for overseas service with the 80th Battalion in Belleville—Brockville Recorder.

National Fund Is Wise Course

Some Western Provinces Unable to Meet Demands in Full

ONTARIO DOING WELL

Contributions to Patriotic Fund Much in Excess of Outlay

OTTAWA, Jan. 14.—(Special)—The following provincial analysis of the receipts and expenditure of the Canadian Patriotic Fund for the period ending Dec. 31 illustrates the advantage of relegating to a national fund the responsibility of maintaining the wives and children of the Canadian soldiers. In certain parts of the country a little hostility was shown during the early months of the war to the national undertaking, the desire for local autonomy leading citizens of certain towns to prefer to retain control of their own funds.

This attitude is now practically non-existent. Had it been general, a glance at the attached list will show that while more than ample provision would have been made to soldiers' families in eastern Canada, they would have had a hard time in certain of the western provinces. The national patriotic fund, however, insures the soldiers' families against want, no matter what local conditions may be.

CAVELL'S DENOUNCER DIES

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A despatch to the Daily Express from Amsterdam says: "The Belgian spy, Cele, who denounced Edith Cavell, the English nurse, who was executed at Brussels some time ago, to the Germans, was assassinated yesterday. His body was found in a street of Schaerbeck, near Brussels, with two bullet wounds in it."

A despatch from Brussels Nov. 27 last said that a French soldier, whose confession to the German authorities resulted in the arrest and execution of Miss Cavell, had committed suicide by hanging in the military prison at Brussels.

SUFFERING FROM SHOCK

Mr. Frederick Slater, of this city, this morning received the following telegram which refers to his son, who enlisted with the Queen's Own Rifles at Toronto:

Ottawa, Jan. 14th.

Frederick Slater, Belleville.

Sincerely regret to inform you, 9370 Sergt. Frederick Edgar Slater, 3rd Battalion, officially reported admitted to No. 2 Canadian Field Ambulance January 1st, suffering from shock. Will send further particulars when received.

Adjutant-General.

Cosgrove Awarded Military Cross

OTTAWA, Jan. 14. — (Special)—Lieut. John R. Cosgrove, 1st Field Company, Canadian Engineers, has been awarded the military cross for conspicuous gallantry and ability near the Wulverghem-Messines road on the night of Oct. 20. The official intimation says: "He prepared for demolition and completely destroyed a house about 300 yards in advance of our firing line. This house had been an enemy advance post."

Finger Amputated

Mr. Geo. Conneybeare, William St., Lindsay, a member of the Grand Trunk bridge gang, under Supt. Kearns, met with a serious accident yesterday near Midland. It appears that his right hand got badly jammed in some manner. On returning to Lindsay Dr. White, G.T.R. physician, found it necessary to amputate the second finger of the right hand.

CAMPBELLFORD MAN WOUNDED

Corp. Edmond C. Weston, of Campbellford, is reported wounded in last night's casualties list.

DRILLING INDULGED IN

At the Armouries last night, there was a good turnout of the members of the reserve of the 15th regiment and drill was indulged in for some time.

AUTO DISABLED

An automobile party from Tweed, who were in the city last evening attending the hockey match, upon returning home, met with an accident. At O'Brien's bridge, near Thrasher's corners, which is being repaired, the auto struck some heavy timber with the result that the car was damaged to such an extent that it was impossible to proceed with in. Fortunately none of the occupants of the car were injured to any great extent.

DEATH OF FORMER BELLEVILLE BOY

A message was received yesterday by Mr. Sylvester Lane, of Wallbridge, that his cousin, Charles W. Merritt, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who was about 55 years of age, died on Thursday. The late Mr. Merritt was born in the 4th Con. of Sidney, but moved to Belleville with his parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Almond Merritt, when quite young, where he resided for several years. About 30 years ago, he went to Grand Rapids, where he was a successful engineer in the large Phoenix Furniture Factory for many years. For some time his health has been failing him. He leaves to mourn his loss, a widow, one son and four daughters. He has several relatives living in Belleville.

YOUNG FARMER KILLED

On the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, about two and a half miles west of Trenton, a fatal accident occurred last evening, between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock. A young man by the name of Howard Young, was driving a team attached to a vehicle, and as he was attempting to cross the railway track, he was struck by an east bound train. The result was that Young was killed from injuries received about the head, and one of the horses was killed. The accident occurred on a level crossing, near the home of the victim. At this point the G. T. R. and C. P. R. tracks are in close proximity, and the G. T. R. express passed just as Young was driving by. He then drove on to the C. P. R. track, and evidently did not notice the approach of the train which struck him. The injuries he received were of such a nature as to cause almost instant death. The victim resided on the York Road in Murray township. A distressing circumstance in connection with the affair is the fact that Young was about to be married. An inquest will be held.

A FINE PERFORMANCE

At the Griffin Opera House last night, the famous Williamson submarine pictures were presented to a large and appreciative audience. The pictures were fine, and were presented in a manner to be both pleasing and instructive. The pictures were presented under the auspices of the 155th Battalion, of Belleville, and will be repeated this evening. At intervals last night a fine recruiting speech was made by Mr. John Elliott, manager of the Belleville Branch of the Standard Bank, who in his remarks emphasized the necessity there was for young men to enlist. Mrs. A. P. Allen, in her usual sweet and effective manner ,rendered a solo entitled, "What Will You Say," a selection which was received with much approval. Miss Jessie Tuite, the well-known elocutionist of the city, gave a selection in an admirable manner. It was entitled "For Her Daddy's' Sake" and had reference to the war.

This is a sorry time of year for the doctors. Everybody is sick, but only with "little" diseases, which offer no chance for operations.

Belleville Branch Of th Canadian Patriotic Fund

There are still 182 subscribers to this fund now in arrears who have failed to make their payments on the dates promised, including 74 who have not yet paid any portion of the amounts they promised. It is urgently requested that these subscribers meet their obligations before the next appeal to the public is made to provide money for the fund requirements for 1916. This latter step can not be delayed much longer.

The Treasurer begs to acknowledge with thanks the following payments since added to the lists published up to 8th January, 1916.

FOR SPRAINS, LAME MUSCLES

Absorbine, Jr., brings quick relief. Keep it always at hand, for instant use. Athletes use Absorbine, Jr., for the muscle that has been strained for the cut or laceration that runs a chance of infection for the abrasion that pains and the limbs that are stiff and lame from over-exertion.

Walter Johnson, the famous pitcher of the Washington Americans says: "Absorbine, Jr., is a first-class liniment and rub-down for tired muscles. I have used it myself to advantage and can heartily recommend it to ball players everywhere."

Absorbine, Jr., is a concentrated antiseptic liniment—only a few drops required at an application. It is safe and pleasant to use—leaves no greasy residue. Sold by most druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c. in stamps.

The Market

There was a fair attendance upon the market this morning, and whilst considerable produce was offered for sale the prices realized for the same were good. Dairy butter sold readily at 32c. to 35c. per pound, fresh eggs from 38c. to 40c. per dozen; dressed chickens at from $1.00 to $1.50 per pair according to size and quality; geese, $1.75 and $2.00 each, and ducks from $1.50 to $1.75 per pair. Potatoes were a scarce article and commanded good prices, namely $1.80 and $1.90 per bag.

BABY'S BATTLES AGAINST SICKNESS

Can best be fought with Baby's Own Tablets— the little pleasant tasting Tablet that never fails to regulate the stomach and bowels and drive out all minor ills of little ones. Concerning them Mrs. H. Hower, Eastburg, Alta., says:—"I have four healthy children thanks to the use of Baby's Own Tablets. I have been using the Tablets for the past eight years, and think them the best medicine in the world for little ones." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Pte. D. S. McSachern, Pte. I. Garling, Pte. Geo. A. Johnson, Pte. H. S. McEleath, Cpl. L. F. Evans.

Pte. James A. Ledgworth

The first death in the ranks of the 59th Battalion, C.E.F., since coming to Brockville, occurred last night at seven o'clock at the Brockville General Hospital, when Private James Arthur Ledgworth succumbed to an attack of pneumonia, resulting from a heavy cold and la grippe. The late Pte. Ledgworth was twenty eyars old, and was born in Belleville, Ont. He enlisted with the 59th at Barriefield Camp on July 17th, 1915, and has been an excellent soldier. His father, George Ledgworth, is also a private in the 59th Battalion, he having enlisted two days after his son. Private Ledgworth's mother resides in Picton, and the body will be sent there tomorrow for internment. The 80th Battalion will provide a firing party.

Armand Lavergne To be Dishonored

(Canadian Press Special)

MONTREAL, Jan. 15.—The Montreal Mail today calls on the Government to cancel Armand Lavergne's commission in the militia. A despatch from St. John, N.B., says the Empire Club has passed a resolution calling on the Government to curb his tongue or cancel his commission. The Garrison Club of Quebec, of which Lavergne is a member, meets today to discuss his status. Meanwhile Lavergne has instructed his lawyer to sue La Presse of Montreal for libel in the statements published yesterday.

The Beginning of a Love Story

By F. A. MITCHEL

Is that a white cloud far up against the blue sky? If so, what means that dotted line? The dots—indeed, the whole line—moves. It is ascending.

No, it is not a cloud; it is the summit of a mountain. Those dots are climbers tied together by a rope. They seem near the top, but that is because they are so far from me. It will be several hours before they reach it.

I came to Chamonix to make the ascent of Mont Blanc. But yesterday I was slightly indisposed, and, if I remember correctly, those in the house in which I am lodged sent for the doctor, who came and said I had a fever My window looks out on the mountain, and I long to regain my strength that I may fulfill the purpose of my coming.

My landlady partly opens my door and peeps through the crack. What means that startled expression on her face? She withdraws hurriedly, and I hear her calling, "Come, quick!"

I am lying in the snow near the summit of the mountain. Beneath me is the valley, beyond which is a succession of mountain peaks. How still is everything! From year to year, from century to century, these mountains revolve with the motion of the earth, a succession of night and day, never interrupted. It is always winter up here; at least there is always snow. I wonder if summer will ever come. Let the earth once be joggled and the inclination of its axis changed—then it may be torrid on these slopes and reptile monsters take the place of the chamois.

A face comes between me and the scene spread out before me. The latter is cold, the former warm; the one merciless, the other full of sympathy. A woman's eyes are looking into mine anxiously.

Singular that I should be lying in the cold snow with this girl looking at me. I shiver, and the anxiety on her face deepens. She takes my hand, but little warmth is imparted. She lays hers on my brow, but I gain no comfort.

I am about to speak to her to ask what this all means when she fades away as figures disappear in moving pictures. Then persons move about me, each one doing something, but the whole to me is an endless confusion But presently the snow under me ceases to be cold, and now there is a slight warmth in my back. The face of the girl again appears before me, like an enlarged faceon a screen, shutting out all else. Something of its previous anxiety is missing. Again it disappears, this time suddenly.

Then the sun shone down on me hot as molten lava. I was experienced in the heat of the sun at great heights, shining through a thin atmosphere, but I had never known anything like this. It seemed as if it were burning out my vitals. Meanwhile the scene about me was changing. I was cold, then hot, but I was not on the mountain. I was nowhere. I simply felt the heat and the cold and did not know which to dread the more.

Now and again that sweet girlish face flitted before me. Sometimes I could see her figure fading, not near by, but at a distance. Others came and went, but I took no notice of them. They were like shadows to me. But she—she was individual and always the same. Her hair and eyes were brown, her face oval, her complexion fair, with a touch of red in her cheeks.

Again I was lying in bed beside my window. There were the mountain and the dotted line where it was before, but now instead of moving upward it was descending. I felt an inexpressible relief from suffering and realized that I had been very ill and was in a state of convalescence. My landlady was standing at a table pouring a liquid from a vial into a glass. She turned and, seeing me looking at her, put down the vial and the glass and came to me.

"What has been the matter?" I asked her.

An expression of relief came over her features as she told me I had been very ill—indeed, was still very ill. I must be quiet and not excite myself.

I soon fell into a slumber, all the while conscious of a restfulness that was delightful. How long I slept I know not, but as soon as I awoke my landlady brought me a bowl of broth. I undertook to feed myself, but was too weak. She gave me a few spoonfuls of the broth, which was all I cared for at the time.

As I grew better I felt a desire to know whether the girl who had appeared to me during what I now realized was delirium was a creature of fancy or flesh and blood. I described her to my landlady, and she said: "She must be the American girl in the next house. The tourists have all been interested in your case, and this young lady came in to see you. She has been of great service."

"Please tell her," I replied, "that I am convalescent and ask her to come to see me, that I may thank her for her attention."

When the girl came I recognized her at once as the object of my dream or whatever it was. She looked at me with a hopeful expression.

"You have been in to see me before," I said. "I am under an obligation to you."

"Not at all," she replied. "But I am surprised that you have been conscious of my presence. You were delirious."

"You took my hand."

She blushed slightly. "I supposed you were not aware of it."

It marked the beginning of a love story, but of the story I shall maintain silence.

Over Century Old.

Martin McDonald, whose home is in the House of Providence, at Kingston, Ont., has just celebrated his 101st Christmas. While he is around every day and enjoys life, his ankle has never recovered fully from a break of several years ago.

England's Great Seal.

The great seal of England is, says the London Chronicle, a more elaborate article than most people imagine. It costs about $3,500 to make it, and it consists of two heavy silver plates, in one of which is cut the die for the front of the seal and in the other that for the back. When the seal is to be affixed to a document a lump of wax is softened in hot water and cooled in cold water, after which it is placed between the two plates and pressed. It comes out in the shape of a disk, with an impression on each side.

Formerly there was an official attached to the seal who was quite as proud of his office as the lord chancellor was of his. That was "Chaffwax," whose sole business was to melt the wax and to take the impressions of the great seal as often as required. The writer remembers the last of the "Chaffwaxes," a rosy cheeked old gentleman who lived long to enjoy the pension that a grateful country granted him for his important services. Those services are now performed by an unnamed subordinate in the chancellor's office.

Letters From Belleville Boys At the Front

Belgium, Dec. 27th, 1915.

Dear Mrs. Brown:—Received your kind remembrance on December 25th, and was more than pleased. I assure you it is a great pleasure to receive anything from home. And to know that we are not forgotten, although so far away. We had a very nice Xmas and then when I received the stocking on Xmas morning, I was more than delighted as it made it look more like Xmas. We are getting along fine, over here. Although the weather is very much against us, as the rainy season has set in. Although this country is noted for that especially at this time of the year. Thanking you again for the kind remembrance, and wishing you a bright and prosperous New Year,

I remain,
Yours truly,
F. H. GILLETT.

The following letter was yesterday received by Mrs. Robt. Anderson, 43 Hillside Street, this city. The socks referred to were sent by the R. T. of T. knitting circle in a bale to Miss Ridley last October.

Ward A-4,
No. 2 Can. Stationary Hospital,
Boulogne, France, Dec. 28.

Dear Madam,—I am writing to thank you for the two pairs of socks I received lately, one of which contained the letter you sent. I can assure you that home knitted socks are very much appreciated by us. One pair of them outlast three of army issue, besides being warmer. I see your letter was written on Oct. 15th. We all spent a very enjoyable Christmas in the hospital. I am pleased to say that I expect to be returning to duty in a very few days now, as I am almost well again. No, we do not have to pay for socks sent from Canada. I expect you have lots of snow around Belleville now, cold too.

I joined in Vancouver, but I have been in Belleville. I will close now, wishing you a Happy New Year, although the new year will be nearly a month old by the time you get this.

Yours truly,
SAPPER C. S. ARKELL.

A Complete Breakdown After La Grippe

IT LEAVES THE SUFFERER A VICTIM OF MANY FORMS OF WEAKNESS

Ask those who have had la grippe regarding the present condition of their health and most of them will answer "Since I had the grip I have never been well." There is a persistent weakness of the limbs, bad digestion, shortness of breath and papitation of the heart caused by the thin-blooded condition in which grip almost always leaves its victims after the fever and influenza have subsided. They are at the mercy of relapses and complications, often very serious. This condition will continue until the blood is built up again, and for this purpose nothing can equal a fair treatment with Dr. Williams Pink Pills, which quickly make the blood rich and red, drive the lingering germs from the system and transform despondent grip victims into cheerful, healthy, happy men and women. Mr. John Battersby, London, Ont., says:—"Just before Christmas, 1914, I was taken down with an attack of la grippe, and the trouble left me in a deplorable condition. I was almost too weak to walk about, as I was then working on a farm in Western Ontario, I was quite unable to follow my usual work. I tried several kinds of medicine, but it did not help me. As a matter of fact I felt steadily growing weaker, and in this condition, when reading a paper, I saw Dr. Williams Pink Pills advertised and decided to try them. I got a supply and by the time the second box was finished I felt considerably better, and after continuing the pills for some time longer I felt better than I had done for months. This was my first experience with Dr. Williams Pink Pills, but you may depend upon it that if I find medicine necessary again I will know just what to take."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Hot Breads Not Injurious

When made from a non-starchy, granulated flour, like Dr. Jackson's Roman meal. Make your pancakes gems, muffins, gingerbread, steam puddings, bread, or anything in household baking from it by using one-third and two-thirds Roman Meal. Eat hot from the oven if desired. May safely feed to a babe. Their granular, non-sticky character allows digestive juices to permeate and entire mass digests at once.

All Roman Meal baking is delicious, nourishes better than meat, prevents indigestion, and positively relieves constipation, or "money back." Ask your doctor. All grocers,' 10c. and 25c. package.

Made by Roman Meal Co., Toronto.

GRIP AND PNEUMONIA

Comment on the Recent Epidemics and Their Causes

What is the relations between the two diseases? Dr. Emerson, commissioner of health in New York, has lately advanced the theory that the epidemic which is sweeping the country is not our old acquaintance, the influenza or grip, but a product of the pneumo-coccus or germ of pneumonia. Other authorities have declared that the grip shows itself in four or more very different forms, according as it attacks, throat, lungs, nerves, digestive tract, etc. Which view is correct? Does one disease take such protean forms, or is the peculiar character ascribed to this year's visitation, including a tendency to pneumonia, due to the fact that the pneumo-coccus is specially prevalent?

The theory advanced by Dr. Emerson is interesting, but the argument by which he supports it is not entirely convincing. He says:

With the beginning of winter comes a social whirl. In the holiday season people drink more alcohol. They are more frequently in tightly-packed theatres and stuffy restaurants, moving picture shows and other places. They get less rest and sleep. Consequently there is a certain breaking down of resistance and conditions favorable to passing germs from one person to another. The epidemic is the result.

If it is as simple as all that, why is it a quarter of a century or so between epidemics? Are people living with less regard for hygiene than in any year since 1890. If the social whirl gets more whirlier year by year, why does not the danse macabre of the pneumococcus keep step? Dr. Emerson's explanation raises more questions than it answers. One of the mysteries of epidemics, still to be solved, is the variation of virulence. Why is the bacillus most ferocious at the height of a plague and at the point where the disease is most prevalent? Why do individual cases diminish in severity as the epidemic declines? Is the change in the disease or in the population? Are the germs less active, or are those attacked more resistant? Epidemics present curious phenomena which are more apparent in tables of statistics than in the laboratory, which deals with causes and on a microscopic scale, whereas in the hospitals the effects are writ large.

Whatever the relations between grip and pneumonia, the increased death this winter is a reminder that pneumonia is one of the greatest perils that beset the elderly and even those in the prime of strength who neglect elementary precautions. Are people nowadays as careful as their grandfathers? "You'll catch your death o' cold" was the warning of accumulated experience which needed no scientific foundation. Science, indeed, has become a little less confident. When it began to learn about bacteria it became prematurely convinced that its knowledge was inadequate. It regarded pneumonia as a product of scientific exposure like smallpox or scarlet fever, and scouted the popular notion that a "cold" could develop it. More is known now or the great prevalence of the pneumo-coccus and the conditions under which it may break through Nature's defences, but perhaps the defence of vigilance and fear of the unknown has been relaxed.

People are not so much afraid of "night air" as they used to be, and this is clear gain. But on the other hand it may be that they have lost something of the prudence which used to be passed on from generation to generation. In the new confidence in the beneficence of Nature which easy and comfortable artificial surroundings produce, they may have forgotten that Nature may be treacherous. In their homes people are less fortified by the hardships of winter than in the old days of open fires, drafty rooms and icy bed chambers. At the same time they venture about with fewer precautions.

Most cases of pneumonia can be traced to a particular cause—exposure to could coupled with a condition of low vitality. This condition may either result from age or general feebleness, or from fatigue such as comes from overwork, overstrain, dissipation, loss of sleep, or worry. The strong should learn to be watchful for such bad hours when the enemy can break through the defences—their great peril lies in their general immunity, and in their scorn for valetudinarian precautions. The infirm and elderly need a more constant vigilance, directed on the one hand to building up resisting power, and on the other hand to avoidance of unaccustomed exposure. They do well to avoid unnecessary winter travel, and when they journey to be well provided with wraps. On the other hand over-precaution defeats its end by producing tenderness. Safety lies in habitual but moderate exposure and avoidance of unusual risks, and in both respects our easy modern life has its perils. For one used to limousines or heated trolley cars and to the even temperature of the modern city house, to be caught in a blizzard or sudden cold wave is a serious matter. At 50, says the old adage, a man is either a fool or a physician; in dealing with the pneumo-coccus he does well to play the part of physician.

HOW FAT FOLKS MAY BECOME THIN

By Elizabeth Thomas

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same—lack of oxygen-carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of orilene capsules. Take one after each meal and one before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how fast you are losing weight. Wonderful results have been accomplished by this inexpensive recipe, but be sure to get the genuine oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co. Box 1,240 Montreal, Can.

DEATH ROLL

ISAAC ROBINSON

At an early hour this morning, Mr. Isaac N. Robinson, a yeoman, residing in the Township of Tyendinaga, passed away after being ill for some time. Deceased in the year 1849 was born in Tyendinaga and had lived there all his life. He was well known and much respected in the vicinity in which he resided. Mr. Robinson was a member of Shannonville Lodge, A. O. U. W. and in religion was a Methodist. A widow, two sons and two daughters survive. The sons are Frederick of Tyendinaga, and Clement of Roblin, Man. The daughters are Mrs. H. E. Farnsworth, of Toronto and Mrs. R. McLaren, of Melrose, Tyendinaga township. Mr. W. B. Robinson, of Belleville, is a brother of the deceased.

MRS. CHARLES GIBSON

The death occurred at Peterboro, on Thursday evening of Mrs. Eleanor Gibson, wife of Mr. Charles Gibson, of that city. Deceased who was 48 years of age, was a daughter of Mr. James Falconer, of Belleville. Deceased had been in poor health for many years, and was removed last Friday to the Nicholls Hospital, Peterboro, with pneumonia, which proved fatal. She leaves to mourn her loss, besides her husband, her aged mother, one sister, Mrs. C. Delisle, who resides in this city, and another sister, Mrs. Robinson, who lives in Carmen, Man. There are three sons and one daughter. Her eldest son, Pte. W. F. Gibson, of the 2nd Battalion, C. E. F., was killed at the battle of St. Julien, and another son, James, who is in England, a member of the 48th Highlanders. The remains will be brought to this city for interment.

O'BRIEN'S BRIDGE

Lest silence may be interpreted as indifference on my part to the subject that is giving so many people great trouble and inconvenience too, I solicit space for a word. This bridge has given the County Council great concern and expense in the past, chiefly because of the difficulty in securing a firm foundation. When the matter came up last year it was quite unanimously resolved to tinker no longer but to secure the best foundation possible. W. A. McLean, Esq., Provincial Engineer of the Government of Ontario, a gentleman of the highest ability, was consulted, and the plan advised by him is being, I understand, carried out. Rumors that all was not going right were circulated last autumn, but until the day of our municipal nominations very little was heard. On that day very direct charges were made, among which were the following:

That Mr. McLean's opinion was secured by false representations.

That waste of time, of fuel, and other materials marked the job from beginning to end.

That timber was taken in large quantities from the bridge without the knowledge or permission of the committee and used at a job in which the county has no concern.

That cement in large quantities was, long before needed, delivered upon the scene of operations without the knowledge or order of the committee, and that said cement had hardened, and had thus become entirely useless.

That men had not worked for several of the days for which they had been paid.
